Here in one of Chicago's most beautiful theaters, the Wurlitzer Organ demonstrates its superiority as the subtle interpreter of the human emotions. Every scene pictured is intensified by the music which issues from this mighty instrument—soft and plaintive, twinkling and gay, or thunderous and majestic, as the occasion may require. The variety of expression and the easy responsiveness of the Wurlitzer is unrivaled.

Let your increased box-office receipts prove to you the value of Wurlitzer music in your theatre

ROXY THEATRE NEW YORK, WORLD'S FINEST MOTION PICTURE THEATRE

From the Film Daily

"The ROXY will change the amusement map. We predict it. Exhibitors throughout the country might well watch its course. This is why: There's a tremendous investment at stake. Roxy will not book junk. He can't afford to. For that reason any picture that the Roxy books, whether feature or short, can be assumed to carry box-office merit.

"The distributors who make the grade and play the Roxy have a powerful selling point for use all over the country. Here are no entangling alliances. There is no producer-Distributor control. The theatre books independently. It contracts for what it wants. Quality is the requirement."

---ENTHUSIASM

No worth while success is ever achieved without enthusiasm. The finest theatre in the world would be a "flop" without it. No studio could hope to produce good pictures without it.

Enthusiasm is contagious. The exhibitor's keener interest in good short features, so evident everywhere, is reflecting itself in the studios. The result, as it will affect your box-office, is obvious.

I have just returned from Los Angeles, where the Educational Studios will soon be in full swing on their 1927-1928 comedy schedule. Educational has always been an organization of young men, with the enthusiasm of youth backed by experience. But I have never seen a more inspiring display of enthusiasm and confidence anywhere than was given by stars, directors and the whole studio staff. After seven years of steady progress they are determined to make 1927-1928 their biggest year. And they'll do it, to the profit of the thousands of exhibitors who always rely on Educational for the spice of their programs.

The Roxy Lesson

THERE are those who will argue that Broadway is a special case all by itself, so that its box-office performances do not mean much one way or the other.

Perhaps they don't in some instances where an entirely artificial situation is cooked up for ballyhoo purposes elsewhere. But when a great new theatre opens, it ought to be interesting, we should think, to all exhibitors to hear what happened to the existing houses, even if they are on Broadway.

Sufficient time has now elapsed since the opening of the Roxy to form an estimate of its effect on the street as a whole. A lot of people figured, prior to the premiere, that the advent of the Roxy would not cut much ice. But the other Broadway houses braced themselves for the shock, elaborated their shows, made additions to personnel, and indicated in several other ways that they were ready for the competition.

In its first week, the Roxy grossed approximately $127,000 out of a total of about $500,000 for all picture Broadway, counting road-shows at legitimate theatres, as well as the regular film houses.

At the same time, careful figuring shows that every theatre, except one, fell off at the box-office, the total drop for all being around $20,000 compared with the week prior to the Roxy opening. The one theatre that did not drop showed, instead, a gain.

Of course, a good many factors have to be considered in the box-office gross problem. Show quality is one. Just now Lent is another. It is therefore entirely logical from one angle, to say that the drop might have occurred anyhow.

This, however, does not seem to be the consensus of opinion among the observers along Broadway. The Roxy is figured as offering a unique form of competition, and with a huge seating capacity as one of its big box office weapons. With an unusually good picture, the Roxy, according to the observers is going to create a very interesting situation for everybody.

In any event, the Broadway situation is well worth watching, because it will indicate just what may be expected in the case of the individual showman, with a great theatre, versus circuit competitors.

And of one thing we may be sure: the magnificent new theatres call loudly to the studios for consistent, quality pictures.

THE feature in this week's issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS is which appears each month within the covers of THE NEWS and thus is of maximum permanent value to exhibitor and advertiser.

The Showman is a decided innovation in the trade paper field, covering the complete theatre — equipment and show; the architect equally with the exploitation man.

The Week in Review

Comment on Passing Affairs

THE German director, F. W. Murnau, who has finished one picture here for Fox, and is returning to Germany to complete an old contract before coming back to America, gave a sensible talk at a luncheon in his honor at the Ritz-Carlton on Wednesday. His remarks are worth quoting from:

"Seven months ago I came here almost a stranger. I had sent ahead of me an ambassador in the form of a motion picture called 'The Last Laugh.' You were kind enough to be hospitable to this ambassador, but the hospitality I have found during my stay here in your country is something far beyond my expectations. First New York, then San Francisco, then Los Angeles, and Hollywood—you all greeted me as one of your own. I have been treated so wonderfully that now as I am going to leave, I am already beginning to feel homesick for America.

"I liked and highly appreciated the spirit of friendship with which everybody who worked in my unit stood at my side, always willing to give his best, always willing to help me. In this way they all created an atmosphere of harmony in which even the hardest work became a pleasure. That is the only atmosphere in which art can grow.

"THERE is one subject I would like to talk to you about, that is the interesting camera angle in pictures. You cannot open a newspaper or a magazine dealing with the screen without reading about it, you cannot start a conversation about the movies among your friends without hearing it again and again. Interesting camera angles: It seems to be the most used—I think also the most abused term in pictures—talking, reading, and producing.

"Such a thing as an interesting camera angle should not exist. By itself an interesting camera angle does not mean a thing. If it does not help to intensify the dramatic action of the scene it is not only useless, it is dangerous; because instead of helping the dramatic action, it detracts from it.

"But what should the camera angle be if not interesting? It should— be dramatic, that is to say a camera angle that helps to intensify the dramatic angle of the scene. If you use the phrase 'interesting camera angle,' it implies an adverse criticism, while the phrase 'dramatic camera angle' conveys high praise. This subject certainly brings to your mind the foreign director, for it is in connection with him that it is usually mentioned.

"WHEN we talk of art we cannot talk of countries. An artist really cannot be classified by nationality. He is international and the thing which he creates is international. Some publications dedicated to sensationalism in pictures have referred to the 'foreign invasion' in the film world. How can there be a foreign invasion in art? You would not differentiate between Kreisler and Spaulding because one is a European and the other an American. Both are great violinists. There are no border lines in art. We, in Germany, would be proud to have a motion picture industry so large as to attract the greatest directors this side of the Atlantic Ocean to show their art in competition with our own. In art, like in every other form of creation, the best work is obtained through competition."

"SLIDE, KELLY, SLIDE," M-G-M's new offering at the Embassy, New York, is a fine box-office attraction for the regular picture theatre. With the baseball season just in the offing, this picture shapes up as a seasonable hit. It goes right out to the exhibitor, we understand.

The work of William Haines, as a "smart aleck" rookie, is very fine, and the support, including Harry Carey, Warner Richmond, Sally O'Neil and Junior Coghlan is topnotch. While the story is carried chiefly by the baseball atmosphere, there is a good romance and a touch of heart interest.

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

Lighting Progress

ANOTHER company to fall in line with the new developments in studio lighting is Warner Bros., where a practical test of incandescent lighting and panchromatic film is being made with such favorable results that rapid expansion of the method may be expected. It is being used on one production, in which Irene Rich appears, under the supervision of Frank Murphy, chief engineer, and Dave Abel, cinematographer.

In addition to important economy features, the method virtually eliminates the need for make-up, and lessens the chances of klieg eyes in a large measure.

Another studio innovation on the Coast is the use of a phonograph with electrical amplification at the Metropolitan Studio to furnish music during the taking of scenes. This was done with some little success by Allan Dwan at the Fox Eastern studios.

Cohn Seeks Talent

HARRY COHN, Vice-President of Columbia in charge of production, in New York for a few weeks, is looking for "new faces"—two boys and two girls—to take to the Coast for development. He wants a clean-cut American type, which he believes will be the vogue this coming year. They will be started in small parts and advanced as rapidly as their development warrants, and no faster. This was the course followed by Mr. Cohn with Dorothy Revier, whom he discovered and developed into a distinct box-office asset.

He reveals an interesting angle in connection with "The Blood Ship," the first large scale special to be made by Columbia, which he will start on his return. In spite of the success of Hobart Bosworth in "The Sea Wolf," "Below the Surface" and "Be

Clara Bow, Paramount star, was awarded a trophy by the Wampas at the annual frolic as the 1924 baby star who had attained the greatest success, but as she was ill it was presented at her home. She is now working in "Rough House Rosie"

Colvin W. Brown, vice-president of F.B.O. in charge of foreign distribution, arrives in New York with Mrs. Brown after a three months' stay abroad

They all come back. Betty Blythe went abroad two years ago, appearing in numerous productions in England and France, and is returning to the American screen

Joan Crawford, whose rapid rise with M-G-M reads like a film romance, appears with considerable success in "The Taxi Dancer." "The Unknown" will be next.

"Quarantined Rivals," a Gotham production of the George Randolph Chester comedy, has been cast with unusual care as to type and ability. Here are the principal players in the piece; reading across from left to right: Ray Haller, Kathleen Collins, Bobby Agnew, Veora Daniels, Big Boy Williams, Clarissa Selwynne and John Miljan hind the Door," he has never been given a chance since at the sort of thing which is so obviously his forte. Some time ago he purchased "The Blood Ship" to make sure that no one else got it, and bided his time until he could find a producer with his faith in it. He found that in Harry Cohn, who took Bosworth and the story together, and is convinced the picture will be a "natural."

Studio in Garden of Alla

ONE of the Spanish villas at The Garden of Alla, Hollywood's new hotel, which has replaced the former homesite of Nazimova, has been engaged by Irving Chidnoff, celebrated photographer of stage and screen luminaries of New York.

The artist, who arrived in Hollywood on March 7, will make photographic studies of prominent personalities of the screen whose careers have contributed in the making of motion picture history. These will illustrate a book to be published by Bookart, which will commemorate the thirtieth anniversary of the screen. Upon completion of his assignment, Chidnoff will return East to resume his regular work.

Al Christie was the first to "look pleasant," The next scheduled to face the still lens are Norma and Constance Talmadge, Buster Keaton, Blanche Sweet, and two representatives of old Vitagraph days, Florence Turner and Maurice Costello.

At The Garden of Alla are a score of guests affiliated with motion pictures, including Dorothy Farnum, Laura LaPlante and William Seiter, Beulah Livingstone, Lillian Gale, erstwhile M. P. NEWS scribe, and the dining-room has become a popular rendezvous for motion picture gatherings.

"Resurrection" Opens

THERE has been no little speculation in the trade as to the sort of picture which Edwin Carewe would make from Tolstoy's "Resurrection." On Thursday of last week it was shown for the first time at the Rialto Theatre, Newark, N.J., with Mr. Carewe as a guest of honor.

For years Carewe dreamed of this picture, and at last, he found in Walter Camp, Jr., and Joseph M. Schenck, men of sufficient faith in him and in it to furnish the finances and the release. Their faith has not been misplaced. What a picture! Carewe has made of it a great love story, much of it laid at a time prior to the opening of the novel, but he has retained the spirit of Tolstoy amazingly.

The National Board of Review this week awarded its only asterisk to "Resurrection." If this picture doesn't make Dolores del Rio a star, we give up.

Youth Will Prevail

TWELVE years ago a youth named Nat Nathanson left school to battle for recognition in the business world and, like a good many others, chose the film business.

While many who have chosen the same vocation have faded out of the picture, Nat entered the foreign sales end of the business and, starting with a one-man company, he has built up one of the most extensive organizations. He is selling film in every corner of the globe, and is president of Hi-Mark.

A short time ago, Nat decided to produce and distribute in this country such pictures that he felt would be in demand. First he secured the Steve Donoghue two-reel racing stories, then he acquired fourteen two-reel comedies featuring the young comedian, George Bunny. Nat further arranged for the production of twelve two-reel offerings, a series of college sports in story form. The first is called "The Sophomore," followed by "Pigskin," "Taking the Air," "Diamond Delirium," "Links and Ladies," "Frats and Frills," "The Cinder Track," "A Freshman's Folly," "Whirling Wheels," "Fencing and Fancying," "Brawn and Blades" and "Hazed and Hushed."

Marylin Mills was next to be signed and this young lady has more than made good in her feature, "The Love of Paquita," with her two horses, "El Diablo" and "Bonita."

Jenner Visits New York

SOMETHING new in feature comedy production methods is being introduced in Harry Langdon comedies, according to William H. Jenner, general manager of the Harry Langdon Corporation, who arrived in New York City last week for a brief visit before returning to production activities on the West Coast.

Speaking of the completed negative of Langdon's latest picture, "Long Pants," which will go into the New York Strand April 1st, Mr. Jenner said, "The comedy, in most all cases, has been typically a man's picture. Checking up has shown that the male member of the family reacts more favorably. What we propose to do is not only please the man, but to also please the women by weaving in a certain number of romantic and melodramatic situations. We have done this in 'Long Pants,' and at its preview at the Wilshire Theatre, a house in Hollywood claiming to have the 'toughest' audience in that section, exactly 183 real honest-to-goodness laughs were recorded on the 'laughmeter'."

Johnny Previews One

JOHNNY HINES' latest picture, "All Aboard," was previewed at the Bunny Theatre, Broadway at 147th Street, New York City, the other night under the personal supervision of his emissary, Mr. Herbert Q. Crooker. We had a particular interest in this, because Matt Taylor, who wrote the story, is an M. P. NEWS alumnus and Pete Milne, who did the titles, is another. "All Aboard" marks a new departure for Johnny, in that he develops a distinct character in it, more or less consistently maintained throughout, making a more sympathetic and cohesive story.

Passing Through Gotham

CORINNE GRIFFITH, newest addition to the ranks of independent producers for United Artists, left New York City for Hollywood Thursday, to select a director and leading man for "The Garden of Eden," her first production for United Artists. Miss Griffith and her husband, Walter Morosco, arrived in New York Tuesday, March 15, after a three months' tour of European countries. Mr. Morosco preceded his wife to California by several days.

Dix Departs

RICHARD DIX, who remained in New York long enough to assist Julian Johnson and John W. Conway with the editing and titling of his latest Paramount picture, "Knockout Reilly," has seen this work satisfactorily completed and the film turned over to the laboratory, so this week he departed for Hollywood, where his next starring vehicle will be produced.

Pictorial Review of Theatres.

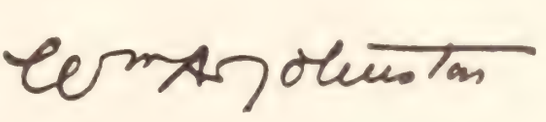
The Kind of Publicity that Builds Goodwill.

Viewing a Premiere from the Booth.

How Movietone Pictures are Made.

THE picture theatre today draws upon many crafts and arts for its equipment and appeal. Fine architecture is an ally. Music from massive organ and big orchestra is another. Back-stage, it commands the most elaborate systems of lights in existence. The very air of the house itself is conditioned for the audience.

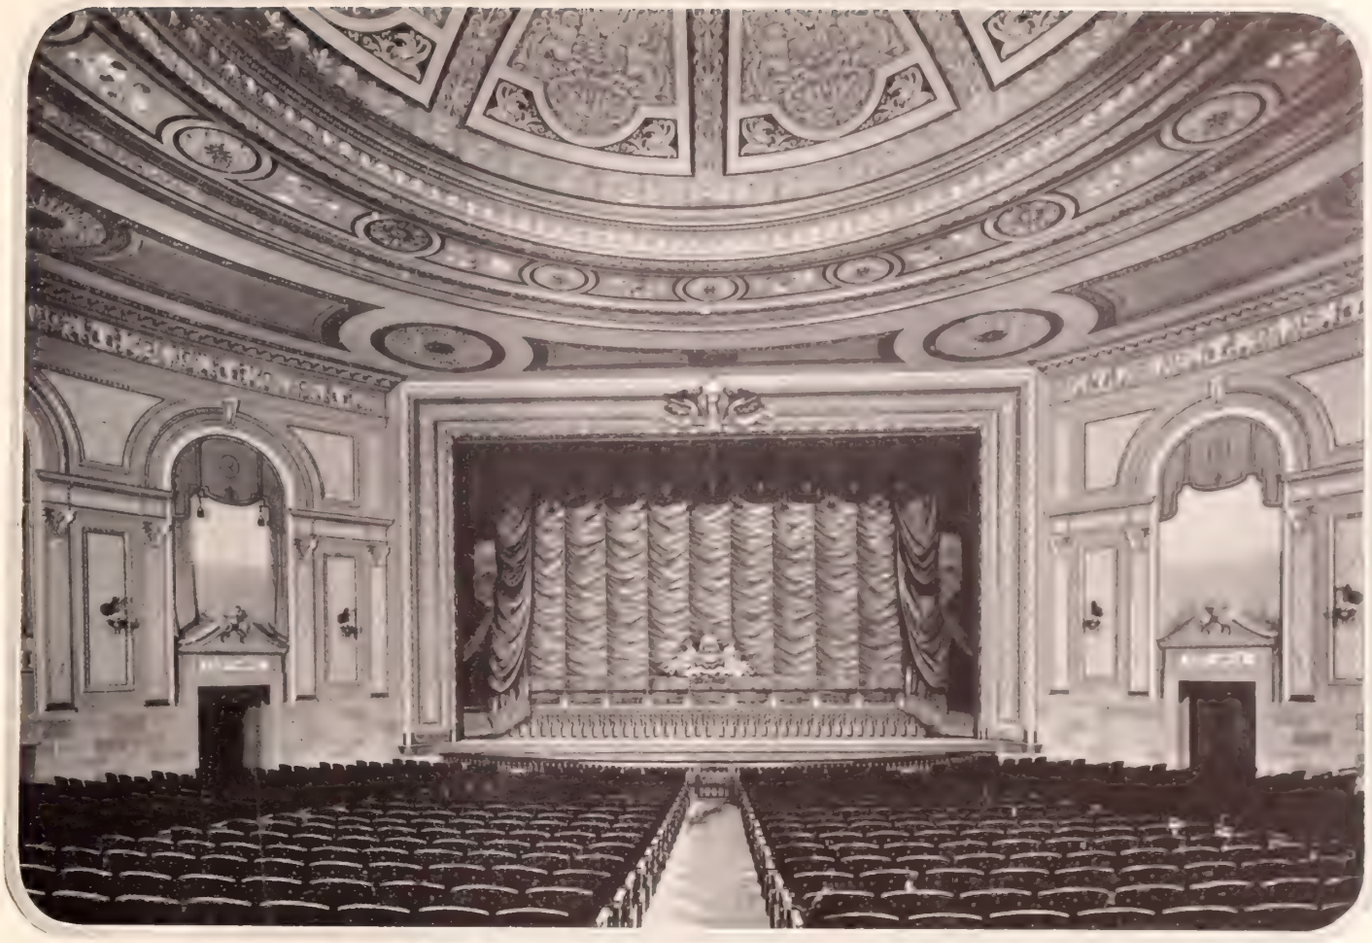


And all these things contribute definitely to the one single pleasing effect on the patron—and thus become part, almost, of the show itself.

Theatre equipment, as it is handled in the modern picture palace, has been turned into what is virtually a human agent playing its role in the theatre picture.

On the practical side, the great new theatres are calling forth the best efforts of equipment manufacturers and distributors. In the distribution field, big changes have come about in the last two years. Modern business practices, with improved service to exhibitors and good credit standing of distributors with manufacturers are the rule.

New and improved apparatus is constantly required. It is evident that, with sound distribution and the increase in building of theatres each year, the equipment field is broadening all the time.



In the theatre, the show's the thing. The picture house does not put all its show on stage or screen. That's the main attraction, of course. But the whole theatre, nowadays, is the show, too. And in this age of mechanical wonders, the theatre calls to the equipment world for whatever contributes to the comfort or delight of its patrons.

A CANADA CIRCUIT BUILDS ITS MODEL THEATRE

Rivoli In Montreal Embodies Beauty and Efficiency

THE opening of the Moulin Rouge Theatre in Montreal, Quebec, in the autumn of 1908 marked the commencement of the United Amusement Corporation, Limited, Montreal. In 1912 the company opened its second theatre, the Strand, in Montreal, and this was followed by the Regent Theatre which was completed in April, 1916. The next theatre to be built was the Papineau, which was opened in April, 1921. Then, during recent years, the company opened the Belmont, the Plaza, the Westmount and Corona, which were purchased by the corporation, the Mount Royal, the Rialto and then the Amherst, which was purchased. And recently the handsome Rivoli Theatre was opened by United Amusement Corporation, making the eleventh of a chain of substantial moving picture houses for Montreal and suburbs, all under the general management of George Nicholas Ganetakos, who is managing director of this interesting enterprise.

The Rivoli, which is in the North End of the city of Montreal, stands as the culmination of the years of experience which the company has gained. It has 1,531 seats and it is a theatre of about this size that the company has found best suited for community success. All but 144 of these seats are on the one main floor, the small balance being located on a "shelf balcony" which serves the purpose of a support for the large projection room.

A distinct feature of the Rivoli Theatre is that it has exposed plumbing and exposed electric conduits in a concrete tunnel extending the whole length of the building under the main floor. If any trouble should occur in either the electric service or the water, it is a simple matter to trace either of the services to the point where they enter the structure.

Another modern feature of the Rivoli is that it is heated by oil. The projection room is the model of Romeo Vandette, the projection engineer of the United Amusement Corp.

The proscenium width is 45 feet and the stage depth is 22 feet, to provide for special presentations. Incidentally, the building frontage is 92 feet, cosy stores being found on each side of the entrance. The building depth is 130 feet.

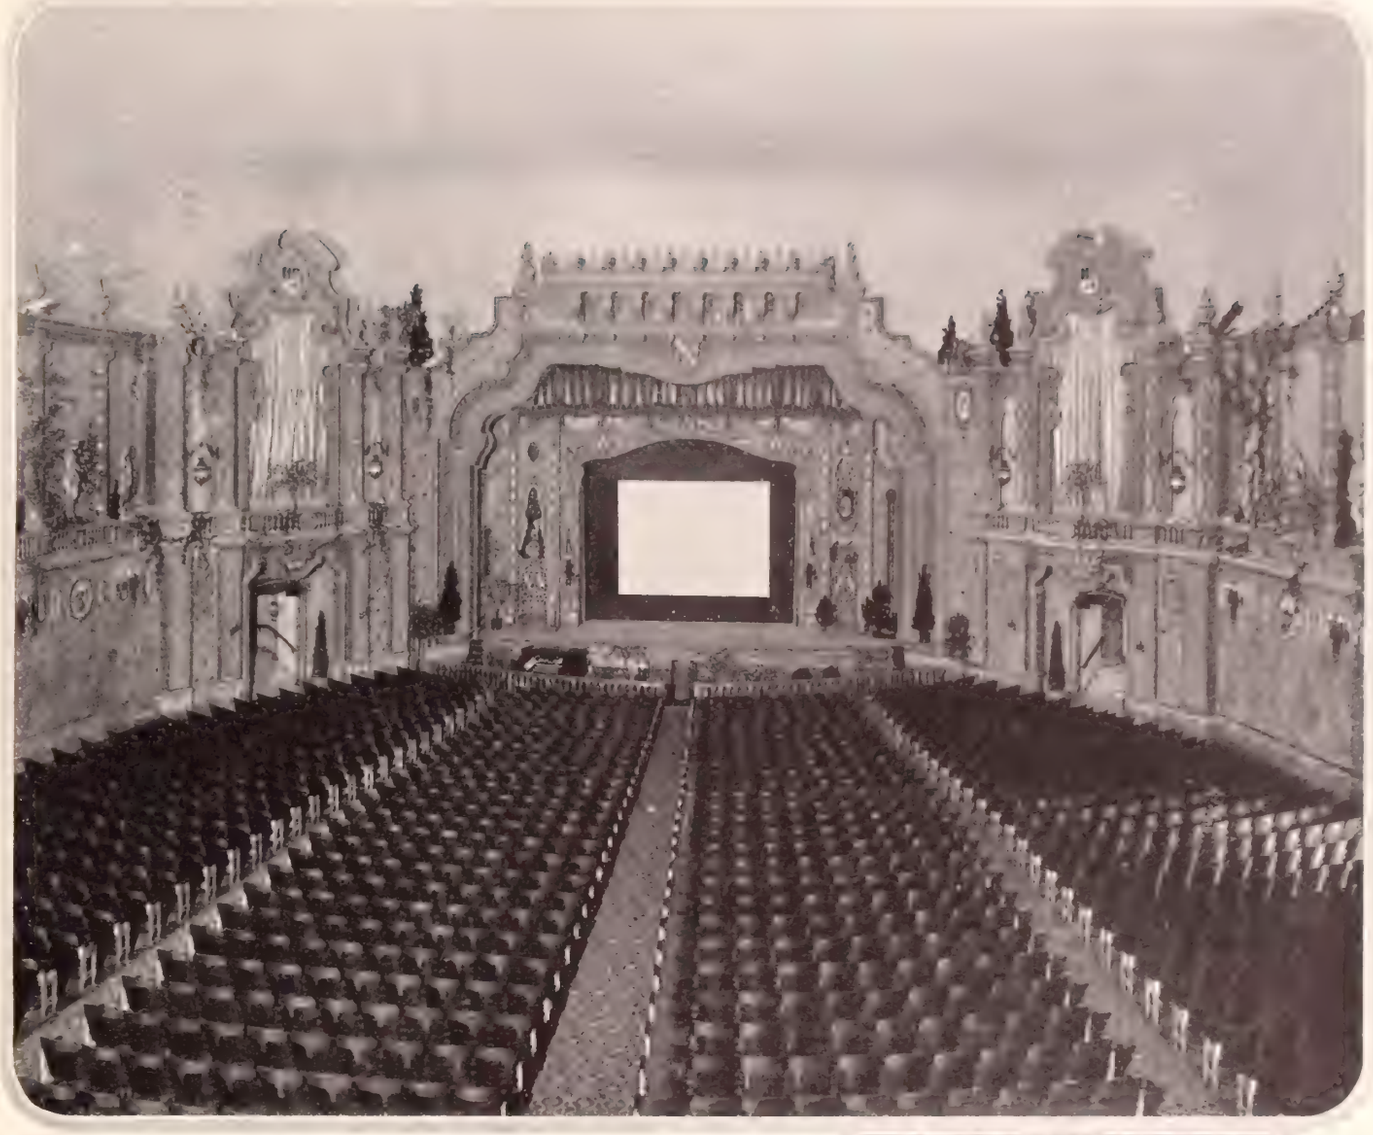
The Rivoli Theatre is truly of fireproof construction. The structure was erected by the Brennner Norris & Company, Limited, Montreal, contractors and engineers, from plans drawn by Dan Crighton, Montreal architect. Artistic effects were worked out by Emanuel Briffa, who is associated with the United Amusements Corp., and who enjoys the distinction of having decorated 158 fine theatres in the United States and Canada. With him was A. De Giorgio, well known as a plastic decorator, who has executed the plain and ornamental plastering in six other United theatres as well as many churches and public buildings in Eastern Canada. Structural steel for the Rivoli was fabricated and erected by Canadian Vickers, Limited, Montreal. There is considerable marble work in the Rivoli and this was installed by the Mariotti Marble Company, Montreal.

The manager of the Rivoli Theatre is G. Lefebvre and assisting Mr. Vandette in the projection are Messrs. A. Lague and E. Lamay.

The executive staff is complete in every detail. George Nicholas Ganetakos, of course, is the general manager, and the assistant general manager is William Lester. Edward F. McMahon is the [illegible]

A NEW ATMOSPHERIC THEATRE OPENS IN DETROIT

Front of the Annex Theatre, Detroit, with interesting treatment of vertical sign and Spanish design.

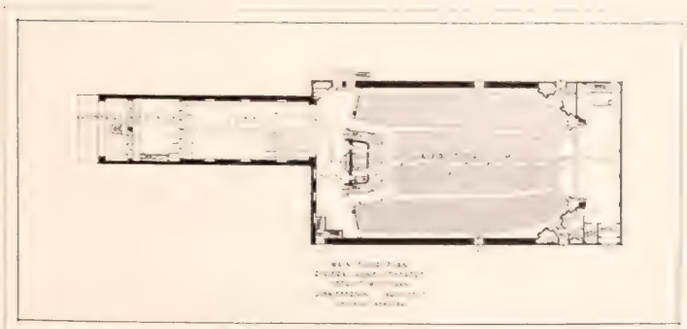


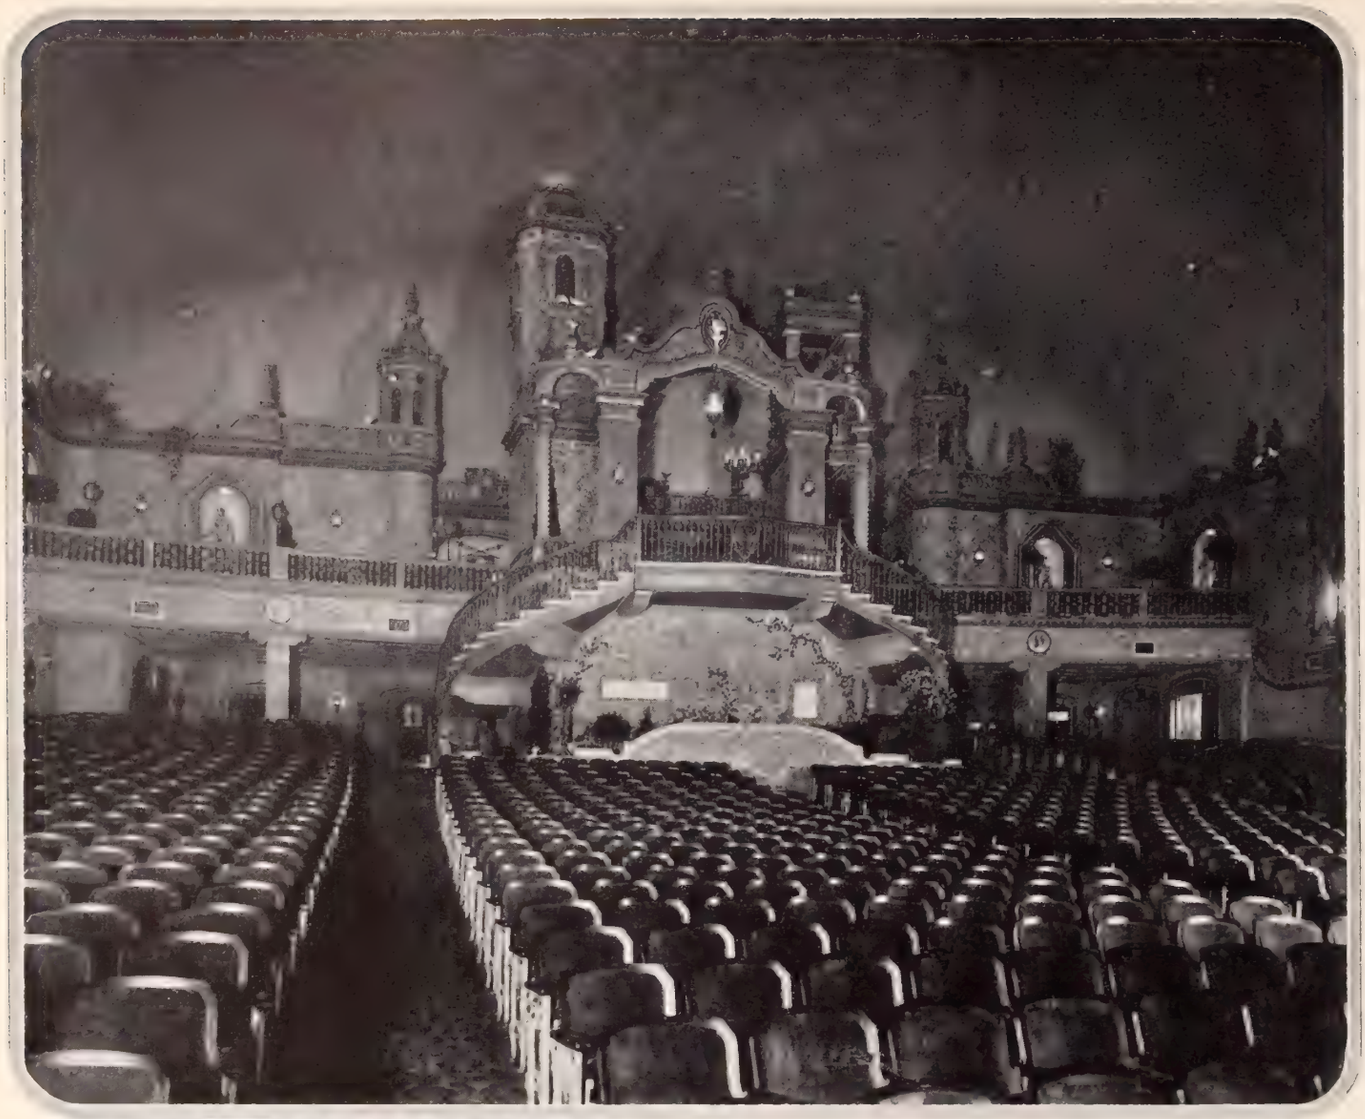
The foyer entrance creates the illusion of an outdoor court. Colorful treatment of the foyer is carried into every detail of wall and floor decoration.

A NEW triumph for the showmanship of the atmospheric theatre and a new peak in the development of the "theatre picture" in this style of architecture were brought to fruition when the Grand Riviera Theatre Company of Detroit formulated plans for the Annex, which now occupies a site opposite that organization's own Riviera Theatre, at Grand River and Albert avenues, and engaged John Eberson as architect.

The Annex is the Grand Riviera Company's enterprise to keep in the family, as it were, the competition in a neighborhood which has developed as one of the finest in the country through the success of the Riviera. It is a 2,000 seat house, all seats on one floor, and carries to its highest point the showmanship features of the atmospheric theatre. In the Spanish style, the Annex, from facade to the stage, is a remarkable example of the "attraction values" which can be built into a playhouse. Its combination of what may be termed pictorial atmospheric effects with the utilitarian side of theatre operation are probably most observable to the casual witness in the manner in which the vertical electric sign has been worked into the architectural scheme of the exterior, and the balcony stairway, which "makes a picture" of the advantageously placed projection booth.

The officers of the Grand Riviera Theatre Co., builders and operators of the Annex are: Chas. W. Munz, president; B. R. Williams, vice-president and managing director; H. E. Applegate, secretary and treasurer.





An atmospheric theatre with all seats on one floor, is the latest and in many respects the most interesting of the theatres designed by John Eberson.

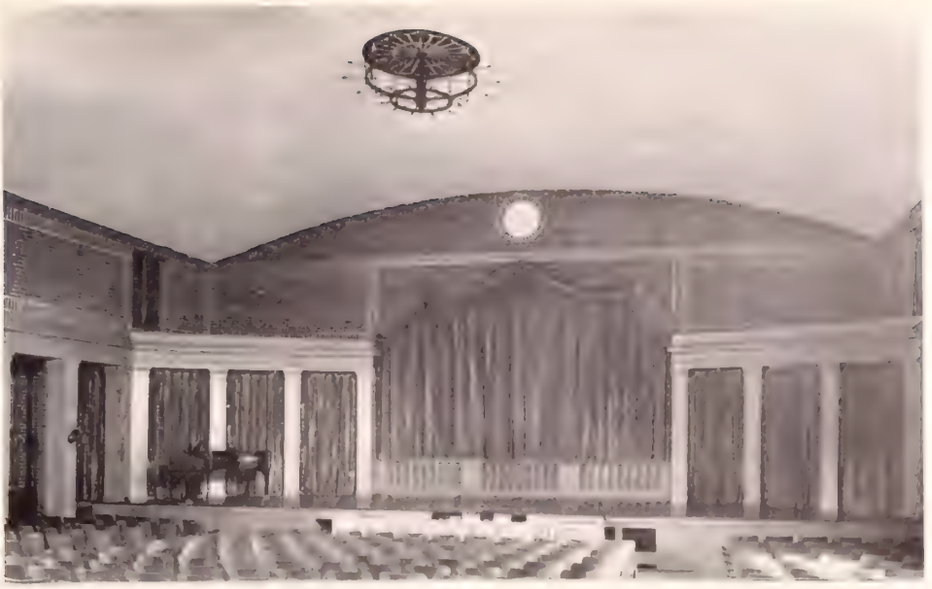
A PICTURE THEATRE THAT DEALS IN ART

Paintings on Display in Lobby of New Canaan Playhouse

UP in the small Connecticut village of New Canaan is a community playhouse which has attracted more attention than many larger and vastly more expensive theatres.

There are three distinctive features which set this theatre apart from others in the State. By a simple, costless innovation true art and the motion picture have been brought together in this Playhouse. While the latest comedies from Hollywood are thrown on the screen, in the quiet foyer contemporary American paintings are exhibited, and he who laughs at the "pie throwing" may stop to gaze in awe at a stormy sea by George Pickwell, or with contentment at a Charles Reiffel landscape. Exhibitions of oil paintings are changed at intervals in the foyer and the patrons follow with keen interest the works of the many artists who exhibit at the theatre.

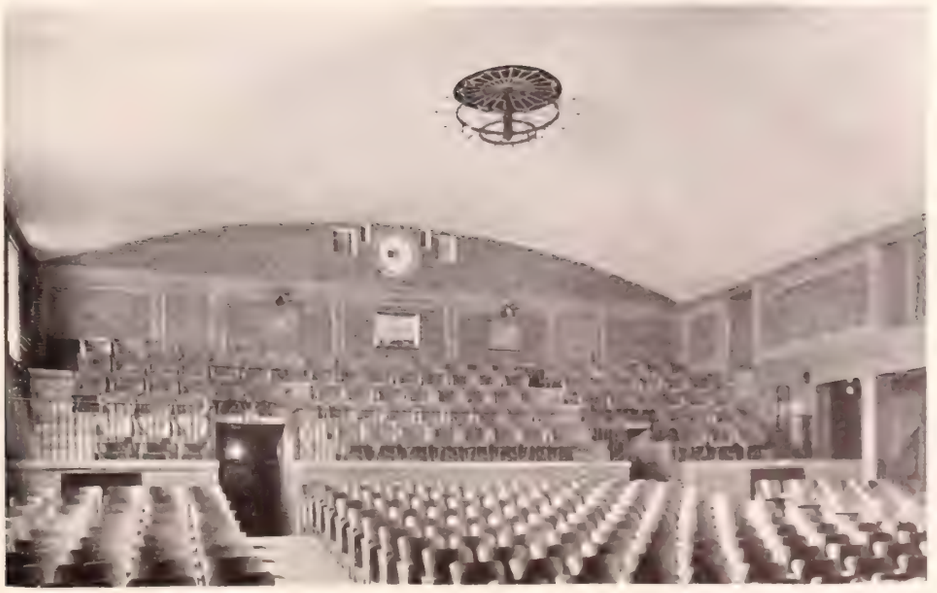


These are exhibitions loaned by the artists of the Silvermine Group residing in and about New Canaan, or by the William Macbeth Gallery of New York City, have focussed the attention of the art world on this small Playhouse. The large motion picture palaces through the country have turned to the old masters and many superb paintings are hung in their foyers. These paintings, however, hang there indefinitely and represent a tremendous outlay of money by the theatres. The New Canaan Playhouse has the advantage of exhibiting a different group of oils every month or six weeks, and affords its patrons an exceptional opportunity to become familiar with the works of contemporary American artists.

The New York galleries are now cooperating in this plan of bringing the works of American artists to the attention of the public through other channels than the regular exhibition galleries. Many theatres throughout the country have foyers which could easily be converted into a place for the exhibition of paintings and still leave plenty of space in the lobbies for the exhibition of motion picture advertising material. Such a move would create vastly more interest in the theatre than would be the case if the foyers as well as the lobbies were also devoted to advertising lithographs, one-sheets, photos, and the like.

Another outstanding feature of the Playhouse is the fact that it is owned and operated by the community through a local board of directors. There are over a hundred stockholders in the Playhouse which means that over five hundred people in this small community have a financial interest in its success. The directors are chosen from the leading business men of the community. Irwin Wheeler and Charles E. Casey, who are interested in the operation of several community playhouses are officers of the New Canaan Playhouse Corporation, and they with their associates on the board direct the policies of the theatre.

The third distinctive feature of the Playhouse is the simplicity of its architecture and the radical departure from the usual type of motion picture theatre. New Canaan takes great pride in its many fine samples of Colonial architecture and it was natural that Calvin Kiessling, a New York architect, residing in New Canaan, should choose a Colonial style for the Playhouse. The front of the theatre is reminiscent of Independence Hall and the inside is finished entirely in common brick and depends on its proportions for its decoration. Not only are the paintings exhibited in the foyer but many are hung on the main walls of the auditorium itself.



At the present time there is being exhibited in the foyer of the Playhouse a group of pastels drawn by Carl Schmitt formerly of Silvermine and now residing in Chartres, France. The pastels were sent by him from France for exhibition first in the Playhouse. Those unsold will be later exhibited at a gallery in New York City.

A DE LUXE THEATRE OF SPANISH STYLE OPENS IN TACOMA

THE first de luxe picture theatre in Tacoma, Washington, was opened to the public last January, when the Broadway, operated under the joint direction of Pacific Northwest Theatres, Inc., and the H. T. Moore Amusement Company, had its premiere.

The Broadway seats 2,000. In the auditorium are 1,200 chairs, full upholstered with backs covered in blue and taupe velour, and the seats of blue Spanish Morroccoline. The balcony seats are blue Moroccoline on backs and seats.

The charming and luxurious theatre is designed after the Spanish Renaissance style. The entrance to the theatre proper is through eight massive carved doors. The foyer, with walls treated in travertine, houses a grand stairway leading to the mezzanine. The auditorium is equally colorful, with ceiling beams of inlaid colors, wrought iron lighting fixtures and brilliant drapes.

Credit for the Broadway goes especially to Architect Bell of the firm of Heath, Gove and Bell, and to B. F. Shearer, associated with the National Theatre Supply Company as director of Interior Decorating division, whose studios at Seattle furnished all equipment, draperies, carpets, furnishings and decorating.

THE SAENGER—A GEM IN A GREAT CHAIN IN THE SOUTH

THE opening of the new $2,500,000 Saenger Theatre in New Orleans on Saturday morning, February 5, brough to a climax more than five years of steady toil and planning by the Saenger Theatres, Inc., to give that city a theatre as fine as any in America.

The sensation of being lifted from a workaday world into a land of mediæval romance and of seeing the latest departure in modern performances under a summer sky of twinkling stars and moving clouds was conveyed to thousands of Orleanians on the opening night.

The external aspect of the New Saenger Theatre is that of a huge block of brick work, only hinting at the loveliness within. Through a long lobby opening on Canal Street, calculated to have a capacity of a thousand or more, the entrance is into another large lobby or foyer. High above the floor level hang the great crystal chandeliers, as beautiful as any in the world, brought from the old castles of France and Italy.

The inner promenades are the Saenger's art galleries. They are crowded almost, but with taste in arrangement, with exact copies of Italy's treasures of sculpture.

The individual pieces of furniture throughout combine design of the antique with the comfort of the modern.

LOBBY FIXTURES ENTER PLAN OF DECORATION

A LONG forward stride has been made in such essentials of the picture theatre as ticket booths, wall frames—designed for the display of the standardized "scene stills" and lobby cards—ticket boxes and other business equipment of the motion picture theatre. The development of these articles long since achieved a high point on the side of utility, but a later phase was the application of the principles of artistic design, which enlarged not only on the efficiency of display frames, etc., as such, but also increased their value to the decorative scheme of the entrance lobbies and foyers of the de luxe theatre. The modern equipment is a detail which has taken first importance in planning the decoration of these buildings.

No longer is the ticket booth, the wall case, the smoking receptacle merely a standardized article to be purchased as so much necessary equipment. These furnishings are now designed especially for the particular theatre which they are to adorn, and carry out in details of decoration, color and shape, the particular features of the architecture.

Duplication or adaptation of distinctive features of the architecture appears in the finished pieces installed by firms specializing in this field. The reproduction here of views of lobbies and foyers in some recently built theatres, makes clear the marked improved which the designers and manufacturers of these fixtures have achieved.

Harold B. Franklin defines

The 'IT' of Theatre Management

in an interview by Thomas C. Kennedy

"So many elements go into the making of a good manager that the perfect expression of IT, upon analysis, is found to embrace several outstanding qualifications in native elements, training and practiced ability. They may be set down as: Experience, Personality, Show Sense, Common Sense, Judgment, Executive Ability, Alertness, Freshness—freedom from 'tradition' and set notions; Business Ability, Workman rather than 'Genius' type.

"I place Personality at the top of the list—after experience, of course—for the reason that it is the personality of the manager, expressing itself in his arrangement of programs, the conduct of the staff and even the advertising of the theatre, which give the house 'character' and 'atmosphere.' The manager's personality—the external manifestations of which are his appearance, his manner of speech and personal conduct—reflects itself in every department of the theatre. A gruff, rough-and-ready manner will engender gruffness, and the abrupt ungracious manner in those under him. This means that the theatre's contacts with the public, through its cashiers, doormen and ushers, will lack that courteous, pleasant relation which builds good-will.

"Show sense is of vast importance to the theatre manager. We often hear discussions about What the Public Wants. As a matter of fact they don't know what they want. You have to give them something and then let them pass on it. The public has its likes and dislikes, in entertainment as everything else, and it is for the theatre manager to discover his public's preferences and build his show accordingly. If the tastes run toward pictures of elemental appeal, that is the type of show he must give them if he expects his theatre to succeed.

"Common sense must be blended with show sense. He must co-ordinate his show, adhere to his policy faithfully and align himself and his theatre with the proper social and civic movements to promote its welfare as a responsible institution of the community it serves. He must apply common sense to his showmanship, keeping his musical programs in harmony with the type of screen entertainment desired.

"Good judgment in all matters pertaining to the policy of the theatre and its relations with the public is one of the characteristics which distinguish the successful manager. His judgment of entertainment values, good taste, the policy to adopt in exploiting pictures and his diplomacy in handling the affairs of the theatre are vital factors.

"Alertness of mind and body, quick and 'straight-line' thinking are a characteristic you will find in every successful manager. It is the thing which every theatre operator looks for in the man who manages his house, for it means initiative, the grasping of opportunity to further the interests of the theatre as a civic institution and a business enterprise.

"I always look for what may be termed 'Freshness.' This is the youthful attitude of mind. The 'old-timer,' cramped in viewpoint and hampered in movement by a burden of 'traditions' and set notions about Show Business simply does not belong in the modern picture theatre. It is a business of youth, of constant searching for new ideas and constructive originality.

"The manager of the picture theatre of today must be a business man, he must know how much to spend on advertising and put his theatre on a basis where it will function smoothly, without disorder or confusion, even in his absence. His accounts must be kept straight. The theatre now is first of all a business institution, and its business-like operation is absolutely necessary.

Genius Not Wanted

"His methods of doing things, whether it be the arrangement of entertainments or introduction of new ideas, must be those of the workman rather than the genius. For the latter is likely to be temperamental, he works feverishly when the enthusiasm of an idea is upon him, but he is just as likely to lapse into spells of abstraction when he has worked off the energy under which he was driven by 'inspiration.' It is a work-a-day job, managing the present-day theatre, and the manager is required to respond at any time, and this implies a logical and balanced mind, capable of organizing his work and grasping essentials and of evolving some desirable solution to every problem that may arise at any time."

The "yardstick" by which the theatre manager of ability is measured for a post with Publix Theatres Corporation was thus set forth by Harold B. Franklin, who recently resigned as vice-president of that company to become president and general manager of West Coast Theatres, Inc. In the industry he is recognized as one of the foremost theatre executives, and at a testimonial dinner tendered him in New York on Saturday evening, March 12, he received from Adolph Zukor, with whom he has long been associated, the highest tribute to his ability and achievement.

Mr. Zukor accorded to Franklin full credit for the planning and the execution of the plans which gave Publix its newest and greatest theatre, the Paramount, located at "the crossroads of the world," and playing to a weekly patronage that has mounted as high as $80,000.

He related how the theatre department of Famous Players, with every good intention of functioning as a profitable business enterprise, for a long while was simply a "department" that hardly any others than the executives of the company knew anything about. After things had gone thus for some time, Sidney R. Kent took the matter up with Mr. Zukor.

"What would you suggest?" the latter asked. Mr. Kent said the department needed a strong theatre man to direct it, adding that "up in Buffalo there's a tough customer; he works for Mike Shea, and I think he will fill the bill." Mr. Zukor said that if he was really a "tough customer" he might, and forthwith overtures were made to Franklin to take on the management of the Famous Players-Lasky theatre department.

The miracle he wrought in building up that department is now a well-known story in the industry, just as are the earlier activities of Harold B. Franklin. His first conspicuous position was as booking manager for a vaudeville circuit, comprising about forty small theatres. He later organized and operated dramatic and musical stock companies in Stamford, Conn.; Pittsfield, Mass; Easton, Pa., and New York City. As managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, in Buffalo, he introduced numerous innovations which since have become recognized features of the programs at de luxe picture theatres. During his five years in Buffalo he made his theatre famous and advanced it to a position as a model worthy of general imitation.

The assumption of his new duties as president and general manager of West Coast is considered in many quarters of the industry the most formidable task Franklin or any other big business executive has taken upon himself. The circuit is a large one, with theatres over an extensixe area in Northern and Southern California. It is a huge undertaking, for he will be called upon to lift many of these houses "out of the red." Many of the towns are considered to be "over seated."

As one who has listened to the fears expressed for him, and who interviewed Mr. Franklin two weeks before he left New York for "the coast" to take on his new job, the writer feels certain that while Franklin realizes the size of the task before him, he is less concerned over the outcome than many of these "Trade observers."

West Coast Situation

Discussing the West Coast situation, Mr. Franklin said: "The circuit as a whole has been built upon a solid foundation and comprises many of the finest theatres of their type in the country. Great credit is due to the Gore Brothers and the others who have developed West Coast Theatres to its present point. They have anticipated the wonderful prosperity that has come to the State of California. It is gratifying to know that I will have the assistance of the fine organization which they created in the further development of the West Coast chain."

Franklin is a man who has met and overcome too many obstacles to fret and become anxious over "problems." He is the perfect type of doer. A man of great energy and with a tremendous capacity for work. In speech he is alert, quick, but never hurried, and there is in everything he does a deliberate quality which expresses authority and leadership.

For a man accustomed and able to form quick decisions on matters of large import, and galvanize into action an organization comprising hundreds of men, he is extraordinarily well "modulated." His speech is soft, his manner positively gentle, and characterized by that amiability and graciousness which radiates friendliness and warmth. He is the leader, inspiring with confidence to follow, rather than the driver forcing to "carry on" those with whom he comes into contact.

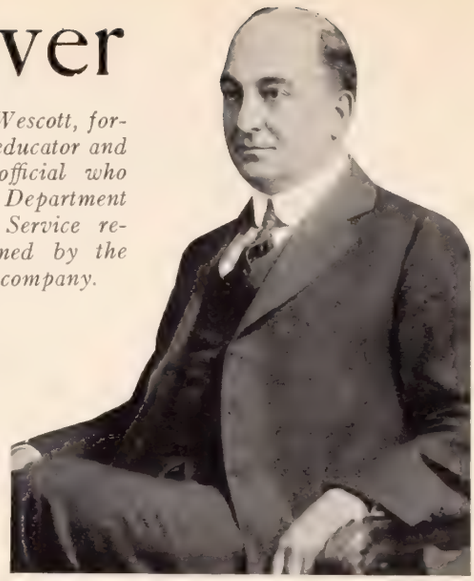
He gives himself wholeheartedly to whatever is immediately before him. Submitting to an interview at a time when there were many claims upon his time, Mr. Franklin pushed his chair back from a desk upon which there was much "documentary" evidence of many pressing jobs, and concentrated on giving an interview. He was giving an interview and he did it with all the energy, seriousness and sincerity that he would bring to whatever matter was in hand. I thought of what Lloyd-George once said when answering questions on how to accomplish your work—"Concentrate on the job in hand. If you are combing your hair, why, comb your hair," was the idea he expressed.

Above all, Franklin has an abundance of faith in human nature and he's an optimist on the future of the picture theatre. Brains and ability he holds in the greatest esteem and they are to him the answer, the solution to all the problems of the present and the future as they have been in the past. "The man with the brains will work his way to the top, no obstacle can hold him down, and there never can be a monopoly of brains in this business or any other."

The theatre is a passion with him, and he holds in the deepest respect the up-to-date picture theatre. Its advancement from a business of questioned standing to a place as one of the most important institutions in the social and business life of town and city is an accomplishment which he looks upon with the pride with which a parent would regard the great achievements of a gifted and brilliant son or daughter.

Harold B. Franklin

his duties as President and General Manager of West Coast Theatres, Inc.



"The theatre of today," he says, "has a standing of importance second not even to the newspaper in every community in which it is found. It is respected by the banker as a legitimate and important business enterprise; the merchant and the business man have high regard for its influence; social, civic and religious leaders of the progressive type esteem it as a powerful institution for good in the life of the community and welcome its co-operation with their interests just as they co-operate with the theatre for the benefit of the community."

So far as attractions are concerned, Mr. Franklin says, "In a picture theatre, the picture's the thing. It is 'the play' and the play today as ever 'is the thing.' The large theatre caters to a large patronage and must make a broad appeal, for that reason there is a need for some of the variety which vaudeville supplies.

"The stage presentation, the short screen features, the music and the service features, however, are built around the feature picture in the successful large theatres. It is the picture that draws the crowds.

"They all enjoy a news reel, but the news reel will not draw patrons to the theatre. Most everybody likes a short comedy, but unless there is some popular personality featured, it will not sell tickets for you; many enjoy the stage numbers, but the stage number does not, on its own, bring people into the theatre; courteous service will create good-will for a theatre, but you cannot get money into the box-office with it. However, the combination of all of these elements does increase the average quality of entertainment, and therefore raises the average drawing power of the house. But the feature picture is the factor which determines the amount of business between the 'average' and the 'peaks' of box-office returns."

From Skeptic to Believer In The Public Relations Plan

Harry D. Wescott, former actor, educator and public official who heads the Department of Public Service recently formed by the Stanley company.

WHEN, about four years ago, the Harry Crandall organization in Washington D.C., launched its "Public Relations Department," many showmen regarded the move as a more or less vagrant flight into realms far removed from those in which a theatre operating company naturally belonged. To many it seemed a roundabout way of selling a theatre to a community—something of a shunting off the main track, this business of a theatre going in for such things as educational classes and schools for foreigners. The childrens' matinees, at which admissions were charged but which were arranged at such trouble and expense that they could not show a very big profit, seemed idealistic enough—but free educational work!

Nevertheless the Crandall department was started, with Harriet Hawley Locher, a woman of wide experience and a record of accomplishment in educational and organization work, in charge. The fact that Harry Crandall was at the head of the company starting the Public Relations Department in Washington removed all doubt as to the sincerity of the move, and as a consequence theatre men, and particularly officials of large circuits, watched every development of this work with the greatest interest.

Among those who kept this Crandall experiment under close observation—and they admit now they were skeptical at the outset—were the officials of the Stanley Company of America, with which the Crandall theatres later became affiliated. From the very beginning the Crandall department accomplished results. After the Stanley-Crandall merger, the department was not only continued but its work extended. Then later—and this only recently—the Stanley officials, with the broad vision which characterizes their valuation of any project for bigger and better business, gave the final endorsement when they announced the formation of a Department of Public Service and Education to extend Public Relations work to all of its community houses.

As an initial step, the Stanley officials selected Harry D. Wescott to head the department and sent him to Washington to study Mrs. Locher's work there.

Mr. Wescott's selection for the post was itself an emphatic gesture on the part of the Stanley Company, in recognition of the importance its officials attached to this phase of theatre operation.

Harry D. Wescott was graduated from Yale in 1901, is the founder of the Yale University Dramatic Association, was once a trouper, is a member of the Philadelphia bar, was Democratic nominee for mayor of that city about eight years ago, was Registration Commissioner and has been teaching the study of the photoplay at Temple University for seven years—a work which brought him back to his first love, the theatre. Incidentally, it was his father, Judge John W. Wescott, of New Jersey, who nominated Woodrow Wilson for the Presidency, at both the Baltimore and St. Louis conventions.

Westcott has the Public Service and Educational department of the Stanley Company well under way, though it officially started only a short time ago. Outlining the policy under which the department will operate in an interview given to "The Showman" by Mr. Wescott, he said:

"Our work, so far, has three phases: Saturday Morning Matinees for children; the Educational Hour; and a Echool for Foreigners.

"The first is not just a matinee. We carefully select the kind of pictures and surrounding entertainment which will amuse the youngsters and put in a dash of education, just enough of the latter not to spoil the entertainment.

"And each show opens with a short and snappy patriotic presentation, such as a troup of Boy Scouts giving the "Pledge to the Flag," and Girl Scouts, Camp Fire Girls and other organizations in appropriate exhibitions in turn.

Participation of Organizations

"But what is of the utmost importance, in fact indispensable, is the assistance given by the Women's Clubs of the neighborhood. In Germantown, for example, every Woman's Club participates in the work as a civic and community activity. They provide hostesses to welcome and care for the children, they have organized a committee which visits all of our theatres for the purpose of assisting in the selection of suitable pictures, both features and short subjects, also committees on publicity and entertainment, to seek out poor children and bring them to the theatre and for whatever other work may be found necessary.

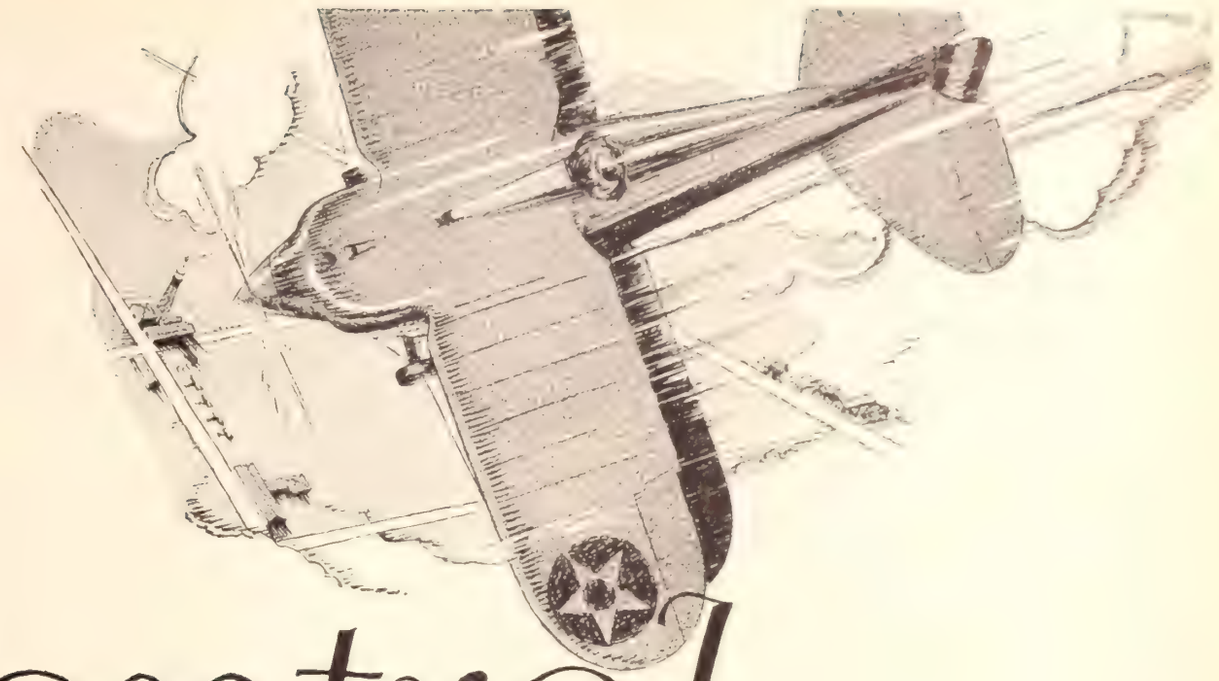
"The chairman of the Germantown Division of Motion Pictures, State Federation of Pennsylvania Women's Clubs, is there seeing that her appointees are on the job.

"Of course, committees differ, but the foregoing exemplifies the principle underlying the work everywhere. We charge the regular house admissions, otherwise the children feel that the show is worthless.

"The Educational Hour at present is confined to a central theatre. Here anyone who is sufficiently interested to apply for a membership card, which costs nothing, may hear a five or ten-minute lecture explaining the pictures which depict various aspects of science, commerce, art, industry, etc. This film is obtained for the most part from the government, but much is obtained from the industry at large.

"The School for Foreigners will follow Mrs. Locher's plan, and provide a suitable hall were the foreigner may learn about America through motion pictures. This is not Americanization work as such, but more of a broad education.

"The work will in no wise conflict with Mrs. Locher's in Washington, but rather will work together in the Stanley family.



About the same time as the Stanley Company launched a Public Relations Department, a similar organization was formed by the Finkelstein and Ruben Company, operators of a large chain in the Northwest.

With a view to establishing a better understanding of motion pictures and the theatres as well as the creation of new prestige-building contacts between the company and various leaders and organizations, F. & R. planned this new department on a comprehensive scale. Miss Blanche MacDonald, former Twin City newspaperwoman and publicity expert, was appointed to head the Public Relations Department. Miss MacDonald chose the women's organizations as the first objective of her public relations work, and though the department has been in existence but a few months the progress made has more than justified the high hopes of the F. & R. officials when they formulated their plans to bring into closer relations the theatres and the public.

Many valuable contacts are being made by the new department in Minneapolis. Of especial value were those growing out of the Lincoln's Birthday morning matinee for children, held at the Garrick Theatre.

A cordial tie-up was made with the Minneapolis Public Library, which has 34 branches. Posters were exhibited in all the branches drawing attention to the matinee, and Miss Gratia Countryman, librarian, said she would welcome material advertising fine things in the movies. In return for such advertising any theatre can of course afford to put on a trailer mentioning the books which the library has on the subject.

The Lincoln's Birthday matinee was also advertised by sending out about 150 letters to Parent-Teachers' associations and to parochial schools. W. F. Webster, superintendent of schools, permitted a bulletin to be sent from his office to each school in the city carrying a notice of the matinee, on condition that he might send a committee to inspect and approve the picture in advance. A few changes were made at the suggestion of the committee.

Control

says

Control? It's a vital necessity in an airplane. Absolutely complete accurate control, sensitive yet smooth, is demanded above all else, by the pilot. His comfort, his efficiency, sometimes his very life, depend on it.

is the power of complete regulation

GOOD ship—blue sky—zoom and stall — tight stick . . . control smooth . . . positive . . . complete—bank and slip — thought . . . action . . . right.

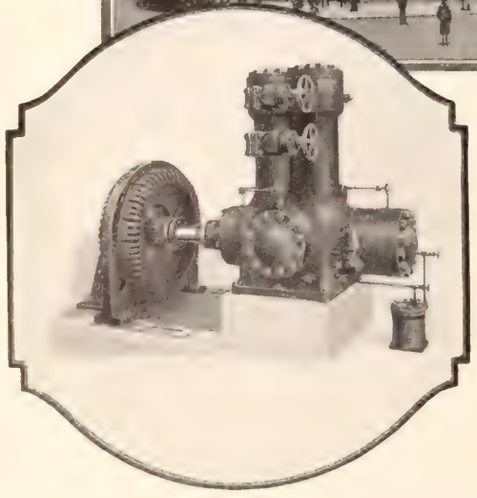
As a pilot sends three thousand pounds, or more, of metal, wood, and fabric humming through space, the under-current of his thought is always control; for him it must be complete.

Few think of the stage electrician, and the theatre dimmer levers which he handles so carefully, as the agency for life and accomplishment that 'plane and pilot are. Yet through the lights which he dims or brightens the emotions of millions are controlled.

As with the pilot, successful accomplishment can come only through accurate control. Exactly as perfect or imperfect as are the means for his control of light, so perfect is the illusion of life created for this vast theatre audience.

Light, properly controlled, rolls out in chords as real, and as vivid, as any music; it changes the drab, crude flatness of a stage setting to reality—to life. It brings to the audience a real release from self; the only reason for the existence and success of the stage.

Stage masters of light and emotion have said, as David Belasco did, that their most perfect lighting effects would have been impossible without the smooth, accurate control—the complete regulation which is to be had only by the use of Ward Leonard Vitrohm Dimmers.



More than a quarter of a century's experience in the manufacture of Theatre lighting control apparatus is back of Vitrohm Dimmers. The stages and auditoriums, of the world's largest theatres are Ward Leonard equipped. Send us your specifications for estimate, and possibly, advice. Things Your Press Agent Can Put Across

A consideration of the good and bad in picture theatre publicity from the angle of the theatre and the public and second in a series of three articles dealing with the exploitation, advertising and publicity phase of theatre management.

By Vic Gauntlett

Advertising Manager John Hamrick Theatres

With Cartoon Illustrations by the Author

CATALINA ISLAND once was famous for coral reefs and glass-bottom boats. Now it is noted for "non-piece" bathing suits and axle grease. Publicity did this. This brings me to my second article for "The Showman," namely, the press agent and his value to the show business. Publicity is all powerful. However like everything else you will find in Publicity the good and bad. Good publicity has raised unknown actors to stars and bad publicity has made stars into "bums" as far as the public was concerned. Good publicity has turned many poor-paying theatres into gold mines while bad publicity has turned many theatres into second-rate garages.

Publicity is the life blood of the show business! When you speak of publicity and the show business you naturally think of "press agents." In some cases they have more "highfalutin" titles with less pay, but to the newspaper boys they are known as "P-A's." It's up to the press agent to keep this "life-blood of the theatre" in a good healthy condition. I wonder how many theatre owners would go to a "quack doctor" to cure their physical ills —not very many, I'll wager and yet many of them have a "quack press agent," who knows nothing of the show or newspaper game, poisoning the life-blood of his business with the improper sort of publicity. If your business is sick, call in a specialist and not a quack.

Besides being thoroughly familiar with the entire workings of the newspaper game, the press agent has to be a high-class salesman and also a great little analyst of the public as well. It is up to him to analyze the condition of the public day by day; to keep his hand on its pulse and to find out just what the dear fickle public craves the most. After he has done this then it is up to him by good publicity to sell the necessary stimulants to the news columns of the newspapers in order that the public can absorb them. Good publicity is not necessarily the kind that gets the most space. I remember one instance in regard to this, that happened to me, and I am going to dwell on it briefly as a means of illustrating this point.

Where a Big Stunt Failed

The theatre had booked a rip-snorting melodrama, very melo in fact and with a dime novel title. I sold one of the newspapers on an idea to have a local girl duplicate all the dare-devil stunts and breath-taking thrills that the heroine was supposed to go through during the making of the picture. The newspaper got as excited over the stunt as I did. They turned over their feature writer and a staff photographer to work exclusively on the idea and put it over in a big manner. Page one publicity and special art was nothing. For ten days the stunt "hogged" the columns of the paper. All the town was buzzing about it. The managers on Film Row were patting me on the back and telling me what a wizard I was, and then the picture opened to a wonderful "flop."

Up to this time I figured that the more news space you grabbed from the newspaper the bigger would be the result in the box-office. However, the failure of this publicity stunt opened my eyes to the value of analyzing and giving careful consideration to all publicity ideas before planting them in the newspapers. What I really did with this idea was to so thoroughly cheapen the picture that it would have smashed all records in a ten-cent house, but I drove them away from our fifty-cent theatre. This was bad publicity and it has always been a bitter lesson for me but one that I have never forgotten.

It is often said in the fight game that one blow properly placed is a sure-fire "knock-out." This same holds true in the publicity game. Oft'times one big convincing smash will do the trick where columns of ordinary publicity won't. I recall as a successful example of this type of exploitation in a fairly large town in the State of Washington, when I was out with "Human Wreckage."

Value of Local Influence

After getting into the town and sizing up the situation, I was at sea as to what to really pull to get the big "knock-out" punch in the campaign. I found out that the big influential man in the town was the editor of the largest of the three daily newspapers. His word in the community was almost law. He was a hard man to reach and it took me nearly three days before I got a chance to have a heart-to-heart talk with him. I finally got what I was after and that was to give him a private showing of the picture, without even the manager of the theatre knowing anything about it. After he viewed the picture I saw that he was deeply impressed with the powerful sermon that the picture preached. I suggested that his opinion on the picture would be a valuable one for the community. On the opening day of the picture he broke forth with a double-column, signed editorial on page one, with what I think was the greatest editorial boost I have ever read. It was the one big "knock-out" punch of my campaign and as a result the theatre smashed house records.

I realize that only a few of the bigger theatres are in a position to afford the services of "press agents." However, the manager or the owner should be careful to clip from the press books only stories that they themselves feel will be business pullers for their box-office. It's bad business to get into the habit of just handing an entire press book to the newspapers. The

Theatre Seating

IN the first article of this series in last month's issue of "The Showman," an outline was given of the various lamps which are the actual materials of theatre lighting. Later articles will show the manner in which these lamps may be used for the lighting of theatre and stage and the various effects that may be secured by their proper use. Before we go on, however, to the detailed discussion of these various practical uses of the incandescent lamp in the theatre it seems advisable to go over briefly some of the terms that are fundamental to illumination and light measurement.

By this it is not meant that exact technical definitions of these fundamental terms must be known. A clear understanding of what these terms represent is all that is necessary. And this understanding individuals must have who are responsible for the design, operation, maintenance, or installation of a lighting system, if they are to be able to deal intelligently with the lighting problems in these fields.

Illumination and Light Measurement

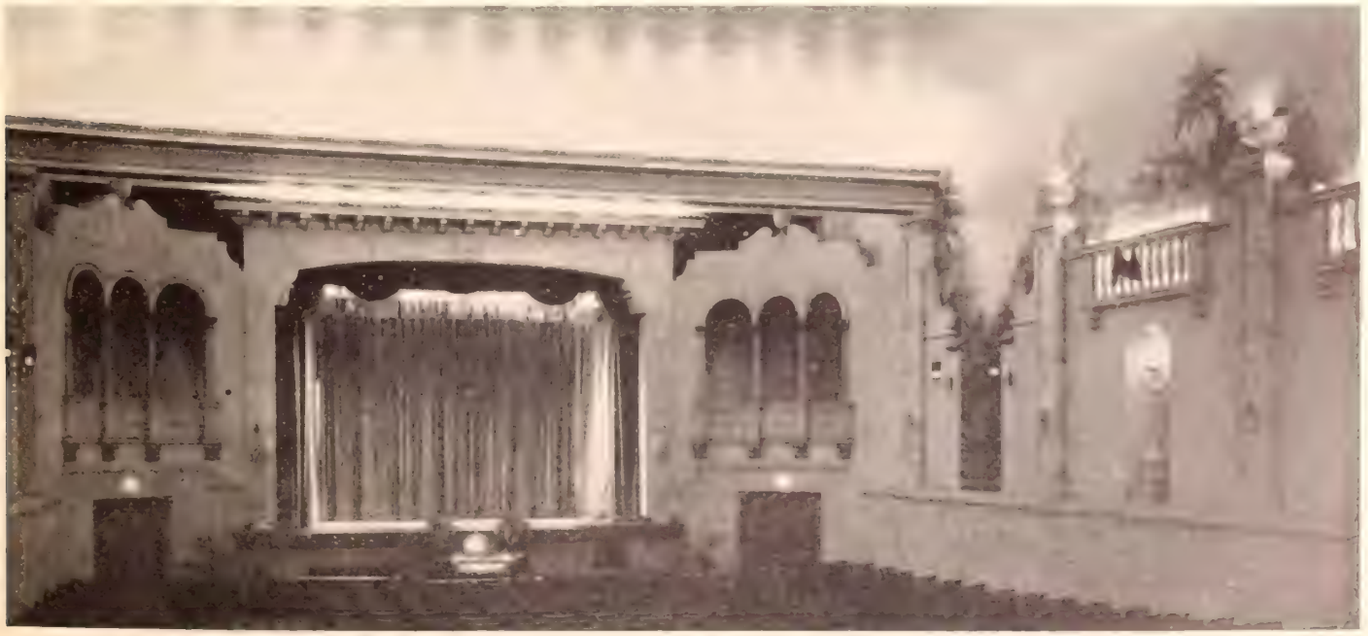
By A. B. ODAY
Engineering Dept. Edison Lamp Works of General Electric Co.

WHEN some of the more common terms pertaining to light and illumination are mentioned in casual conversation with the general public, they are prone to throw up their hands, so to speak, and remark that they know nothing about such things. They seem to think that these terms are beyond their comprehension. In order to show that there is no reason for the existence of such an idea, attention might be called to the fact that many of the terms used with ease and seeming understanding in every-day life are not entirely clear to all people if they really sit down and analyze their knowledge.

For example, if someone says to you it is ten below zero, or it was 90 degrees in the shade, right away a mental picture is created as to about how cold or how hot the particular day in question was. Also, if you say we have three bushels of potatoes, we know right away about what quantity is represented. If we say a thing is five feet long, we have a mental picture of its length. If there is required two and a half yards of cloth, we know about the quantity represented. It is doubtful, however, if very many people could give us a technical definition of a degree of temperature, a foot, a yard, a bushel or a gallon—still we know definitely what is meant when these units are mentioned. We have been brought up to use these terms all through our life, and by constant association have become thoroughly acquainted with what they represent.

Of course, it is obvious that with light and illumination we must have units of measure to express our values. Probably the reason more people are not familiar with illumination terms is due to the fact that illuminating engineering is one of the newer of the arts and sciences and we have not been associated with these terms for any great length of time.

What it is important to realize is that if we can get along and have a clear understanding of some of the other units of measure and terms mentioned above without knowing the exact technical definitions, there is probably reason to believe that we do not need to carry in our heads the exact technical definitions of illumination terms. We must, however, have a thorough comprehension of just what these terms mean if we are to deal intelligently and effectively with the subject of illumination.



Some of the more important terms with which everybody should be familiar, especially if he is interested in the subject of illumination, are the candle, candle power, mean horizontal candlepower, mean spherical candlepower, lumen, and footcandle.

In the beginning when new light sources of real value began to appear, they were quite naturally compared with the ordinary candle which was at that time probably the only really practical light source. At that time it was decided that a candle of a certain size, made of certain material, which burned at a certain rate, should be called a unit light source, or a "standard candle," which gave off a certain definite quantity of light. At first it was the practice to compare other light sources with this standard candle, taking into consideration only the light given off in one direction.

The strength of light in the horizontal direction, that is, directly opposite the center of the flame, was chosen, and by averaging the strength of light in this one plane around the light source, they arrived at a term known as "mean horizontal candlepower." It must be borne in mind that candlepower, or mean horizontal candlepower, does not in any way indicate the total amount of light which is given off by a light source, but rather the strength of light in one direction.

If a lamp gives 100 candlepower in a horizontal direction, we do not know the total amount of light given off by this source, but rather the strength of light in this one certain direction. To illustrate this, we might put a lamp—say a standard candle—inside a hemisphere. If the hemisphere is painted black on the inside, we know that the light going in one direction will be absorbed; still if we took a measure of the intensity in the direction away from

"Every day a good day"

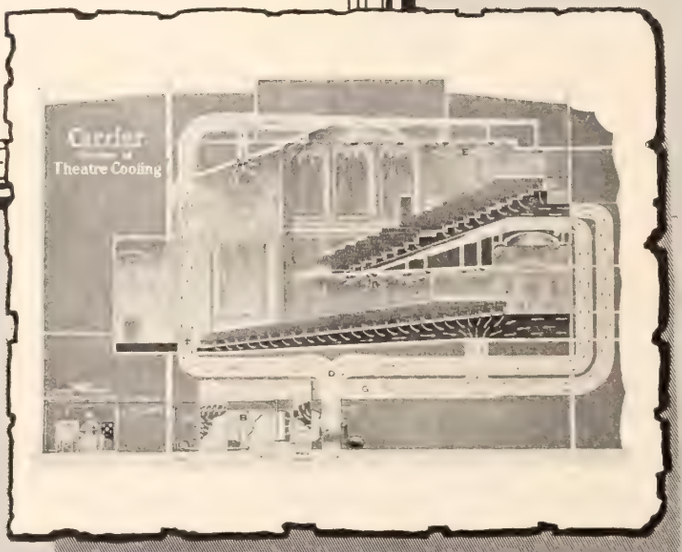
THAT has been the Carrier slogan for years. Long before any theatre in the country took advantage of the tremendous attraction offered by a healthful, comfortable atmosphere, Carrier was designing and installing equipment in hundreds of industries to make "Every day a good day" for manufacturing processes or for the health, comfort and efficiency of workers.



¶ Then some progressive showmen saw that Manufactured Weather would make "Every day a good day" for their patrons and their box office. Consider the Rivoli, on Broadway, the first theatre in New York City to have a complete air conditioning system. This Carrier Conditioned Theatre is entering its third year of operation. With absolute dependability the Carrier equipment has functioned to create and maintain ideal air conditions in the theatre regardless of the season, the weather, or the size of the crowd.

¶ There are now more than fifty theatres from Los Angeles to Broadway which boast the fact that they

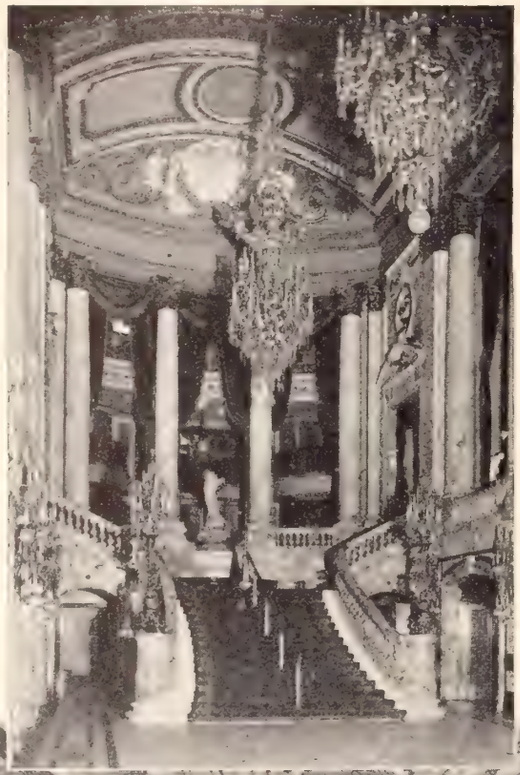
How Movietone Films Are Produced

Fox-Case "Talking Pictures" Developed Commercially

JUST now leading film companies are placing "talking movies" before the public. So far, no fewer than four separate and distinct methods have been devised for obtaining the perfect synchronization of sound with motion upon the screen, which forms the basis of all the known methods.

The four methods in the order of their appearance are as follows: The DeForest Phonofilm, wherein a photographic record of the sound vibration is made on the film immediately adjoining the picture record, the photographic record on this part of the film being the result of varying the intensity of exposure by means of a sound-induced electric current flowing through a special lamp. The Vitaphone, which uses a special phonograph record (similar to the type used in homes) mechanically synchronized with the film projector mechanism, the sound record being amplified by radio means to the point where it is audible throughout the entire theatre. The General Electric Photophone (described in the preceding issue of "The Showman") which, in its general aspects is similar to the DeForest system in that it makes use of a sound record on the film, adjacent to the picture record, the principal difference being that the path of a light beam reflected from a mirror actuated by the sound vibrations is traced upon the film instead of a record being made, by means of varied intensity of exposure. And latest, the Fox-Case Movietone, which derives its name from the commercial arrangement between the Fox Film Corporation and the Case Research Laboratories, which laboratories are responsible for the system.

The latter, which accomplishes the reproduction of synchronized sound and pictures by means of a photographic record of the varying sound vibrations made by varying the intensity of exposure on the edge of the picture record, has been put on a commercial scale of production, and according to announcement from the executive offices of the company the progress made by this concern in the last few months has eliminated all obstacles in the path of steady production for the theatre of subjects made especially for the voice or instrumental accompaniment.



A demonstration of Movietone [illegible] was given in New York in February. The program consisted of two parts, the first being a reel of short subjects made in the course of experimentation at the Fox Case Studios, and announced as "Studies in Movietone"—not intended for release to theatres. Solos of Hawaiian music on the steel guitar, banjo and piano numbers, a canary atop its cage in a burst of song—were some of the bits of varied record presented in sound and pictures. The second part of the program presented the first of the Movietone productions intended for theatrical use. Raquel Meller was seen and heard in a cycle of songs in Spanish.

The studios are of special construction. There are two rooms or studio stages in [illegible] studios are ample in size to allow for elaborate settings or large orchestral accompaniment; both studios have the usual equipment of [illegible] required by the Movietone process.

The Kind of Publicity That Builds Goodwill

A Few Examples of the Method That Made Keith's Palace an Indianapolis Institution

By J. Roland Duvall

HERB JENNINGS
The manager who succeeded where others failed.

PREVIOUS to the fall of 1922, I am told $25,000 was spent advertising what is now the Palace Theatre, in Indianapolis. The theatre name was splashed on highway sign boards for miles around. It greeted you on every scrap paper can, on the front of every street car. Tack cards flared in prominent places. Half and quarter-page advertisements invited attention through the medium of the press. It was a new theatre. The public stormed its doors. The public dwindled away. Five managers came and went in one year.

I was employed on the Indianapolis News at that time. After the afternoon edition had gone to press, the boys would gather around the copy desk and air their opinions. Politics and theatres were popular subjects. We always talked freely about the new theatre, which proved that advertising had kept the theatre name on our lips. But our comments were particularly unfavorable. The picture editor would hand out assignments with "Who wants to see the Palace tonight?" Dead silence. Then someone picked for the duty, much grumbling from the unlucky one, and usually wise-cracks from the copy-desk crew.

Then Herb Jennings came to Indianapolis. He suddenly cut his paid newspaper advertising. Gradually the name Palace disappeared from sign boards, street cars, street boxes and prominent places. His publicity man, more frequently Mr. Jennings himself, brought stories to the editors. These stories were newsy. Then the newspaper boys began to drop in to see the Palace manager and solicit news. That was the reason he had us wearing paths to his door. He had real news. At times he suggested follow-up stories to local or national news events. Again it might be a "lead"—always independent of the theatre. But the story never failed to involve mention of his house in some way.

On Thursday night, April 2, 1924, an usher brought the "bulldog" edition of the morning paper to his desk. Every paper is delivered to his desk as soon as it is on the street. On the front page, down in one corner, was a police story about a man being killed by the falling of a paper bale. His name was Rid McAllister. The account was brief. He had been out of work. His new job lasted half an hour when he was killed. He was survived by a widow and two children, who were ill and incidentally destitute. From that brief stickful of police news Mr. Jennings secured front-page advertising for ten days, his name and mention of the theatre being carried in thirty-seven different stories through three newspapers. A relief fund was started that grew to $10,000 in four weeks. Even the city administration asked permission of the theatre to assist in a worthy cause.

An accurate schedule of events runs like this:

THURSDAY—10:30 P.M. Bulldog edition of Morning Star laid on Manager Jennings' desk. Reads story of McAllister's destitute family. Immediately calls Managing Editor. Not there. Finally locates him at his home after midnight. Makes trip by taxi to his home. Story sold.

FRIDAY—4:00 A.M. Morning Star breaks with two column picture of Mrs. McAllister and children, tells story of their plight as discovered by the newspaper and announcement that the Palace Theatre will give a benefit show on Saturday morning. Three column headlines, front page.

8 A.M. Jennings visits both afternoon dailies and secures two column front page stories in each paper, supplying each with completed details of the arrangements for the benefit show. Visits advertising departments of both papers and secures from each a two column four inch complimentary advertisement telling about the Palace Theatre Benefit Show.

9:15 A.M. Interests Indianapolis Kiwanis Club in acting as Sponsor for the Benefit Campaign.

3:00 P.M. Releases Kiwanis Club sponsorship story to morning paper after all evening editions are on the street.

5:00 P.M. Collections begin coming to theatre from outside sources. Sign man makes special lobby cards. Sign advertising benefit show, money box on pedestal and armed guard on curb line in front of box office to attract attention and draw money from passerbys.

Saturday—Morning Star breaks with the Kiwanis story in two columns on the front page; also a complementary advertisement, advertising the Benefit performance.

Sunday—Morning Star carries two column story with layout of three two column photographs by staff photographer of crowds at Palace Benefit Show, street ballyhoo and well filled money box in [illegible]

Monday—Morning Star carries front page story in which Palace management thanks the public for their kind assistance in making the benefit show a success and quotes proceeds.

11:00 A.M. Reporters from two afternoon papers wait at theatre for manager to give a detailed report of all moneys contributed to date. Front page stories.

Tuesday—Morning Star carries two column front page story "Church and Theatre Join Forces to Relieve Poverty." Story quotes mention from pulpits of several churches. Indianapolis News carries one column story of City Controller turning his collections over to the Palace Fund. Indianapolis Times, another afternoon paper, carries one column account of further donations and Editorial.

Wednesday—All three papers carry front page stories on progress of collections.

Thursday—Morning paper carries report of Kiwanis Club on first actual financial relief given the McAllister family and suggestion that the money be invested to take care of the widow and children over a period of several years. Afternoon papers carry story of local real estate agency offering to aid Kiwanis Club in furnishing the McAllisters with a home. Palace manager is on the fund committee, so the theatre still gets prominent mention.

Friday—All three papers carry follow-up stories on moneys collected and offers of other firms to assist the family.

Saturday—No stories appeared.

Sunday—No stories appeared.

Monday—Morning Star carries two column front page interview with Mrs. McAllister saying she desires to return to Kentucky and live on a farm of her own. Good human interest stuff. Story suggested to reporter by Mr. Jennings.

Tuesday—Afternoon papers carry story that Indianapolis Kiwanis Club purchases farm in Kentucky for the McAllisters and deposits balance of fund in a bank, payable [illegible] four years.

DAY DREAMS—back to the unrealized ambitions of youth—satisfying the suppressed desire for romance that lies within us all—that's the pull of the "movie." That is the attraction which brings patrons to your box office. The extent to which you supply "the stuff of which dreams are made" determines your profit.

Films alone can't do it. Enchanting lighting adds to the effect, inspiring a mood which the best of films cannot create alone.

Modern theaters everywhere use C-H "Simplicity" Dimmers to create this crowd-pulling atmosphere. With "Simplicity" Dimmers, smooth fading and crescendo of light are accomplished without a trace of flicker. Magnificent color schemes are produced with ease. C-H Dimmer design assures velvet-smooth operation, long life and negligible maintenance.

Regardless of its size, age or present decorations, your theater can be equipped with C-H "Simplicity" Dimmers.

Consult your architect or electrical contractor. See how easily you can make this profit-boosting improvement.

Solid soapstone bases have high heat dispersion and insulating qualities—great continuous load capacity—and won't burn out.

Contacts on each side of plates allow twice as many circuits in the same space. Plates can be taken out by removing one screw. Plates of any desired capacity can be substituted—allowing adaptation to all theaters.

Low ratio rack and pinion drive eliminates play and back-lash. 110 distinct steps with no overlapping of contacts assures flickerless fading from full brilliancy to black out.

Watching the Wheels Go Round at the Roxy Opening

By E. G. Johnston

A GUEST of the new hotel at Fiftieth Street and Seventh Avenue, New York City, who had arrived in town from his Middle West home on the afternoon of March 11th, emerged from the main entrance of that hostelry in the early hours of the evening on that same day and stood for a few seconds gaping at a spectacle. He saw a transformation of his neighborhood. When he checked into the hotel, there had been nothing impressive above the ordinary routine of daily city traffic. Now, it looked like an anniversary of Armistice Night. Something had happened while he was up in his room.

A policeman spied the bewildered hotel guest.

"Move on you! You can't stand there," bawled the officer of the law, and an indignant but complacent citizen moved on, impotently muttering words that sounded like "rights," and "what in hell is going on, anyway!"

And what was the use of getting sore. Wasn't "Roxy," the inimitable, the incomparable "Roxy," about to open his world's largest motion picture theatre, and was there anyone or anything in New York City that night of more importance?

That was out of doors.

Inside the huge playhouse, there was a very tired "Roxy"; very tired for the reason that he has constantly been on the alert for the past several months in order to see that every important detail of construction was carried out according to his wishes. Everything was apparently complete. Surely, Mr. Rothafel could now relax and pridefully watch his carefully prepared "show" go forward; rehearsed so carefully that next day's newspapers could not but carry favorable comment.

But there was one more thing to occupy "Roxy's" attention for the evening. One more department—commonly called the projection booth, lately dignified by the name, "projectatory," and sometimes referred to by an uglier but more truly descriptive term as "the guts of the show."

There are two doors leading from the mezzanine foyer that enter either end of the booth, and from the time that the chimes heralded the start of the program, Mr. Rothafel traced and retraced his steps in and out these portals to receive chief projectionist Arthur Smith's assurance that "everything was alright." For, after all, if this department did not function properly, if a projector, spot or color flood failed in operation, or if a projectionist failed in his expected duty, there appeared a flaw in the evening's performance that could not easily be explained to those siting in the comfortable, upholstered seats of the auditorium. For most spectators are prone to forget and discount the importance of those rays of light that flash from the projection booth portholes, backstage and other points in the theatre.

The average first-night audience thinks in terms of the glamor of a new playhouse. They are impressed by the color and flesh of his or her surroundings, or the propinquity of a well-known star, and give little heed to the mechanical side of the performance. And that is the point that we've been a long time getting to. This is a projectionist's story; a story of the Roxy's premiere as viewed from the projection booth and backstage.

More than the usual number of men making up the night shift were in the main booth on the opening night. The regular shift is made up of five men. This particular night several experts from company headquarters of those who made the installations augmented the force.

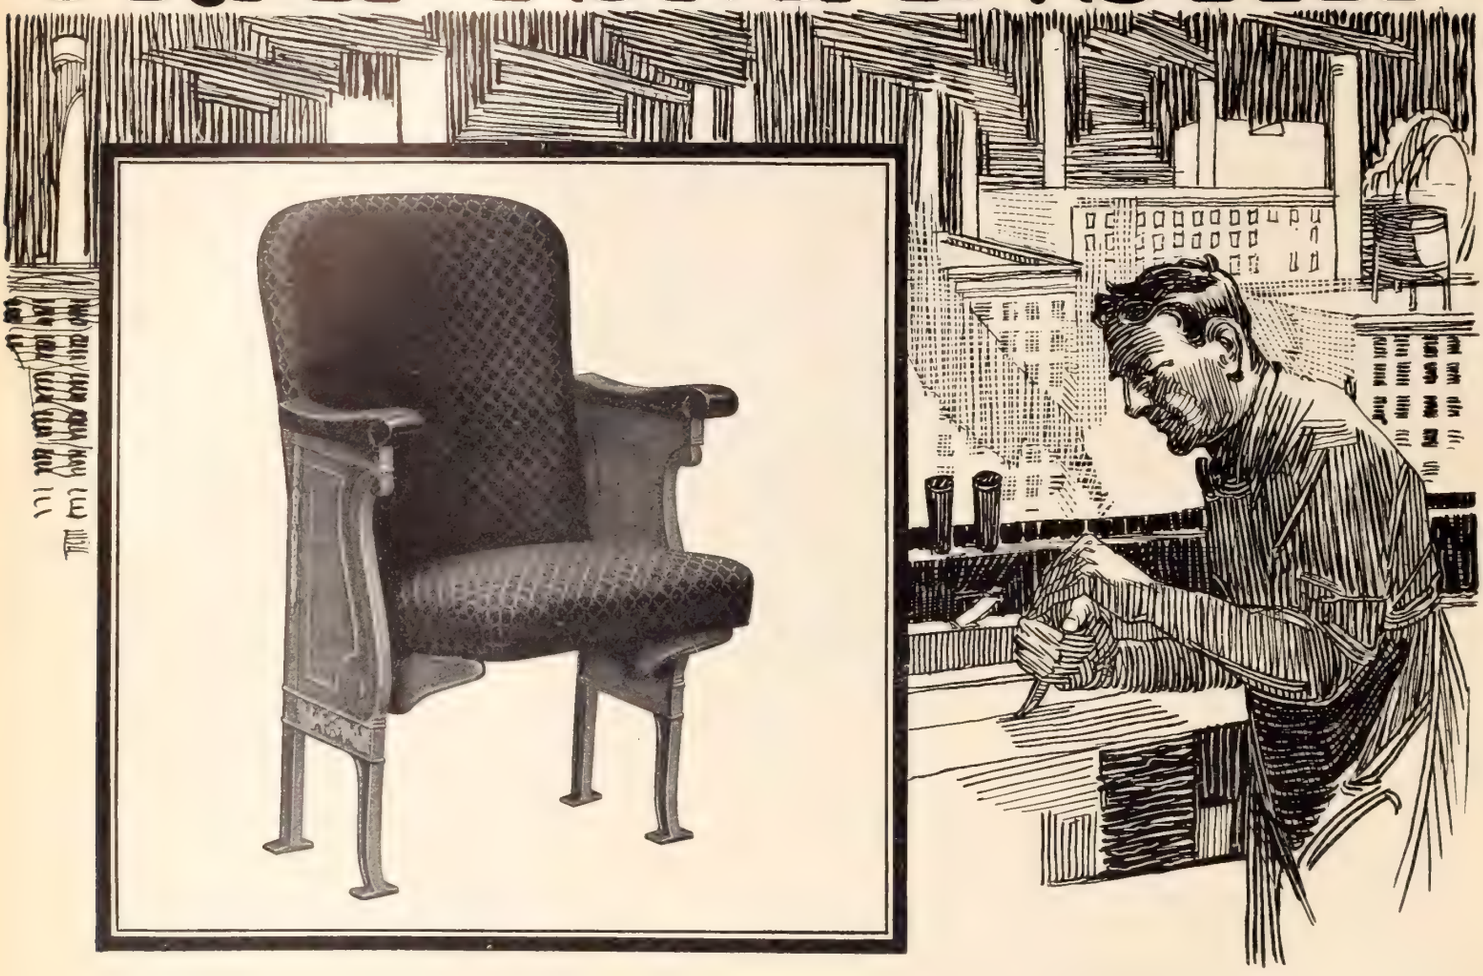
From the time the signal was received in the booth to get under way, number after number reeled off in a manner that could only be produced by an efficient and disciplined unit of of a well-organized theatre. Men darted back and forth, each one tense with the thought that all adjustments must be properly made. Floods were trained to the stage at the correct angle, every operation was effected by a corps of "hand-picked" operators.

Backstage at this time, other experts in their respective duties and under the direction of veteran Stage Manager Frank Smeador, were contributing their part to the performance. Here is another section where man-controlled mechanism must click along in a precise manner and in full co-operation with those in charge of the projection booth. "Spot" men belong to a different organization than the operators, and they too, played an important part as the presentations went on. In addition to the large, powerful floods located in the projection booth, either side of backstage is equipped with big Brenkerts and batteries of smaller spots.

While backstage, as the presentation using the blue sky background is on, let us describe the workings of this, and also

The giant cyclorama is used for both a sunrise board and for background. It couples to the organ-console at three and and is raised and lowered by means of electric motors. Its curved dimensions are enormous and it is located at the extreme rear of the stage. On the back of the "eye" is a little instrument with a small piano keyboard. Along one side of small rheostats. It is with this that the twinkling star effect is produced on the background. Small electric lights placed at different points on the background are made to blink by the piano keys—hand-manipulated by an operator. The intensity of the lights is controlled by the rheostats.

The extreme rear of the stage terminates in a sharp angle and it is there that the "effect" projector is located. It is housed in a small concrete booth in order to conform to fire laws. As the "Harbor Scene" went on, with Julius Bledsoe, the colored baritone, singing "Suwanee River," along a Manhattan waterfront, a single reel of film in this machine, projected through a transparent screen a scene of shipping and the docks. With the use of this screen, together with the angle of projection, a stereoscopic effect was produced.



Now comes the Vitaphone presentation. Back in the main projection booth, Charles Hardell, who has acted as instructor at most Vitaphone premieres, had placed a large disc record on the carrier attached at the left hand side of the Simplex machine. Directly to the left and rear of this machine is the volume control board. A single reel depicting a scene from "Carmen" and featuring Martinelli and Gordon flashed on the screen. Simultaneously, the Vitaphone attachment began to revolve, orchestral accompaniment emanating from the several amplifiers in the auditorium. The singers appeared on the screen and soon the volume of their voices filled the theatre.

First came an orchestral accompaniment and then followed the appearance of the two artists on the screen and soon a Bizet melody caught and held the attention of

Picking Highlights for Cut-Out Displays

By Joe Hirt

Art Director Morgan Lithograph Co.

THERE will be no attempt here to make this a high-brow talk on "Posters—How They Are Made." No fine phrases about "Design," "Symmetry," "Balance," "Composition," "Envelopment," "Technique," etc., etc., simply because that would be telling you what so-and-so of this-and-that academy had to say, and what he or she was taught by the master and what the master in turn was taught at such and such a school belonging to this or that period, and so on back to the immortal grand master, where work adorns the ceilings of some magnificent old-world cathedral. We'll bet that given a movie poster to make, lots of the big bugs of the ancient art world would have flopped.

After all, what does the exhibitor care how the artist went about designing, drawing and coloring his poster, or how the "stone man" uses "quarter" or "half" tints in getting his Alpine blues or rhubarb pinks? What he wants is a finished product that is a zippy, go-get-'em, box-office movie poster. He wants his "paper" to earn its salt. High art to him is something for museums; and he's right about it. And right here we want to tell you that the modern exhibitor realizes that the movie poster is in a field entirely by itself. He might use a "snipe," a half-sheet, hanger, one, three, six or twenty-four sheet, but if it doesn't hit 'em in the eye, it's useless as a poster. The up-to-the-minute exhibitor is hep to everything that makes for a good poster and that helps his house. One big bet on which he's getting a strangle-hold is the cut-out possibilities of his poster. He's wise that the last word in poster design is "Will it make a cut-out?"

He's a resourceful man, is the modern exhibitor, and he knows if he runs a big theatre in a big town that he can call upon his skilled labor (which only means someone with "artistic" taste), to do his cutting out, and if he runs a small theatre he can call upon the local handy-man for a helper. There's no town so small that it hasn't the call on someone "handy with tools."

Now let's look at these illustrations with the exhibitor, and, as the swell ad-men say, "visualize" with him.

In the head of Laura La Plante for "Butterflies in the Rain," Mr. Exhibitor sees at a glance the appeal that this alluring portrait has for the man on the street. It makes for that personal proximity that every fan craves. So he proceeds to make it more realistic—cuts out the background.

In the three-sheet of the same picture, he hops right onto the fact that everything was made of the beautiful female figure combined with the gaudy splendor of the butterfly, added to which are incidents of the film pictured on the wings.

Mr. Exhibitor will tell you that it's not always necessary to have a cut-out head or a picture for "punch-stuff." He'll take the one-sheet of "The Big Gun" and make a knock-out teaser of it, with darn little work. It'll mean more to him as a cut-out than as a flat poster slapped up on a fence or a stone wall.

Then watch him grab the six-sheet of "The Love Thrill," cut out the two couples and stand them up life-like against a dark background. We know a couple of exhibitors who will take the background part and into it cut a few zig-zag openings, flash a light on and off, behind the card to give it the effect of lightning. Another one will take the title, cut out each letter individually and hang that onto the rest of the cut-out.

He will give the one-sheet of this subject the once-over, see all the strength and vigor in the embrace and add to its pulling power by cutting away the background. "Here's something," he says, "that anybody who's human will get a thrill from."

Don't kid yourself. Mr. Exhibitor is a live showman, up to every possible trick and turn. Take the twenty-four sheet of Hoot Gibson in "Hey! Hey! Cowboy." What he'll do with that on his marquee is a caution! Here he has a life-size horse, [illegible] loping madly, hell-bent-for-election, across the top of his marquee. No hard work cutting this one out. "That's showmanship Art," says he; "no criss-cross lines; no weak joints; no fine points to bust off."

the audience. All during this time, Hardell's eyes were focussed on the control board and his ears trained to catch the tones that came from an amplifier in the booth. It is by these two devices that a check is kept on tone and volume.

All Vitaphone numbers in the Roxy undergo rehearsals. Usually, one of the staff, with a protable telephone, checks the orchestra floor and other sections for undertones and overtones. Results of these investigations are telephoned to the control room.

One thing noticeable, however, as far as Vitaphone is concerned, is the apparent simplicity of operation. Mr. Hardell is the authority for the statement that the motion picture machine operator of average intelligence can be broken in for this additional duty within a very short time. Its complexities have been exaggerated to a marked degree and the observations of the writer bear out Mr. Hardell's statement. Reducing it all to a minimum, it appears no more complex than the operation of a real good radio set.

And now—Ganbarelli and her ballet have left amid the applause of the audience—the ensemble has filled the spacious stage and trouped off—and Vitaphone's last note resounds throughout the house. We shift our eyes to another Simplex, where an operator stands ready to throw the switch which will start on its way the first reel of Gloria Swanson's, "The Love of Sunya." Backstage, things have quieted down somewhat, with the exception that props, etc., are being placed in their after-show positions. Six to seven thousand people have settled back in their comfortable chairs, whispering to one another that "Roxy" is a great showman and that the beauty of the house even exceeded their expectations. All they have to do now is to look at a very good feature-length picture.

But the boys in the projection booth still carry on.

A word or two about what "Roxy" is doing with projection—and his new screen which has caused so much controversy among film folks.

Projection is a highly important matter with Mr. Rothafel. And its importance in any theatre is stressed by this article, which strives to point out that no matter how beautiful a theatre may be, a picture show is just as good as its projection, equipment and personnel.

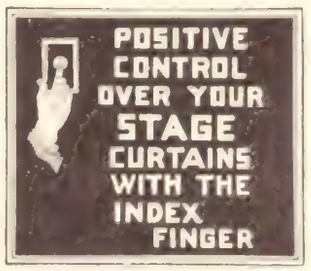
Two features of Roxy projection are claimed as out of the ordinary in the average motion picture theatre. One is: the machines are set at an angle of less than ten degrees, therefore practically eliminating distortion from that source.

In order to obtain this position it was necessary for the booth to be located in the center of the mezzanine balcony. This was accomplished at a sacrifice of two hundred seats.

The other feature is the cause of the controversy mentioned above. It has set tongues wagging around New York City; and over in Boston, a lady reporter on the "Post" quotes Gloria Swanson to the effect that "Roxy's" projection seriously detracted from her picture.

If these charges be true it is not the fault of Mr. Rothafel.

Silhouette projection, as this method of surrounding the screen's edge with a light which tapers off to darkness, is known, was adopted after a showing to a great many prominent exhibitors and other members of the industry. Practically every exhibitor acclaimed the innovation as a great stride in the right direction. The consensus of all was entirely favorable as regards its adoption. The most outstanding feature claimed for the new method was the illusion of depth, that much sought-after quality of the screen. Mr. Rothafel's experiment is an interesting departure from the usual method and every theatre owner will be interested in the world [illegible]



In addition to chief projectionist [illegible] Smith, who has been in charge of projection at most of the prominent Broadway [illegible] New York theatres of various lines, considerable praise is due William Hardy, of the National Supply Company, for his part in the installation of all apparatus.

the hemisphere, we should find one candlepower. We might even close the opening still more, and should still get a reading of one candlepower, but it is obvious that a considerable amount of the total light must have been absorbed: still our reading in the one direction would not be affected.

As we come to the next term, we have an approach to a unit or figure which indicates the total amount of light given off by light source. That is, if we average the candlepower strength in every direction around the light source, we obtain a figure designated as the "mean spherical candlepower"—that is, the average of the candlepowers in every direction. The next two terms, which are really the most important of all, are the "lumen" and the "footcandle." The lumen may briefly be described or defined as the unit of measure of quantity of light. The footcandle could be defined as the unit of measure of illumination. At this point it might be well to explain that there really is a great deal of difference between light and illumination—light being known as the cause, and illumination as the effect produced by this cause.

It is logical that we must have light before illumination can be produced. Therefore, we should consider the "lumen" or measure of light before the "footcandle" or measure of illumination. However, by putting the cart before the horse, so to speak, it may be possible to give in a few words just what we mean by these two terms.

We are all by this time familiar with the ordinary standard candle. If we place a piece of paper one foot away from this standard candle, we shall have one footcandle of illumination on this paper. We know by mathematical calculation that it takes one lumen of light distributed over one square foot of area to produce one footcandle of illumination. One can easily get an idea of the value of one footcandle, or just how much illumination is represented by one footcandle, by actually holding the paper one foot away from the standard candle.

These units of measure, no matter how abstract they may seem at first acquaintance, have a definite concrete meaning, and can be measured by actual instruments. For the theatre manager the most useful of these measuring instruments is the "footcandle meter." This is a handy, compact, portable instrument which measures in footcandles the intensity of illumination on surfaces.

The uses of the footcandle meter in the motion picture theatre are many. It can be used to measure the intensity of illumination upon the screen and in all parts of the theatre. The intensities found can be compared with lists of standard theatre illumination intensities and the adequacy of the lighting can thus be checked up.

Perhaps the most important use of the footcandle meter in the theatre is in connection with maintenance. Unless the lamps and reflectors or enclosing glassware are cleaned regularly, dust collects and cuts off much of the light, so that in some cases only one-half of the amount of light that is paid for may be actually effective. The footcandle meter affords the best possible means of determining how much the intensity of illumination has dropped off and consequently how often the lighting equipment must be cleaned.

Another lighting term about which we hear much is "glare." Glare is something which must be avoided or reduced to a satisfactory minimum if we are to have satisfactory illumination. Glare hinders our seeing, is certainly annoying, and may be harmful. It is light improperly applied. Unfortunately, we have no definite unit of measure of glare, inasmuch as it is made up of several factors. Glare depends upon brightness of light source, total flux of light directed toward the eye, position of light source, and contrast between light source and background.

Diffusing the light is one means of relieving glare. This can be accomplished by means of enlarging the apparent area of the light source. The best example of this is the placing of a glass enclosing globe about the lamp. Reducing the contrast between the light source and its background also tends to reduce glare. This subject, which is an important one, will be developed more fully in later articles of this series.

The properties of reflection and diffusion should also be thoroughly understood. With regard to reflection, we have generally three kinds, namely "regular reflection," which might be illustrated by the type received from the ordinary mirror; "spread reflection"—that obtained from the ordinary

TEAR-PROOF

SILVERSHEET

"It Just CAN'T Be Torn"

IT HAS A CANVAS BASE

The Tear-Proof Silversheet is built on a non-tearable, abuse-resisting, puncture-proof canvas base. This fabric is tough enough to resist the damage ordinarily inflicted by vandals, hoodlums, or unavoidable back-stage accidents that would ruin a screen not having a canvas base.

SPECIFICATION-BUILT SURFACE

The surface of the Tear-Proof Silversheet is specification-built by J. Otto Knobel, builder of 10,000 successful screens, to meet the individual requirements of your theatre. This is the same surface that has made the regular Silversheet so famous. The Tear-Proof Silversheet is the ONLY screen made with a specification-built surface on a canvas base fabric.

GENUINE REDWOOD FRAME

With each Tear-Proof Silversheet we furnish a genuine California Redwood tension frame. This frame, the result of twelve years' development, is fitted with our well-known steel jacket tension device, which gives it unlimited life and does away with the necessity of ever boring new holes for the tension bolts.

ABSOLUTE SATISFACTION GUARANTEED

We positively guarantee the Tear-Proof Silversheet screen to give you complete satisfaction in every respect, or we will refund your money. No "ifs" or "buts" about it. We can give this guarantee because we know that Silversheet has made good wherever it has been used. No other screen maker furnishes such a guarantee. And remember, too, the Tear-Proof Silversheet costs no more than ordinary screens.

A Review of the Latest Developments in Theatre Devices

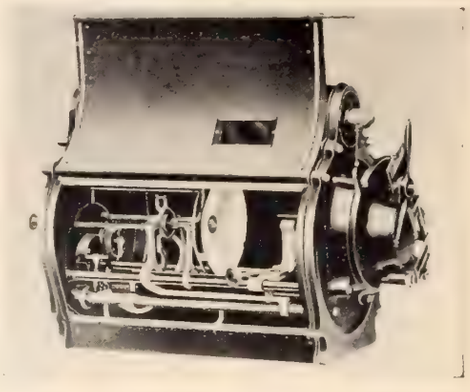
Simplicity and Durability Feature New Strong Reflector Arc

IT is comparatively easy for a mechanical designer, possessed of an idea and given carte blanche in the manner of construction, to turn out a device, which, from the standpoint of performance, will be satisfactory. It is an altogether different proposition, however, to take the same device and so fashion it that the component parts, as finally used, will represent the absolute minimum consistent with thoroughly satisfactory operation.

Such work calls for attention to detail and a careful minding of Ps and Qs on the part of the designer.

From the standpoint of simplicity the Strong Reflector Arc (Fig. 4) is outstanding; yet, the construction is such that durability is one of the outstanding features.

This idea of simplified construction has not been confined to mechanics alone, but also has been extended to include such auxiliary devices as the automatic arc control and the stereopticon attachment.



Optically, there is nothing new in the Strong lamp, as it uses the now well-known elliptic mirror for the primary interception of light from the arc crater, which results in the formation of an evenly-illuminated "spot" on the aperture, free from the effects of spherical aberration. The resultant screen illumination is correspondingly even from edge to edge of picture, and entirely free from dark corners.

The outstanding feature of the Strong reflector arc consists of an automatic arc control, which has been so simplified as to construction, that it consists of nothing more than a special electric motor, a train of reducing gears, by means of which the motor actuates the feeding of the carbons, and a small circular wound resistance, for controling the length of arc as finally established.

Briefly, the operation of the Strong arc control is as follows: The motor field consists of a compound winding, made up of two separate sets of coils. One set of coils is of high resistance and low current capacity, and is connected directly across the line so that it establishes a constant magnetic flux, which tends to cause the motor armature to rotate in a given direction.

The second set of field coils is of low resistance and high current capacity (carrying the full flow of current through the arc) and is connected in series with the carbons so that the intensity of the magnetic flux established by these coils depends directly upon the strength of the current flowing through the electric arc. These coils are so wound that the magnetic field set up by them directly opposes that set up by the first set of coils and the general design is such that when carbons are burning at the desired separation distance, the magnetic field from one set of coils exactly counteracts that of the other set, with the result that the motor armature stands still.

As the carbons are burned away, the voltage across the arc naturally increases, the current through the arc decreases, and this diminished current causes the magnetic flux threading the high current field coils to weaken and be over-balanced by the flux from the constant current coils.

The Strong Reflector Arc

A force is thus excited on the motor armature, which causes it to rotate and feed the carbons together until the two magnetic fields are again balanced.

Should the carbons feed together too closely, a current higher than normal will flow through the arc and high current coils, and cause the magnetic field from these windings to over-balance that from the constant current coils and the motor will reverse itself until the carbons have been separated to the correct distance.

As operated in practice, the control is so sensitive that the motor feeds continuously, since the response to the gradual burning away of the carbons is nearly instantaneous.

Accurate alignment of the carbons is maintained by means of a 5½-in. by 11 in. three-point suspension bearing of the carbon carriage, so arranged that no ash or grit can fall on them. The ash from the arc falls on a removable receptacle, which covers the entire bottom of the lamp.

A Printing Plant That Cuts Costs on Mail Pieces

DO printing costs provide the stumbling block to a free use of direct-mail advertising, dodgers, heralds, and other matter which you know could help you to build up a bigger patronage for your shows?

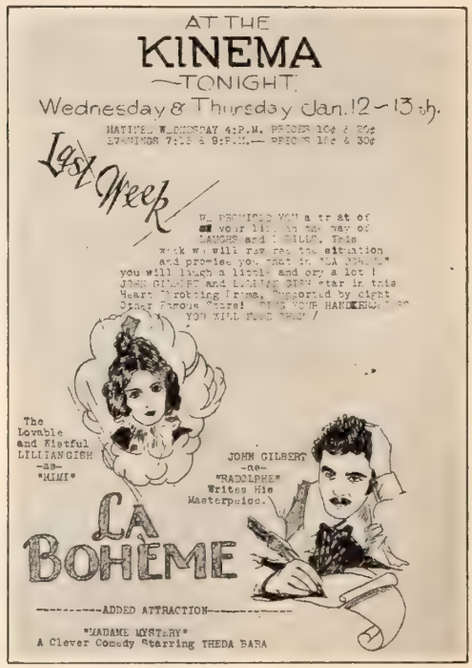
If you are the manager of a theatre in a town under five thousand, the chances are that your answer to this question will be in the affirmative, as in that case you are but one of hundreds of community theatre managers who recognize the absolute need of this form of advertising but know by experience in paying the printing bills that the enterprise meets defeat solely through the cost of its production.

The solution to the problem has been found by several managers. One, and possibly he stands as the most notable example of the group of managers who have found "the way out" of this difficulty, is A. L. Stallings, manager of the Kinema Theatre, Richfield, Utah.

For several years this theatre has advertised on a large scale basis, with programs, heralds, dodgers, etc., and all of them produced in the Kinema's own printing plant—a plant, by the way, which is equipped with an Electric Automatic Mimeograph.

The machinery for this plant paid for itself in eighteen months of use, producing programs and other advertising materials. This theatre blankets its field with advertising of proved selling-power, and the cost of its production is extremely small. It issues at frequent intervals an elaborate program, with local advertising and page displays selling feature pictures booked for future showing. These display ads incorporate the punch-lines and illustrations taken from the cream of the campaign-book layouts, both text and illustrations being done with a mimeograph. "The cost of our Xmas program, twenty-eight pages, without labor, was $19.50," says Mr. Stallings in a report on this phase of his work written especially for "THE SHOWMAN."

"That figure represents the outlay for 750 copies of the issue, in which we carried $83 worth of local advertising. We mailed the program in special envelopes, also printed by mimeograph. The amount, however, does not cover labor charges, which are very small.



"We have in our employ a young man who is a good letterer, can draw almost anything, and he does all stencil work required for our advertising. However, almost anyone can make a good stencil by tracing the object to be reproduced. If a dodger is desired, the illustrations and lettering can be found in the campaign books issued by distributors.

"As a check-up on the Xmas program, we redeemed each book on Sunday, January 9, giving one free admission for each book, this offer being made several days after mailing. About 30% of the programs were returned to us, which proved that our material is being read and preserved.

"We use our mimeograph for dating heralds, for printing special tickets, dodgers, prepare our mailing addresses on gummed paper, and many other things.

"Each week we issue a Hang Me Up Program, and about five or six times a year we put out a thirty to thirty-six page program.

"I am sure that any theatre in a town under 5,000 can use printing of this kind, get as good if not better results than with a printer, and can save sixty per cent on the cost of producing this form of advertising material."

A mailing piece produced at the Kinema Theatre plant to exploit La Boheme (M-G-M) and typical of the effective advertising issued by Manager A. L. Stallings painted aluminum surface, and "diffuse reflection"—that obtained from an ordinary mat surface similar to white blotting paper.

With regular reflection, light can be accurately controlled. With spread reflection, the distribution can be controlled somewhat, although there is considerable scattering of the rays. With diffuse reflection, the light rays are thoroughly broken up and spread about and there is little control of the distribution of light.

Transmission of light also follows very closely the laws of reflection, except, of course, that rays of light pass through the material rather than being reflected back from it.

The purpose of this treatment has been to provide a suitable foundation for the discussions of theatre lighting that are to follow. With an understanding of these fundamental terms in mind, no one will have any difficulty in appreciating the full significance of the statements made and the problems discussed in the remainder of the articles. In any case, these few explanations of important terms will provide a valuable reference background for the discussions that will appear in the next few issues of this magazine.

HERTNER TransVerteR

EXPERIENCE COUNTS

THE TRANSVERTER is so fundamentally correct in design, so sturdy in construction, so quiet and efficient in operation, that with merely normal care and cleanliness, it will continue to operate year after year. Transverters have been in use since 1915—over twelve years—and these earliest installations are giving the same faithful service today as when first installed.

The Transverter produces steady, direct current and hence the arc is quiet and constant.

It is by far the best known and the most popular Motor Generator on the market.

Every Part of the Theatre Without Ducts

Arctic Nu-Air provides complete control of air-distribution without the use of expensive ducts. A simple adjustment of its ingenious outlet control at the time of installation assures a uniform distribution of air throughout the house at all times.

The Dual-Directional-Deflector is the secret of air-direction control that no other system can give you. It is an exclusive feature of Arctic Nu-Air, invented by our own engineers and fully protected by U. S. Letters Patent. With it you can direct the air up or down, to the right or left, or diffuse it in all directions. Without it you must resort to costly ducts or concentrate the output of air on only a small section of your theatre with resultant discomfort to most of your patrons.

newspaper men having no showmanship experience will invariably just print at random any stories without any regard to their value as business pullers. Another thing of importance is—don't go entirely on the suggestions of the press books. Remember the boys who get out these books do so in a general manner as they have to cover the high spots of the entire nation. Your community may be different while different ideas and stories will appeal to them more so than in some other town. You know your town better than they do. Use the press books by all means—but as an aid in your campaign and not as the campaign itself. You'll find that careful thinking along this line and not just hurried clipping and pasting will bring in bigger results in the check-up at the end of the run of the picture.

A manager or a press agent in many cases will have to stretch a point or two to the public, but they should never mislead the boys of the press. If one breaks faith with the newspapers they will have a hard row to hoe. Tell them the truth about a picture or of a big break that's coming up on any exceptional news story. They will like you a whole lot better and treat you whiter in the long run. Battle them whenever it's necessary and "hound" them for publicity right along, but never lie to them. If you get an original idea on a publicity stunt go after the papers for all you are worth until you get it planted with one or the other of them. But first be sure in your own mind that the stunt has the big "knock-out" punch in it and will get the business in your box-office and not drive it away. If it doesn't stand up to this sane analysis—don't pull it. I think after all is said and done that the best publicity is "straight publicity." By this I mean carefully written stories that have nothing but the selling punches of the attraction with cuts from the picture, or the stars of the picture, illustrating the articles. Sell thoroughly the show with straightforward facts and the business will take care of itself, but sell the show every single day and not just the opening performances—remind them that you still have it day by day.

I think that one of the greatest handicaps to picture theatre publicity is the over-selling of forthcoming attractions. If the manager is over-sold on a forthcoming attraction, which, by the way, he has not seen, and the picture comes along and turns out to be a side show instead of "the greatest show on earth" he has been led to expect, he passes the buck along to his press agent. Realizing that he has a basket of lemons he informs the press agent to sell them as peaches through the columns of the press. This is bad. It soon educates the public to have little faith in theatrical publicity and kills one of the greatest assets for pulling business that the theatres have.

I fully realize that all pictures can't be "the greatest show on earth" and I also realize that the managers have to endeavor to get some of the money back on these "weak sisters." But when you know they're not so big, don't pile on the glowing adjectives. A picture that's a "flop" from the time it leaves the cutting-room is a "flop" until it returns to the junk heap again. I have known some managers and a few press agents who are so egotistical that they will tell you that they can put over any picture. I have watched these "Houdinis" of the show game, and still have as yet to see them perform any of their marvelous miracles.

Publicity That Builds Goodwill

tinuing this policy, obtaining word-of-mouth advertising without the cost of billboards and tack cards. But the thing of most value, that cannot be measured in dollars and cents, is building good-will. The consistent building of good-will is the corner-stone of the foundation upon which the business of the Palace Theatre has been built. That alone, I believe, has done more to turn a "white elephant" into a successful institution than all the money spent in excessive advertising the year before.

Another publicity campaign of importance was secured with the aid of the Chamber of Commerce. It was looking for a medium to attract attention to a membership drive for its junior organization. Mr. Jennings gave them the use of the Palace Theatre for one week. He booked an indoor circus. The Junior Chamber actively sponsored the show.

The American Legion, with Indianapolis the national headquarters, planned a national convention at which General Pershing and General Gouraud, the one-armed hero of France, were to attend. Mr. Jennings offered the use of the theatre each morning as a meeting place. They accepted. Not one story appeared in the newspapers which did not mention the Palace Theatre.

During the Florida boom, Indianapolis business men were much concerned about the number of people leaving the city. Mr. Jennings felt the pulse of public sentiment and suggested exploitation methods for boosting Indianapolis. This resulted in the city administration launching a campaign for a "Greater Indianapolis," with headquarters next-door to the Palace Theatre lobby.

Desiring to have the theatre attract some notice during the Christmas season, an arrangement was made with the Indianapolis Star to take care of the city's poor by maintaining a relief and cheer station. This station was next door to the Palace Theatre lobby, known as the Palace-Star Christmas Cheer Station. The newspaper co-operated by sending a feature writer to the theatre to write a daily story, published on the front page under a two-column head, with the Palace Theatre name appearing regularly in the headline. These stories ran twenty-three days. The theatre and newspaper gave relief to 2,000 children. Everything was donated by an interested reading public. Public spirited business men and industries donated about $1,000 worth of new toys, many hundreds of pounds of nuts, candies and food.

Citizens have welcomed the theatre with a new pride and are automatic boosters. The newspapers also welcomed the opportunity for real local news.

Pick up any newspaper at hand and check it carefully for legitimate local news. It will not exceed ten per cent. Real news is at a premium. Editors do not ask questions about advertising space when news is at stake.

The Syncrovertor Is Saving This Theatre 25% in Current Costs of Projection

HOW long will you continue to pay this extra money for converting A C to D C for projection purpose?

The owners of the Hollywood Theatre at Pottsville, Penna., found on actual test that the Liberty Syncrovertor effected a positive saving of 25% in the cost of converting A C to D C and promptly had one installed. Mr. C. Harold Koon, Chief of Projection, states that the Syncrovertor "is the most compact, efficient and economical A C to D C machine that it has ever been my pleasure to handle."

Remember, too, that the transformer of the Syncrovertor is the machine's own emergency unit. If the motor ceases to function the transformer automatically furnishes the current required by a second arc so that there is no interruption whatever—not even a flicker on the change-over.

The Liberty Syncrovertor is made in four types, complete with ballasts, controls, meters, etc. Present and prospective theatre owners and Projectionists are urged to write us for complete specifications and prices.

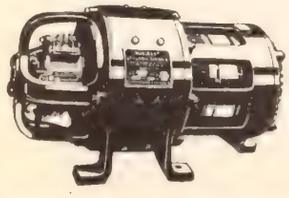
Theatre Building Brisk in Northwest Territory

ANNOUNCEMENTS of new theatres, changes in ownership, and plans for the renovating and refurnishing of established houses, still continue to pour out of Seattle and the entire Pacific Northwest. In addition to the Orpheum circuit's Westlake Orpheum, Famous Players' Seattle Theatre, and Jensen-VonHerberg's Bagdad Theatre, all under construction at the present time, recent reports bring forth the following items:

Jensen-VonHerberg have reopened the Venetian Theatre, built two months ago by Joe Gargano, and now operates it as a second-run neighborhood theatre with full film programs and specialty acts on the stage. Leroy V. Johnson, former manager of the Liberty Theatre, and now general manager of the Jensen-VonHerberg circuit of neighborhood houses, is temporarily assuming management of the house.

Pacific Northwest Theatres, Inc., announce that the Neptune Theatre in the University district, managed by W. W. Cooley, has been renamed the Liberty Theatre. The huge Liberty sign which formerly graced what is now the United Artists Theatre is now a part of the University building.

Ives and Ruth, theatre operators of this territory, announce that they are going to spend more than $30,000 in the remodeling of their Empire Theatre at Anacortes. The house will be closed for several weeks, during the installation of a big Wurlitzer organ. The same firm also contemplates closing the Rex Theatre at Mount Vernon to remodel and install an organ.



Bruno Hollenbeck, son of Julius Hollenbeck, of Linden, Wash., last week acquired ownership of the Rose Theatre at Sumas, Wash.

Benjamin W. Fey and his son, owners of the Renton Theatre, a suburban house in this city, have purchased the Grand Theatre, the opposition house, from C. M. Dunn.

B. N. Barrett, who recently took over the Ideal Theatre at Stanwood, Wash., has completed improvements that cost several thousand dollars.

"Cap" E. A. Lathrop, showman of the Alaska territory, announces that he plans to build the first "class A" building in Fairbanks. It will be a combined hotel and theatre building, the theatre seating approximately 1,200 persons, according to preliminary plans.

The Washington Theatre Enterprises, Inc., of which Caspar Fisher is the Seattle director, announce that they will erect a 1,400-seat suburban theatre at 85th Avenue and Greenwood Street, near the present Grand Theatre operated by Dave Gross. The company is also reported to be building the new downtown house at Seventh and Olive Way, said to be a Fox or Grauman enterprise.

How Movietone Pictures Are Produced and Presented

outside noises to penetrate either room while a picture is being taken. In order to insure this complete isolation, each of the studios is wholly enclosed within a double wall. These walls are slightly over one foot in thickness, including an interior air space of six inches. Either side of this air space are three-inch walls of gypsum blocks and to the outside of each of these layers is an additional thickness of a patented material of cellular texture. On the inside of the studio walls this material is covered with heavy draperies of a sound-absorbing nature. Other similar draperies are hung about the studios. By this means, perfect acoustic conditions have been obtained.

The air in the rooms is changed every three minutes, purified by a washing process, heated in the winter, refrigerated in the summer, so that a constant temperature is always maintained. This equipment places Movietone in a position to produce pictures in large quantities, and it is undoubtedly one of the most essential and valuable contributions to the successful production of talking pictures.

The production of a Movietone picture does not greatly differ from the ordinary motion picture production of a similar subject. Aside from the fact that the camera is motor driven and that it is connected by wire with the telephonic apparatus, there is little difference between the recording of picture and voice by a Movietone camera and the ordinary picture recording in a motion picture studio.

In the Movietone process standard motion picture film is employed. On this film is recorded both the moving picture and its sound accompaniment, whether the latter be vocal or instrumental. In its basic elements the process is simplicity itself. It consists, briefly, in photographing variations in light intensity on movie picture film. This is accomplished by collecting the sounds to be recorded through the use of a microphone, which has the property of changing sound variations into electrical variations. These electrical variations are amplified, and in turn vary the intensity of the recording light. This recording, or "aeo" light, so-called because of an alkaline earth oxide deposit on the filament, is high in actinic values.

It is contained in a glass tube which is inserted in the back of the camera in such a manner that the variations in light intensity fall directly upon a narrow edge of the negative film on which the motion picture is also simultaneously being recorded.

The presentation of a Movietone subject to the audience in the theatre or auditorium is in effect a reversal of this process. The standard film, containing both picture and sound in a photographic record, is run through a standard moving picture projection machine, to which has been attached a sound reproducing unit. This sound reproducing unit includes a light which is focused by a lens system through a narrow slit onto the sound record of the film. As the sound record on the film passes by the slit, it interrupts the constant light shining through it, and sets up light variations corresponding directly to those photographed. These changes in light variation then fall on a photoelectric cell, which changes the light variations back to electrical variations. These electrical variations are then amplified and carried by wire from the projection booth to the screen and reproduced on the screen through loudspeakers.

In the Fox-Case process, aside from its own various particular patents, such, for instance, as the "aeo" tube, certain telephonic aparatus is necessary. This embraces the use of such devices as amplifiers, microphones, loud-speakers, both in recording and reproducing. Wherever telephonic apparatus is employed by Movietone the devices of the Western Electric Company are used. These are the devices which were acquired by Vitaphone under an exclusive license from Western Electric, and the use of which by Movietone is covered by an agreement between Fox-Case Corporation and The Vitaphone Corporation. Since the telephonic equipment, which is the principal part of an installation, is common to both Vitaphone and Movietone, reproducing attachments for these two systems are now being so designed that both can be put on the one projection machine.

In "Held By the Law," Mr. Exhibitor says, "Sure fire stuff. Look at that wow of a hand when it's cut out, standing out up on my marquee or hanging underneath, clutching its victims in a horrible grip." He knows also that the three-sheet has great cut-out stuff in it.

The three-sheet of Reginald Denny in "The Cheerful Fraud" gives the showman-exhibitor a triple header. Here he cuts around the head and leaves the other three sides square. It gives him a strong, forceful cut-out portrait, a smashing title and a pictorial tail-piece.

In the twenty-four sheet of "The Wrong

A display effect gained by placing flasher light behind clasped hands in Universal poster for "The Love Thrill."

Mr. Wright," our live exhibitor immediately spots the realism which stops 'em dead. He knows that here he has the unusual, and he makes the most of it. The letters are cut out and tacked onto the bottom of the poster, leaving the silhouetted figures standing out with all their punch.

Oodles and oodles of matter could be written about posters and perhaps sometime we will give you a real high-brow talk on the art of Poster Designing. But right now we're interested in your getting the showmanship angle of poster cut-outs. You see, there's no find-the-bird-in-this-picture stuff, no cross-word puzzle stuff, no jig-saw problems; just simple, strong, telling posters that anybody could cut out who is handy with—yes, a compass or keyhole saw.

ATTRACT SUMMER PATRONS

Keep Your Theatre Cool With a

SupremeBlower

Considered from every angle—air volume, velocity, efficiency, quietness, construction, price—this blower is just what its name implies—SUPREME.

The all-steel Supreme wheel, the heart of the blower, is absolutely quiet in operation. Its ten spoke spiders, extra heavy, scientifically shaped blades and perfectly balanced construction does away entirely with vibration and objectionable noise. You will look in vain for a wheel of this character in other blowers.

POINTS OF SUPERIORITY

- Cooling capacity, 30,000 to 40,000 cubic feet per minute when driven by 5 H. P. motor. Ample for the average theatre of 200 to 800 seats.
- Housing is uniform, kiln-dried stock with metal scroll. Neatly finished in black with wheel in contrasting red. Sturdiness and long life are inbuilt.
- Horton Variable Speed Pulley Drive can be furnished if desired. This allows any speed range from 100 to 350 R. P. M. and permits the year 'round use of the blower as a ventilator.
- Installation takes only a few hours, but the benefits last for years. Many exhibitors tell us that the Supreme Blower has paid for itself in the extra profits made possible in a single month.
- Price $165 f.o.b. St. Louis. Standardization and volume production makes it possible for us to sell Supreme Blowers at this low price.
- Terms if desired. Install the Supreme Blower now before hot weather comes, and get the benefits while paying for it.

Earn More and Save More

IT is not often that you can increase your earnings by decreasing your expenditures. But that is exactly what you accomplish when you instal Incandescent Lamp Projection.

You improve your projection because the Incandescent Lamp gives light of a tonal quality that is easy on the eyes of the audience, and that gives pictures greater depth and cleaner outlines; light that never flickers or varies in intensity because the light source is permanently fixed. And improved projection means better business.

At the same time you decrease your expenditures because Incandescent Lamp Projection requires fully 50% less current than ordinary arc light projection.

If your theatre has a seating capacity of 1000 or less and your "throw" is not more than 120 feet you can take advantage of this sure way of increasing your profits.

Earn more and save more by installing Incandescent Lamp Projection. And be sure the lamps you use are of the highest standard of quality. Insist on Edison Mazda Lamps. There are none better.

German Discovery Enables Real Night Photography

Another German technical advancement which is likely to be of revolutionary importance is announced by H. Frankel, Berlin correspondent of "Motion Picture News" a method of "hypersensitizing" motion picture film so that pictures may be taken at night under ordinary lighting conditions, without special lamps or lenses.

The two cameramen, Mois Sachs and Reimar Kuntze, have found a method which increases the sensitiveness of the raw stock to light by about 40 times, the only drawback being that the film must be used within three or four weeks after preparation.

Frankel reports seeing night shots taken in Berlin and Paris streets, without special lenses or lights, in which persons in passing street cars could be recognized and the license numbers on moving automobiles read. A Berlin revue was photographed in the theatre during an actual performance, without extra lighting, and well lighted scenes were shown which were taken in a room with ordinary electric lights.

The possibilities of this are obvious, and the cameramen are now negotiating with a large raw-stock firm for the application of the method commercially.

Keith Forbids Vitaphone Appearances By Acts

Vaudeville artists who accept Vitaphone engagements will come under the ban of the Keith-Albee offices, according to announcement this week, the K-A interests maintaining that this damages their box office value at the variety house. A similar attitude was taken some time ago on radio broadcasts, and the new contract is understood to forbid both radio and talking films.

The Loew circuit, on the contrary, takes the attitude that the Vitaphone appearance is O.K., provided that the act uses different material when it appears in person in a Loew house.

S. L. Warner, of Vitaphone, replying to the statement from J. J. Murdock, general manager of K-A, stated that the Vitaphone would make these acts much more widely popular than ever before, and that the only vaudeville turns in which that company would be interested were too big to worry about such threats. He also pointed out that the vaudeville circuits were only too glad to obtain motion picture stars for personal appearances in their houses when they were available.

Associated T. O., Indiana, Files Incorporation Articles

Articles of incorporation for the Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana, an organization for mutual benefit of theatre proprietors, were filed with Secretary of State Frederick E. Schortemeier, Indianapolis, Friday. The association will have no capital stock.

A. C. Zaning, a director, explained that the association which has existed some time, has developed, warranting incorporation. Headquarters have been established in the Wimer Building with C. B. Trotter of Indianapolis as manager. Frank J. Rembusch is president. Directors are: U. V. Young, Gary; J. N. Wycoff, Terre Haute; Leonard Sowers, Muncie; William Brenner, Winchester; Charles Metzger, Jean Marks and Zaning, all of Indianapolis.

Publix Has 25 Percent Interest in New Lieber Indianapolis House

A DEAL closed this week gives Publix Theatres a twenty-five percent. interest in the Indiana Theatre now under construction in Indianapolis which is owned by the Circle Theatre Company, Robert Lieber, president of First National Pictures, being the head. The house has a seating capacity of 3,500 and is being erected at a cost of $1,300,000. It is located on West Washington Street in the downtown section of the city. June first is announced as the opening date.

This arrangement gives Publix an outlet in Indianapolis. The deal does not affect the Circle Theatre, which continues under the same management as at present.

Hays For Amendment to Constitution

Would Guarantee Screen Complete Freedom as Enjoyed by Press and Speech

WILL H. HAYS, in an article on "Censorship of the Movies" in the April issue of "Review of Reviews," suggests the possibility that the Federal Constitution may some day be amended to guarantee freedom of the motion picture screen as freedom of speech and the press is now guaranteed. Mr. Hays roundly denounces censorship, saying "To release the product of one's brain only after it has been strained through the sieve of a censor and has received his imprimatur, is a discouragement and an affront to conscientious men."

Had the motion picture been known when the Constitution was written it would undoubtedly have received the same rights as the press, for "motion pictures are but visualized speech and thought," he states. Mr. Hays next points out the influence of pictures on people throughout the country and [illegible] producers with the resultant desire to learn what the people want and then providing that which is asked.

"The tendency to censor motion pictures, books, all forms of expression, is a mark of the times. Then, too, censors have their own prejudices," he continues, setting forth several examples of petty discrimination by censors. As an example of the ineffectiveness of censorship Mr. Hays pointed out that though Chicago passed a city ordinance twelve years ago providing for censorship of pictures with consequent elimination from productions of scenes showing hold-ups, bootleggers, etc., no one says that it has become a model city because of the prohibitions.

"That motion picture entertainment is wholesome is proved by the fact that its [illegible] —they want wholesome entertainment—but they do not want censors to say what shall and shall not be shown to them on the screen," states Mr. Hays. "The liberty that is asked for motion pictures is not license in any sense—what America asks is that picture producers be given the right to exercise their moral responsibilities."

He [illegible] tures on children asking if juvenile delinquency is more prevalent "in a state where there is no censorship law than in one where such a law prevails. Of course not. Development of character, not censorship, is needed," states the article.

"As far as the motion picture industry is concerned, the whole matter of political censorship is a mere incident. The industry's business is to make better pictures all the time. Like other Americans, we see censorship as un-American, unnecessary, and ineffective. The people do not want it, [illegible] will want it. The industry is concerned [illegible] inspiration that lie in good entertainment. That is the job we are filling. Frequently we make mistakes. We [illegible] ward, the step is in the right direction, the aims and the purposes are high."

Schader Leaves Variety To Join West Coast

FRED SCHADER veteran member of the staff of "Variety," has been appointed by Harold B. Franklin, Director of Advertising and Publicity for West Coast Theatres, Inc. He will leave for Los Mangeles on March 28.

One of the most famous and brilliant of Broadway newspapermen, Freddie Schader has been in the show business all his life, either as publicity man or writer. He numbers his friends by the hundreds.

A testimonial dinner was given to Freddie Wednesday night by Sime Silverman, publisher of Variety. Among those who spoke were Nathan Burkan, Supreme Court Justice Aaron J. Levy, and the guest of honor.

Carthay Circle Theatre, Los Angeles, Fox Show House for Eighteen Months

FRED A. MILLER, managing director of the Carthay Circle Theatre, Los Angeles, this week signed a contract with Fox Films, the terms providing for the showing at the Carthay Circle of three Fox special productions. These, in addition to "What Price Glory," now in its nineteenth week at that house, ties up the theatre with Fox product for the next eighteen months from the signing of the contract, says James R. Grainger, general sales manager of the film company, who handled the negotiations for Fox. The three productions are "7th Heaven," "Sunrise," and "Carmen."

Mr. Miller plans to run the productions in the order indicated as above. Frank Borzage directed the film version of the John Golden stage play, "7th Heaven"; Charles Farrell and Janet Gaynor play the leads. Miss Gaynor is also the heroine of "Sunrise," F. W. Murnau's first American production, in which George O'Brien has the male lead. Dolores Del Rio and Victor McLaglen have the leading roles in "Carmen," which was directed by Raoul Walsh.

Brown Bullish on Europe

F. B. O. Executive, Back from Tour, Sees Expansion in Business There to Benefit All

EXPANSION in the European motion picture field will be greater than any one realizes, and will benefit both American and European companies, in the opinion of Colvin W. Brown, vice-president of F.B.O., in charge of foreign distribution, who has just returned from a three months' stay in England, France, Germany and Italy in the interests of that concern.

"I don't believe anyone is optimistic enough on the future of those countries," he declared this week. "As soon as certain handicaps are removed, the growth will be enormous, and this will work out to the benefit of everyone. I look for increased competition from European production, but the growth in the total volume of business will be so great that American companies will still be able to expand. There will be room enough and business enough for all.

"Theatres will be the controlling factor, and the only reason new construction is not larger is the high taxation on theatre operation and the difficulty of financing motion picture ventures. Taxes will slowly but steadily decline as the years go by, and some method of financing will ultimately be worked out, I am certain.

"Banks in Europe will not finance any phase of motion picture production, distribution or exhibition, as they will here in America. This is a great handicap, and is particularly noticeable in England, but eventually means will be worked out whereby organized private capital will make rapid expansion in all departments possible."

Mr. Brown reported himself as well pleased with conditions as he found them concerning the distribution of F.B.O. product in Europe. The affiliation with Ideal in England is working out very well, as is that with Emelka in Germany.

Roxy Open; Broadway Off

New House Goes Over $125,000 on First Week; All Others But Capitol Show Decline

ALL of the Broadway houses except the Capitol showed a decline in business last week, during the first seven days' operation of the Roxy Theatre in New York. Losses in the long-run, two-dollar pictures were particularly noticeable. It is of course impossible to say just how much of this is due to Lent and other factors, but in view of the uniformity of the decline it would seem obvious that the Roxy is having its effect.

Takings in 18 Broadway houses last week, according to the best figures available, were almost $499,000, including more than $125,000 at the Roxy—a world's record likely to stand for years to come. More than 157,000 persons paid to see the new theatre during seven days, the population of a fair sized city. The other houses included in the half-million-dollar gross are the Astor, Broadway, Cameo, Capitol, Central, Cohan, Colony, Criterion, Embassy, Harris, Hippodrome, Paramount, Rialto, Rivoli, Selwyn, Strand and Warners.

The two houses figured to be most in competition with the Roxy were the Capitol and the Strand. The Capitol showed an increase of more than $9,000, while the Strand had only a comparatively small decline over its previous week.

Fourteen of the houses (excluding the Broadway, Cohan, Hippodrome and Roxy) showed a total decline of nearly $22,000 for the week—or more than $31,000 exclusive of the Capitol.

Theatre Construction in Great Britain Active

Widespread theatre construction in England is indicated in a report to the Department of Commerce by Assistant Trade Commissioner C. G. Isaacs, London. One estimate states that $15,000,000 will be spent in London alone. A firm of agents reports 14 new houses to be built with an average capacity of 2,500 seats. The general tendency is toward theatres of at least 1,500 seats, about twice the previous average.

Some of the projects reported are: London, the Regent in Edgeware Road, 3,000 seats; the Astoria in Brixton, 3,500; Marble Arch Pavilion to be expanded from 800 seats to 2,000; Clock Tower Cinema, Wandsworth Road, to be enlarged and rebuilt; in Brighton, a $3,000,000 house is announced in West Street; the Empire Music Hall, Leicester Square, will be rebuilt as a 3,500-seat cinema; the Casino, Tottenham Court Road, will become a 3,000-seat house, primarily for stage plays but convertible to pictures; the Barnes Theatre, Barnes, will be made into a 2,000-seat picture house; a 2,500-seat super-cinema is announced for Regent Street. Another company plans three new theatres, one at Edmonton (2,000 seats), one at Clerkenwell (1,800) and a third in South West London (about 1,800).

There are now about 3,800 theatres in Great Britain, of which some 3,300 are open regularly.

Sparks Opens Riverside in Jacksonville, Fla.

The Riverside Theatre, a new house of the E. J. Sparks Enterprises located in Jacksonville, Fla., was formally opened on Saturday evening, March 12, with many prominent theatre folk in attendance. Some of the guests attending the inaugural event were E. V. Richards, Jr., W. H. Gueringer and L. M. Ash of Saenger Theatres, Inc.; Adolph Gortatowsky of Gortatowsky Brothers, Albany, Ga.; Oscar Oldknow, of the National Theatre Supply Company of Atlanta, and Anna Aiken Patterson of the Weekly Film Review. Acting as master of ceremonies during the evening was E. P. Owen, Jr., manager of the Jacksonville Chamber of Commerce. Mayor John T. Alsop, when introduced, welcomed the new theatre on the behalf of the city. Mr. Sparks was introduced during the course of the evening.

The Riverside has 900 seats, all on the same floor. A balcony of cantilever construction is to be added later. The Vitaphone is being installed and will have its premiere there during April in conjunction with "Don Juan." The stage of the Riverside has been equipped to accommodate stock companies or road-shows. A. Benjamin was the architect. It is estimated that the cinema cost about $190.000. M. F. Estes is managing the Riverside.

Egyptian Film Association is Organized by Firms

Film distributors of Egypt, Syria and Palestine have formed an association known as The Kinematograph Syndicate, according to advices to the Department of Commerce from Commercial Attache James F. Hodgson, Cairo. The two leading distributors of American films in this territory are members.

Childs Takes Long Term Lease in Paramount Bldg.

The Childs Restaurant Company has leased for a period of twenty-one years basement space in the Paramount Building, New York City, north of the main entrance to the structure. The place originally offered for the basement space, it is said, was $150,000 annually. Famous is said to have declined to lease the premises save on a basis that would give Famous a percentage of the restaurant's receipts. The lease provides that the restaurant shall have an entrance on Forty-third Street and also an entrance from the main lobby of the building.

The lease was negotiated by Ralph B. Wattley of Douglas I. Elliman and Company, Inc., and Arthur C. Brady, acting for the Broadway Paramount Corporation, a subsidiary of Famous Players-Lasky.

Publix $16,000,000 Deal Finances N. Y. Houses

Negotiations for the financing of a neighborhood building program in Greater New York by Publix are understood to have been practically completed this week with the Prudence Bond and Mortgage Company, to the extent of some $16,000,000.

A site has been acquired in Flushing, L.I., at Main Street and Amity Avenue. A 3,500-seat house, similar in type to that planned on Flatbush Avenue, Brooklyn, will be built here.

New Theatres Announced in Bucharest, Roumania

Construction of a new 1,200-seat house in Bucharest, Rumania, with two others of 1,000 seats each planned, is announced in advices to the Department of Commerce from Acting Commercial Attache Sproull Fouchs. It is expected that about eight other theatres will be built in Rumania this year, four of them in Transylvania.

Meighan Denies Report of Retirement

BRANDING as untrue the report that he intends retiring from the screen, Thomas Meighan this week declared that he had really just started on his newest contract with Paramount and that he is not giving any thought at this early date as to either a renewal of his contract or a retirement from screen activities.

Thomas Meighan

The Paramount star stated that he had four more pictures to make and further remarked that the transfer to the West Coast from New York of Paramount production had not affected him in the least. "At least seventy per cent of my pictures were made out on the Coast," said Meighan, "and when I return to Hollywood in April, in one way, it will be like going back home."

Hammons Plans Increased Production Schedule at Educational Studios

E. W. HAMMONS, president of Educational Pictures, Inc., announced this week plans for increased production activities at Educational studios on the Coast. Educational studios, which have produced by far the bigger part of the product released through Educational Film Exchanges, will add several pictures to the established brands now distributed. Lloyd Hamilton will make eight two-reel comedies this season. Lupino Lane will make a like number and the "Big Boy" series will be jumped to eight this season instead of six as heretofore.

Johnny Arthur has been re-signed for the Tuxedo Comedy series and practically all the stars seen in Mermaid comedies of the past season will again be on view in those released during the coming year. Cameo Comedies will produce 26 one-reel laugh pictures using the same people, to a great extent, that have worked in previous productions of this brand. Hammons announced that negotiations are under way with a stage star, who has appeared in special Educational productions, to appear regularly in Educational product and it is probable that a series of pictures with this star will soon be announced.

Sam Katz Stresses Theatre Centralization Need

Makes Plea for Ad Copy Along Institutional Lines in Address to A. M. P. A.

ACCOUNTING of tickets out for the Seventh Annual and First International Dinner of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at the Hotel Astor, April 2nd, should be made by the end of this week. Walter Eberhardt, in charge of the ticket sale at First National Pictures, 383 Madison Avenue, is requesting this cooperation and also that complete seating lists be given him by Monday evening to insure a place on the printed program.

Charlie Chaplin is the latest celebrity who has announced his intention of attending the impressive international function. Another is Gilda Gray, who will lead the grand march with a popular statesman. Others whose attendance will go to make this most impressive of all motion picture dinners are: Alice Joyce, Mae Allison, Lowell Sherman and Pauline Garon, Ben Lyon, Sam Hardy, Louise John Bartels, George Walsh and others whose names will be announced within a few days.

While the attendance of the Latin American diplomtic delegation from Washington and the presence of Will Hays as toastmaster and Hon. Herbert Hoover, the South American ambassadors; Mayor James J. Walker and A. M. Botsford as speakers, gives the function an air of dignity, the entertainment will be an important part.

This, announced for the first time as "A Night on Broadway," will be supervised by Major Edward Bowes, managing director of the Capitol Theatre. The first item will be "The American Tragedy," a film travesty on newspaper critics themselves, produced by Rose Pelswick. Immediately after its showing it will be criticized in celluloid by the press agents.

Following a solo number, there will be Victor Shapiro's annual news reel burlesque which has been a highlight in all the A.M.P.A. dinners.

Major Bowes is bringing down his entire Capitol Family to round out an hour's entertainment. Specially prepared numbers by the Studio orchestra, the Capitol soloists and a ballet ensemble will be punctuated by introductions of celebrities in the ballroom.

Speechmaking and entertaining will occupy an hour each. At the conclusion of the entertainment will come the grand march to be followed by dancing till dawn.

The complete list of diplomatic guests of honor, published last week, includes six ambassadors, twelve ministers and three charge d'affaires. On their arrival at the Pennsylvania Station, they will be met by a motorcycle police escort. Pictures taken of their arrival at the station will be shown as part of the hour's entertainment.

The committee in charge of the dinner consists of: Walter Eberhardt, S. Charles Einfeld, Edward Finnye, Melvill A. Shauer, Tom Wiley, Arthur James, Victor M. Shapiro, Hal Howe, Edward McNamee, A. L. Selig, C. W. Barrell, John C. Flinn as marshall, James Zabin, George Harvey, W. E. Mulligan, Hubert Voight, Bert Adler and Ken Hallam.

A feature of the dinner will be the ap[illegible] ly "grade paper," edited by C. W. Barrell [illegible]

Institutional Advertising, Publicity Department First National Innovation

AS part of First National's exhibitor service a department, devoted exclusively to institutional theatre advertising and publicity, will be inaugurated. This innovation, enabling the exhibitor to play up his theatre as an inducement regardless of the picture playing, will be found in press sheets in the form of sample ads containing institutional copy and suggestions for institutional exploitation.

The institutional service to exhibitors is expected to render aid in firmly establishing local theatres by name, playing them up for their facilities to give fine entertainment just as stars and featured players are now publicized for their abilities as performers.

New Theatres For Fox, Publix and Stanley

Seattle Site for First Named, Portland Location for Second; Kensington, Pa., Plot for Third

THEATRE building plans announced this week include the erection of a 2,500-seat house in Seattle, which, although unconfirmed, it is believed will be run by Fox; a 3,200-seat theatre will be constructed in Portland, Me., and, from reliable sources, it is learned that a lease has already been drawn up for Publix as the lessee. The Stanley Company has had plans completed for erection of a new $1,500,000 theatre on the site of the old Desmond in Kensington, Pa. A fall opening is expected and vaudeville and pictures will be the policy.

Options have been obtained on the Portland Publix house by Morris Greenspan, Portland contractor and builder. The site is on the Libby estate at the junction of Congress and High streets. Architectural plans have been completed by Rapp and Rapp and construction will be started immediately, states Greenspan. The auditorium will be approximately 126 by 110 feet and there will be one balcony. Heating and cooling plants will be installed.

The Seattle house, which it is believed Fox will run, is to be built at the corner of Seventh Avenue and Olive Way; the structure will cost approximately $1,000,000 and will be equipped with every modern facility for handling big productions. The design of the interior will be an adaptation of the Spanish Renaissance period.

New Wisconsin 'U' Houses

Sheboygan Theatre Planned; Badger State Subsidiary Formed for Acquisition in Milwaukee

IN accordance with its expansion policy, Universal Theatres has completed plans for the erection of a theatre in Sheboygan, Wis., seating 2,250. A new company has been organized in Milwaukee known as Wisconsin Universal Theatres, Inc., and this subsidiary of the parent firm will take care of expansion in that territory. It is expected that ten or twelve theatres will be under control of this subsidiary by 1928. Already the firm has taken over theatres in Reedsburg and Edgarton and contemplates one in Jefferson to cost $40,000.

Universal's expansion in this territory started with acquisition of the Alhambra, after which the company obtained 14 suburban houses. The company is building at Racine and Kenosha.

Wisconsin is witnessing a three-cornered expansion race between Universal, Saxe Enterprises and Fischer's Paramount Theatres, the three other circuits of the state.

Saxe is building at Madison, Fischer stronghold, while Fischer is lining up against Saxe at Oshkosh. Meanwhile, Saxe is strengthening its position at Kenosha, building the New Rhode, which is to cost $650,000 and seat 1,500. The two are engaged in keen competition at Fond du Lac.

In Milwaukee, Universal and Saxe are arrayed against each other downtown and in the suburban field. Both are active in building outskirt houses.

Grand, Cedartown, Ga., Formally Opened March 14

An interesting event of last Monday, March 14, was the formal opening of the Grand Theatre, Cedartown, Ga., which is owned and operated by J. H. Wheeler. The new house was opened to the public at 1 o'clock in the afternon and crowds attended every performance. Handsome floral displays were received from the Pathe exchange in Atlanta, the Arthur C. Bromberg Attractions and the employes of the Capitol Theatre at Montgomery.

Arthur C. Bromberg attended the opening and others from the same company who came from Atlanta for the event were Mr. Mangham, P. H. Savin and Winfield Snelson.

Fox Locust, Phila., Opened Monday, Mar. 2

WILLIAM FOX further intrenched himself in the exhibiting field in Philadelphia with the opening on March 21st of the new Fox Locust Theatre, Broad and Locust streets, on which he has taken a ten-year lease at an annual rental of $100,000. The theatre, of a distinctly Gothic type of architecture, is part of the Equitable Building. The lower floor has a seating capacity of 1,032, with the remaining 538 seats in the balcony.

The policy of the house will vary from time to time, it being the intention of the organization to offer pictures, legitimate attractions and such other programs as the needs of the house may warrant. "What Price Glory" at $1.65 top will run indefinitely.

A thirty-piece orchestra has been installed, with Frank Verne in charge. All of the publicity in connection with the new house has been in the hands of Frank Seltzer. G. S. Yorke has been assigned to the house during the running of "What Price Glory." Robert Davis has been appointed treasurer. John Zanft, head of the Fox organization, was in Philadelphia for a week prior to the opening supervising the finishing touches to the house.

R. F. ("Pete") Woodhull

Woodhull Succeeds Collins as M.P.T.O.A. Head

The resignation of Eli Whitney Collins and the election of R. F. ("Pete") Woodhull to succeed him were the features of the meeting of the Administrative Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America held at national headquarters, Wednesday, March 23rd.

The resignation of Mr. Collins was caused by the unexpected change in the trade since his induction to the presidency of the national organization. The action taken by the administrative committee is on behalf of the board of directors of the national body by virtue of authority vested in this committee to function for the board between meetings of the same. The naming of a successor was submitted to the directors through mail and the unanimous choice of Mr. Woodhull resulted.

Mr. Woodhull will serve until the next national convention at Columbus, O., May 17, 18 and 19, at which time the term of Mr. Collins expires.

R. F. Woodhull has long been active in organization work and served in various capacities until his election to the presidency, at Milwaukee, in 1925.

Statements of organization leaders indicate much satisfaction with the election of Mr. Woodhull.

Norma Talmadge's "Camille" at N. Y. Globe

THE Globe Theatre in New York City will house Norma Talmadge's screen version of "Camille," when the picture opens there for its world premier on Thursday evening, April 21.

Fred Niblo directed "Camille," which Joseph M. Schenck produced for First National. Gilbert Roland appears opposite Miss Talmadge. Other members of the cast are: Alec B. Francis, Helen Jerome Eddy, Lilyan Tashman, Rose Dione, Oscar Beregi, Harvey Clark, Albert Conti, Michael Visaroff, Evelyn Selbie and Etta Lee.

Cochrane's Advertising Lecture at Harvard

Standardization Impossible, States Universal Vice-President; "Need Trained Men," Kennedy

R. H. COCHRANE, vice-president of Universal Pictures, one of the speakers at the Harvard School of Business Administration, told students this week that "It is as impossible to standardize the advertising of moving pictures as it is to standardize the pictures themselves." The address was given as part of a series of lectures on moving picture methods by leading men of the industry.

Mr. Cochrane told of his entry into the field and his learning of the principle of writing ad copy "at" the audience. In advertising pictures set rules and methods do not obtain for any considerable length of time, the students were informed. Mr. Cochrane explained that this is due to the fact that entertainment is an intangible product which must be made to appeal to the masses and, in directing the appeal, styles must change constantly.

"I can give you no rules," declared Mr. Cochrane. "The man who feels he has the business of motion picture advertising, publicity and exploitation reduced to rules is due for a rude awakening." Mr. Cochrane then entered upon a lengthy explanation of the provinces of advertising, publicity and exploitation, and, following this he took up the matter of truth in advertising. He explained that while truth is not actually violated in picture copy it is inevitable that some people will disagree with the superlatives used. After viewing a heart interest picture one may think the copy writers' ""one of the greatest heart dramas ever made" a stretch of the imagination, while another would go further than the ad man and [illegible] the answers." To all [illegible] on the appeal.

Mr. Cochrane [illegible] with a definition of the word "[illegible]," a word abused [illegible] which has a [illegible] meaning and serves a legitimate purpose and he named instances in which it is necessary.

Joseph P. Kennedy, president of [illegible] Booking Office, who sponsored the course of lectures, the week discussed the possibilities of [illegible] college men in the film industry and the advantage of knowing "what it is all about" before entering the business.

Branching off on another note, Mr. Kennedy pointed out that it is not the people in great metropolitan centers for whom the industry must make pictures, but for those in the outlying neighborhoods, as it is not the $50,000 New York booking that the industry needs to think of so much as the nominal rentals coming in from the suburban towns a year after the New York run and which constitute the profits.

Famous Moving Into New Times Square Home

Transfer to Quarters Being Made This Week; Company Will Occupy Eight Floors

ON Friday afternoon of this week Famous Players-Lasky began the arduous task of moving its personnel and effects from 485 Fifth Avenue to the new Paramount Building in the Times Equare section of New York City.

Famous will take up eight floors of the building and will open its doors on Monday morning to its employees, who will be able to resume their work without interruption as the interval from Friday to Monday morning will have been spent in moving and arranging the offices. The trucks will operate between the old Paramount address and the new between midnight Friday and 8 A.M. Saturday and midnight Saturday and 11 A.M. Sunday. Brand new equipment for the office has been purchased and because of this the moving process will be simplified as only steel filing cabinets, typewriters, statistical matter and the like will be transferred to the Paramount Building.

Floors have been allotted various departments. On the sixth will be stationed the road show and poster departments, the file and mail rooms and the stock room. The entire seventh floor will be occupied by the legal staff. The accounting department of Publix will be on the eighth, while the ninth will house the executive offices of Publix. On the tenth floor will be the Paramount [illegible] tion, music and publicity, exploitation and advertising departments of Publix. The eleventh floor will have the Paramount executive offices. Also on this floor will be the production and accounting departments. The distribution department has been assigned the twelfth floor, which will be the headquarters for the sales, publicity, advertising, ad sales and purchasing depar[illegible] The Paramount short subjects dep[illegible] will use the thirteenth floor.

First National Sales Executives Promoted

Depinet General Sales Manager, Marin Assistant General Production Head; Spring Supervising

PROMOTIONS which will take effect immediately in First National's distribution department were announced this week by Samuel Spring, Secretary-Treasurer of the company. These promotions are made within the ranks in accordance with the company's policy of rewarding the ability of the staff. The men and positions attained are as follows:

Ned Depinet, Sales Manager of the Southern Division, to General Sales Manager; Ned Marin, Sales Manager of the Western Division, to Assistant General Production Manager, located in New York City; A. W. Smith, Jr., Sales Manager of the Eastern Division, will continue as Sales Manager, in charge of the Eastern Division, but his duties will be extended to include Canada. Mr. Smith will be next in rank to Mr. Depinet in the Sales Deparment; Stanley W. Hatch, Manager of the Franchise Department, to Sales Manager of the Western Division; W. E. Callaway, District Manager of the South, to Sales Manager of the Southern Division, located in New York; R. S. Wehrle, Manager of the Pittsburgh Exchange, to Assistant Manager of the British Foreign Department under Joseph Skirboll; Roy H. Haines, Manager of the Cincinnati Exchange, to the Pittsburgh Exchange in place of Mr. Wehrle; Paul E. Krieger, Manager of the Louisville Exchange, to take the place of Roy H. Haines as manager of the Cincinnati Exchange; Maurice White, Assistant Manager of the Cincinnati Exchange, to take the place of Paul E. Krieger, as Manager of the Louisville Exchange.

Mr. Spring will continue to have general supervision of distribution, with his other duties as secretary-treasurer. Mr. Depinet stated that the general policy of the sales department will continue practically as before, with managers for each territory under his general supervision. There will be no changes in his department other than those announced, except where he feels promotions are due.

Mr. Spring and Mr. Depinet left New York this week on a brief trip to the middle West where a number of conferences have been arranged with exhibitors and sales executives. Chicago and St. Louis will be visited and the itinerary has been so fixed that they will be present at the opening of Abe Blank's new Riviera Theatre in Omaha on Friday evening.

Shortens Vaudeville to Accommodate Film

PICTURES are usually trimmed to fit them to vaudeville programs, but the Pantages Theatre in Minneapolis set something of a precedent this week by trimming its vaudeville acts to accommodate a picture. The film was "Michael Strogoff" and rather than cut the picture to bring the program to normal length, the management decided to lop a minute or two off each of the vaudeville acts.

Obtain Permit to Build New Indianapolis Theatre

A building permit has been taken out by Mark Margolis, representing a Chicago group of theatre builders, and Leslie Colvin, local contractor, to build a $450,000 theatre at 1043-49 Virginia Avenue, Indianapolis. The structure will be triangular, the sides being 110, 210 and 138 feet in length. Margolis also petitioned for a $1,250,000, house at Thirty-eighth and Meridian streets, but the request has been taken under advisement following protest of a Methodist congregation.

German Film Imports Rise As Exports Decrease

Final German foreign trade figures for 1926 show an increase in imports and a decrease in exports. Imports totalled 9,834,400 metres as compared with 5,653,800 metres in 1925, while exports totalled 71,143,500 metres as compared with 74,203,500 metres during the previous year. Raw film imports increased about six times, while exports of the same commodity remained about the same, according to advices to the Department of Commerce from Acting Commercial Attache Douglas Miller, Berlin.

In And Out of Town

LOU B. METZGER, general sales manager of Universal, returned to New York this week after an important conference trip to Universal City. The purpose of his visit, Mr. Metzger says, was the final arrangement of production plans for Universal's 1927-28 schedule.

PAUL LAZARUS, general sales manager of the Western and Southern Divisions of United Artists, left New York Monday, March 14, for a trip of one fortnight through the Southern exchanges.

H. A. R. DUTTON, president of the National Supply Company, G. E. De Kruff, general sales manager and editor of the "Pink Sheet," Glen Lincoln and the executive committee of the Eastern Division managers of the National Supply, including company representatives from New York City, Boston, New Haven, Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore and Buffalo, were in conference at the Hotel Astor, New York City, during the week of March 14.

NAT CAMPBELL, Southern Division sales manager of Pathe, returned to his desk this week after a tour of four weeks of the exchanges in his district. He left the home office on February 24. His itinerary included Memphis, Kansas City, Oklahoma City, Dallas, New Orleans, Atlanta and Charlotte.

CRESSON E. SMITH, general sales manager for the Middle Western Division of United Artists, returned to the home office Monday, March 14, after a sales trip lasting two weeks through the United Artists branches in the Middle West.

C. Emmett Mack Buried in Hollywood Cemetery

CHARLES EMMETT MACK, well-known actor, who was killed last Friday in an automobile accident in California, was buried on Monday of this week. Funeral services were conducted from the Church of the Good Shepherd, Beverly Hills, Cal.

Mack was a D. W. Griffith discovery and played in that producer's production, "Dream Street." Subsequently he appeared in "The White Rose," another Griffith picture; "The Sixth Commandment" for Associated Exhibitors; "Youth For Sale," "The Lost Chord," "Bad Company," "The Night Ship," "Down Upon the Swanee River." He had leading roles in "A Woman of the World" for Paramount; "The Devil's Circus" an M-G-M production, and "The Unknown Soldier," a P.D.C. release.

Bray-Hurd Alleges Life Infringes on Patents

A summons to appear in a district court of equity has been served on the Life Cartoon Studios in New York City by the Bray Hurd Process Company, Inc., which alleges infringement of patents held by the latter. A settlement was made out of court some months ago with Fables Pictures, Inc., and Bray-Hurd threatens to bring similar action against practically all animated cartoon producers, claiming the possession of basic patents covering virtually all methods used in the art today. An association of cartoon firms to contest this claim is likely should further litigation develop.

United Artists and M-G-M Drop Merger Talk

Negotiations for the merger of United Artists and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer are understood to have been dropped again this week. Opposition by Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford is assigned as the reason, although the previous objections of Charles Chaplin are declared to be removed. No statement was forthcoming from Joseph M. Schenck, who recently returned from Palm Beach with Marcus Loew, but published reports credited him with still favoring the merger and continuing his effort for its consummation.

Aiming for Better A.S.A.C. Terms for Exhibitors

W. A. Steffes, president of the Northwest M.P.T.O., has announced that numerous lawsuits brought by the American Society of Authors and Composers against theatre owners in the Northwest who are evading the music tax have been stopped temporarily. The society was asked by the M.P.T.O. to make out-of-court settlements and the exhibitors' executive committee will attempt to make arrangements with the exhibitors who have not paid their tax. It is hoped in this way to secure more satisfactory terms for the exhibitors.

N. Y. T. O. C. C. Starts Drive for $50,000

UNDER the personal guidance of Fred Wilson, the New York Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce launched on Monday, March 14, its campaign to raise $50,000 among exchanges, supply dealers and exhibitors so that the organization of theatre men may continue its combatting of the evils confronting the industry.

At the present time the Chamber is conducting campaigns for the repeal of legislation prohibiting the admission of minors to theatres; the modification of the daylight saving law; the reduction of fire insurance and electric light rates; an ordinance regulating the charges of companies installing fire apparatus in theatres; a more agreeable exhibition contract for exhibitors. The Chamber also keeps a sharp lookout for unfair legislation and is also engaged in charitable and relief work.

Cohen Announces Establishment of 150 Paramount News Centers

EMMANUEL COHEN, in charge of short features production of Famous, this week announced that one hundred and fifty established offices in the centers of governmental, political and social activities throughout the world will cover every phase of life for Paramount News, and, associated with these offices, will be hundreds of contact points. The News staff is now complete, he stated, with actual operation of the department under way and the initial release scheduled for August.

The News will cover world activities as thoroughly as the Associated Press, United Press, etc., declared Mr. Cohen. The news reel will give not only current news but the highlights occurring in the remotest quarters of the globe. It is planned to issue the reel bi-weekly.

Discuss Canada Copyright

Members of Various Associations View Angles of Situation; Register Numbers, is Request

A DEPUTATION representing the Musical Amusement Association, Canadian Fairs Association, Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors of Canada and the Broadcasters Association of Canada waited upon a committee of the Canadian Cabinet at Ottawa on March 18th to discuss various angles of the copyright situation in Canada. Details of the amendments to the Canadian Copyright Act, proposed by L. J. Ladner, member for Vancouver, B.C., were gone into.

One request made by the deputation was that measures be taken to require the Performing Rights Society of Canada, a branch of the British society, to register every musical composition which it claims to control at Ottawa before it can take any legal action for alleged infringement of its rights. Registration of copyright is stipulated in the Canadian Copyright Act of 1912 and the cost is $2 per registration.

As the Performing Rights Society claims to own or control approximately one million British and European musical compositions, the deduction is that the society would have to pay the Canadian Government $2,000,000 for the protection of all its compositions through registrations.

It was through the suit of [illegible] of two pieces, "By Jingo" and "Colonel Bogey March," that the Performing Rights Society lost its suit for $10,000 damages against Famous Players Canadian Corp. in the Toronto courts recently, Mr. Justice Rose having thrown out the case because the society had not registered its copyrights at the Canadian Capital.

Complaint on the part of exhibitors in Canada and others is that the Society has declined to give a list of its protected compositions to enable the exhibitors to play other than the society's pieces, the reported answer being the suggestion that, if the society's annual royalty fee is paid, the exhibitor can go right ahead with any music that he desires without restriction.

Representing the moving picture interests in the delegation at Ottawa was E. L. Nathanson, [illegible] director of Famous

Australian Theatre War On

Union and Hoyts, Rival Chains, to Spend Large Sums on New Construction This Year

THEATRE mergers and expansion are not confined to the United States of America. News from England this week indicates that a large-scale merger of distributing and theatre interests is being put through by Ostrer Bros., the bankers behind Gaumont, and now comes word from Australia of a theatre war there, with houses being lined up in two camps, Union Theatres, Ltd., and Hoyts Theatres, Ltd.

Union is the theatre branch of Australasian Films, Ltd., which is a distributing company, and Hoyts represents the combined houses of a number of independent chains. Union Theatres controls about one hundred houses, while Hoyts has about sixty.

One of the principal results of this theatre war is a sudden and considerable expansion in new theatre construction, with the promise of houses for Australia which will bring that country right up to the minute in the size and character of its first run theatres.

Union is building two theatres in Sydney, of 3,500 and 4,000 seats, respectively, to be ready by December. An even larger house is promised for Melbourne, in addition to four suburban houses. Stuart F. Doyle, managing director of Union, is now in this country with his architect, H. White, and will arrive in New York next week. The various projects, started and contemplated, of Union Theatres will involve about $10,000,000 capital, it is understood.

Hoyts, in turn, have announced the ex[illegible] construction of new theatres in the capital cities of the Commonwealth. F. W. Thring recently affiliated himself with this group, although a 60 per cent interest in his houses is owned by Union Theatres.

A. M. P. A. Dinner Details

"A Night on Broadway" Entertainment Feature; Chaplin and Gilda Gray Among Those Present

THE consolidation of theatres in country-wide chains or circuits is the result of an economic necessity in the industry, Sam Katz, president of Publix Theatres, told the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers' Association in an address last week at the regular weekly luncheon of the organization. In no case, he said, can it be laid to the necessities of any particular film distributing or producing organization. Mr. Katz pleaded for advertising copy which will be of assistance to exhibitors in institutionalizing their theatres. The Publix president is one of the "Twelve Immortals" of the motion picture business chosen by ballot by the film advertising men a year and a half ago.

Word-of-mouth advertising alone never can build a business. Advertising copy—the printed word and illustration—is perhaps the most vital factor in building up a successful theatre operation, said Mr. Katz. A consistent running story, week after week, month after month, and year after year, directed toward the moulding of a theatre institution, must be told, and told persistently, if the theatre is to survive.

As an example of what institutional advertising has accomplished for a theatre, the Publix president pointed out that the Chicago, built by Balaban and Katz eight years ago, was found to run to greater expense than calculated. The firm set out to institutionalize the firm and theatre in Chicago and the surrounding territory, backing up the campaign with a quality of entertainment and service that justified the printed word; not only did the Chicago become a profit-making house, but the Loop activities of the company were put over with the public, stated Mr. Katz.

In his concluding remarks, Mr. Katz referred incidentally to the development of theatre refrigeration during the past two or three years and made the statement that in many of the publix theatres in key cities where cooling systems have been installed, the business during the months of July and August was the biggest of the entire year. Refrigeration, he said, is rapidly changing the picture industry from an eight-months into a twelve-months business.

Walter E. Greene

Internat'l Projector Tenders Dinner to W. E. Greene

The officers and executives of the International Projector Corporation tendered a dinner on March twenty-second to Walter E. Greene, who has resigned as Vice-president of that company and will at once take up active duties as Senior Vice-president of the National Theatre Supply Company.

Mr. Greene has been in charge of sales of the International Projector Corporation since its organization, and prior to that occupied a similar position with the Precision Machine Company, Inc., manufacturer of the Simplex Projector. Mr. Greene has had a very extensive experience in the motion picture industry and in taking on his new duties will occupy one of the highest positions in the motion picture equipment field.

F. B. Greene, Jr., Resigns From Schine Post

Fred B. Greene, Jr., managing director for the Schine theatres in Utica for the past several months, has resigned, according to reports reaching Albany's Film Row, and gone to New York City. It is said that the Schine policy for Utica from now on will call for an individual manager for each theatre. Some theatres changed hands during the week, Armstrong and Smith having taken over a house in Mayfield, while the Standard Theatre Company, of New York, acquired H. I. Levine's house in Hancock and C. G. Cable's theatre in Roscoe.

U. A. House for St. Louis Strongly Rumored

Following the closing of the deal for the Liberty Theatre in Kansas City by United Artists last week, rumors in St. Louis now point to the purchase or construction of a house in that city. A new theatre in Sacramento, at the end of K Street, which is scheduled to open in September, is understood to be a unit also in the United Artists chain of houses.

F.B.O. Lists Four for Release During April

"Naughty Nannette," "Mother," "Ain't Love Funny?" and "Cyclone of the Range" are four feature productions which are on the F.B.O. releasing schedule for April.

"Naughty Nannette" is a Viola Dana vehicle which J. Leo Meehan is directing. It is centered around the life of a motion picture star and will be distributed on April 3. Belle Bennett is the star of the Gold Bond production, "Mother," which will be ready for release on April 10. The story was adapted from Kathleen Norris' novel of the same name and it was also filmed under the guidance of Director Meehan. Also scheduled for April 10 is "Ain't Love Funny?" an Alberta Vaughn starring film directed by Del Andrews from the story by Kay Clement and Lela Gidley, with adaptation by Doris Anderson. "Cyclone of the Range" will be released on April 24. Bob De Lacy directed this Tom Tyler Western which has Frankie Darro and "Beans," the dog, in important roles.

Signs Apfel to Direct Buddy Roosevelt in New Film

Lester F. Scott, Jr., producer of Westerns for Pathe release, has signed Oscar Apfel to direct Buddy Roosevelt in a new Western, an adaptation of "The Code of the Cow Country," by Milton West which appeared in Lariat Story Magazine.

Buffalo Bill, Jr., has completed another Western for Scott which is in the process of cutting. Wally Wales, the third of the Scott Western stars, is still laid up with influenza but is said to be recovering rapidly.

Mackaill and Mulhall to be Co-featured in Four

Dorothy Mackaill and Jack Mulhall will be co-featured in four pictures during the coming year, aside from individual appearances, First National announces. Two of these already announced are "The Road to Romance" and "Lady Be Good."

"U" to Produce "Cohens and Kellys in Paris"

Universal has just announced that it will produce "The Cohens and the Kellys in Paris" for next year's production schedule. No one has been cast for the picture as yet.

Minn. Exhibitor Obtains Injunction

A PERMANENT injunction against the school board forbidding the renting of the Auditorium Theatre at Park Rapids, Minn., for use as a motion picture theatre was recently granted by Judge C. W. Stanton, of Bemidji. The building was erected several years ago for use for public meetings and school gatherings. Last spring it was leased as a theatre at an annual rental of $1,450. H. W. Ressler, proprietor of another picture house, protested on the basis that the school district was entering into competition with private business. The board is expected to appeal the decision.

"Convoy" Premiere at Strand, Hartford, Conn.

"CONVOY," Robert T. Kane's navy special, had its world premiere at the Strand Theatre in Hartford, Conn., last Sunday, March 20, and succeeded in establishing a new house record for the Strand. An overflow audience of 1,000 had to be turned away, it is claimed, and a crowd of 2,000 stood in line waiting for a chance to see the second performance of the film. Attending the premiere was a delegation from the New York office of First National. Included in the party were Ned E. Depinet, general sales manager, A. W. Smith, Jr., sales manager in charge of the Eastern and Canadian divisions, W. H. Callaway, sales manager of the Southern division, and Ned Marin, assistant manager of production. A band from the navy base in Hartford interpreted the musical setting.

First National plans the New York showing of the film early in May with, in all probability, the production going into a legitimate Broadway house for a run. Its release date will coincide with the return of the Atlantic and Pacific fleets from Spring manoeuvers in Southern waters.

Favorite Film Co. Gotham Detroit Franchise Holder

The Gotham distributing franchise for the Detroit territory including the State of Michigan by excluding the upper peninsula has been awarded to Favorite Film Company, 610 Film Building, Detroit. Messrs. Wm. B. Hurlbut and J. L. Saxe, president and treasurer of Favorite Film Company, respectively, and Budd Rogers of Lumas Film Corporation closed the contracts this week. This is in the nature of an expansion for Favorite and consequently that company has taken over larger quarters in the Detroit film building. M. C. Howard will act as special representative of Gotham and will be stationed in Detroit to co-operate with the new franchise holder.

Lois Wilson in F.B.O.'s "The Gingham Girl"

The leading role in "The Gingham Girl," F.B.O.'s forthcoming screen transcription of the play by Daniel Kussel, will be played by Lois Wilson, this week signed for the role by Joseph P. Kennedy, president of F.B.O., who outbid two of the largest companies who have been angling for her services. George K. Arthur has also been cast in the picture.

Dorothy Yost is now at work preparing the adaptation and David Kirkland will handle the directorial end of the production, it is expected. "The Gingham Girl" will be a Gold Bond production on the 1927-28 schedule.

New M-G-M Contract for Marion C. Blackton

A new scenario contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has been given Marion Constance Blackton. Under the new arrangement Miss Blackton will write originals and scenarize the works of others. She recently wrote the screen play of "Becky."

Eleven Universal Units Now Engaged in Filming

Eleven Universal companies are engaged in location and studio work on the Universal City lot, Hoot Gibson is working on "The Desert Flyer," Reginald Denny is directing "The Joy Girl," Herbert Blache is directing "The Adventurous Knight" at Chatsworth, Laura La Plante is working on "Poker Faces," Edmund Lowe is working on "Finger Prints," Glenn Tryon is directing "The Head Man" in the east, Reginald Barker is directing "The Adventurous Knight" at Chatsworth, Jack Conway is directing "Tin Gods" at Chatsworth, Harry Pollard is directing "Sailor Izzy Murphy" at Chatsworth, Clarence Badger is directing "Rubber Heels" at Universal City, and Arthur Rosson is directing "Rookies" at Universal City.

Two Western companies, "Four Footed Ranger," starring Dynamite, Belgian police dog with Edmund Cobb, directed by Stuart Paton, and "Straight Shootin'," starring Tom Wilson, directed by Duke Worne, are shooting at Newhall.

Universal's Mystery Series are being filmed for "Nine Points of the Law," "The Chinese Parrot," "Back Trail," "Blake of Scotland Yard," a chapter play starring Hayden Stevensen and directed by Robert Hill, and "Spurs and Spark Plugs," a Western directed by William Wyler, starring Fred Humes.

"Liberty Bonds" New Norma Shearer Vehicle

"Liberty Bonds," an original story by Monta Bell, will go into production soon with Norma Shearer, the featured player, working under the direction of Bell. It is planned to put it into work as soon as Miss Shearer finishes her role in "Old Heidelberg."

"People," an original newspaper story which Bella has just written for John Gilbert and which he himself will direct, will not be filmed until the Shearer film has been made.

Parker Re-Signed to Direct New Swanson U. A. Film

Albert Parker, director of "The Eyes of Sunya," has been re-signed to direct the second Gloria Swanson release for United Artists to be produced in California. Mr. Parker left with Miss Swanson and company for Hollywood last week. While on the coast, production details of the new release will be worked out. No definite title has yet been given the impending Swanson vehicle.

Paragon Studio Acquired By Colorart Pictures

COLORART PICTURES CORP., of Boston, has taken over the Paragon studios at Fort Lee, N.J., and will in future use this as a production base, it was announced this week by C. F. Nagel, president of the concern. Work has already started here on "The Call of the Sea," with Hope Hampton and Marcos Valls in the principal roles, under the direction of Harold R. Hall. Exteriors will be taken in Bermuda, and the unit will leave for there next week. This short subject will be entirely in technicolor.

A previous subject, "A Greenwich Village Romance," written by Sumner Smith and directed by Mr. Hall, is now being edited and cut for release by Tiffany.

Columbia's Second March Release, "Birds of Prey"

The second release for March from Columbia Pictures will be "Birds of Prey," a crook melodrama which has Priscilla Dean in the leading role. The romantic male lead is handled by Hugh Allan and crook characterizations are contributed by Gustav von Seyffertitz, William Tooker, Sidney Bracey, Ben Hendricks, Jr., and Midget Fritz Becker. "Birds of Prey" is the first of a series of melodramas in which Miss Dean will be starred by Columbia.

M-G-M Secures Rights to French Story

The Gaston Leroux story, "Cheri Bibi," which proved successful on the Continent, will be converted into celluloid as a result of a recent deal whereby the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer company acquired the screening rights to the story which will be produced later this year. The story was first published in London and has also been called "The Floating Prison," "The Prison Ship" and "Wolves of the Sea."

MacDonald and Walling Renew Fox Contracts

Fox Films Corporation has renewed the contracts with J. Farrell MacDonald and Richard Walling. The former has just finished the leading male role in "The Cradle Snatchers," and is now appearing in "Rich But Honest." Walling's next role is to be in John Ford's new picture, "Grandma Beryl Learns Her Letters."

Haines Gets New Long Term M-G-M Contract

Zanft on Visiting Board of Bedford Reformatory

John Zanft, vice-president and general manager of Fox Theatres' Corporation, has been appointed a member of the board of visitors of the New York State Reformatory for Women at Eedford, by Governor Smith. He succeeds George B. Robinson, deceased. In accepting the appointment, it became necessary for Mr. Zanft to resign as a member of the board of trustees and managers of the New York State Reformatory at Elmira, on which board he had served for the past two years.

Warner Bros. Set Release Date for Four Films

During April and May Warner Bros. will release four productions to which definite release dates were attached this week. "Matinee Ladies," with May McAvoy, will be issued to the exhibitor April 23. Play dates on Monte Blue's starring vehicle, "The Brute," will start April 30. Rin-Tin-Tin's latest, "Tracked by the Police," comes on May 7. "The Climbers," featuring Irene Rich, is scheduled for May 21.

Hines, Burr and Gag Staff Return to Hollywood

Johnny Hines, C. C. Burr, and the comedian's staff of gag men and scenarists, returned to Hollywood this week after a sojourn at Palm Spring, Fla., where they worked on laugh sequences for "White Pants Willie," Hines' next picture for First National. It is expected that the production will be ready to face the cameras the first week of April under Charlie Hines' direction.

Tiffany Announces Cast of "The Beauty Shoppers"

Tiffany's next release following "The Enchanted Island," now in the course of production, will be "The Beauty Shoppers," in which Louis J. Gasnier will direct Mae Busch, Ward Crane, Dale Fuller, Thomas Haines, Doris Hill, James Marcus, Alfonso Martel and Lucio Flamma.

Another War Comedy from First National

First National is going to do another war comedy. According to an announcement from John McCormick, general manager of West Coast production, the new picture will be "Aeneas Americanus," a Liberty Magazine story by Elliott White Springs, author of "War Birds."

M-G-M Preparing Fifty

Stories in Hand Represent Originals, Adaptations of Plays and Works of Popular Authors

MORE than fifty scenarists at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios are at present busily engaged in whipping into shape for filming fifty stories, fifty per cent. of which are originals written for the screen and the other half equally divided between published works of well-known authors and successful stage plays.

The locales of these stories will be representative of the entire world and the periods covered will reach from medieval to modern times. Many of the productions will be exhibited in six and seven-reel lengths, but it is stated that more than a dozen will be super-specials, which will be long in the making.

As examples the producers point out that "Old Heidelberg," Ernst Lubitsch's special, has a German setting; the Clarence Brown vehicle, "The Trail of '98" is laid in the Klondike, a former British possession; "The Unknown," Lon Chaney's latest, has a Spanish background; "Mr. Wu" has a Chinese locale, "The Branding Iron" is laid in the Canadian Rockies, and "Quality Street," Marion Davies' next starring vehicle, represents England during the Napoleonic wars.

The other half of the schedule, plays with an American locale, includes King Vidor's super feature as yet untitled; "The Bugle Call," in which Jackie Coogan is being starred; "The Thirteenth Hour," Chester Franklin's new mystery story; "California," starring Col. Tim McCoy; "Spring Fever," starring William Haines; "Becky," with Sally O'Neil; "Rookies," the training camp feature, and "Tillie the Toiler," starring Marion Davies.

F.P.-L. Directors on Coast

Twenty-Two Megaphone Wielders Foregather for Greatest Production Drive, Officials Declare

WHEN the consolidation of East and West Coast directorial forces is effected, Famous will have twenty-two directors at the West Coast studio. The megaphone wielders were the first to start for the Hollywood studios after the closing of the Eastern plant. Richard Rosson has been on the Coast about three months; next to arrive was Fred Newmeyer, who reported shortly after the first of the year. He was followed by Luther Reed and Edward Sutherland who left after completing "Love's Greatest Mistake."

Following announcement of the closing of the Astoria studio by Jesse Lasky, Frank Tuttle left the East and has just arrived in Hollywood. Malcolm St. Clair, with the Richard Dix unit, and Gregory La Cava are due in about three weeks.

The greatest production drive ever carried out at a single studio, according to B. P. Schulberg, will be started with all directors actively at work within a comparatively short time. Tuttle will begin work at once, preparing for Raymond Griffith's next starring comedy, "Dying for Love," from the story written for Griffith by Alfred Savoir.

The complete array of Paramount contract directors contains Erich von Stroheim, Ernst Lubitsch, James Cruze, Victor Fleming, Mauritz Stiller, Rowland V. Lee, William Wellman, Luther Reed, Edward Sutherland, Arthur Rosson, Richard Rosson, Dorothy Arzner, Clarence Badger, Monte Brice, H. D'Abbadie D'Arrast, Fred Newmeyer, John Waters, Larry Semon, Ralph Cedar, Frank Tuttle, Malcolm St. Clair and Gregory La Cava.

"Men of Daring" Universal's Special

JUNE 5 will see the release by Universal of "Men of Daring," an historical Western of the gold rush of the Deadwood Section of the Black Hills, South Dakota. The picture was made last summer and was to have been released last fall. However, Universal decided to hold it over one year so that at the time of its release it would celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the Black Hills gold rush. The production will be issued in six reels. It was formerly called "The Overland Trail," but Universal, to comply with the request of another company, changed the title to "Men of Daring."

Al Rogell directed from a story and continuity by Marian Jackson. In the cast are Jack Hoxie, Francis Ford, Ena Gregory, Ernie S. Adams, Robert E. Milash, Marin Sais, Jimmy Kelly, William Malan, Joseph Bennett, Bert Lindley, John Hall and Bert Apling. Universal obtained the services of a squadron of the Fourth U. S. Cavalry, 500 Sioux Indians and more than 5,000 extras, inhabitants of Dakota and Nebraska towns. An extensive advertising and exploitation campaign will be out under way shortly.

"No Man's Law" New Rex Production for Pathe

"No Man's Law" is the title finally decided upon for the new Rex vehicle—the fourth Hal Roach production with the equine star which has Barbara Kent, James Finlayson, Theodore Von Eltz and Oliver Hardy in the cast. Fred Jackman directed under the supervision of F. Richard Jones, the author of the story. The picture was filmed chiefly in a remote and primitive part of Nevada and has previously borne the tentative title of "The Avenging Stallion." The entire cast consists of four people, two horses and two comic burros and the picture's action involves twenty-four hours.

Monta Bell to Direct Gilbert in "People"

Monta Bell is preparing [illegible] screen story, "People," which he will direct soon with John Gilbert in the [illegible] role. The story [illegible] work of Gilbert has [illegible] his starring role in "Twelve Miles Out."

Key City Reports

Chicago

THE usual Lenten slump has only slightly affected Chicago theatre attendance this year. For the week ending March 19th, business was practically normal with the exception of two loop houses, McVickers, where "Flesh and the Devil" was in its last week, and at the Chicago, where the usually popular Colleen Moore failed to pull in "Orchids and Ermine."

At the Oriental, "The Red Mill," bolstered up by the return of Paul Ash from a two weeks' vacation, did normal business and the usual standout was noted. Neighborhood houses in the de luxe class generally reported good business and the same was true of the smaller theatres.

Lubliner & Trinz Harding and Senate both played "A Kiss in a Taxi" to normal business and at Ascher's Sheridan, "The Understanding Heart" with a Synco Jazz stage show had better box office records than for several weeks.

At the Capitol Theatre on the far South Side, Harold Lloyd in "The Kid Brother," the usual stage show and Vitaphone did good business.

The Granada on the North Side, with "Getting Gertie's Garter," was a little off, but the Uptown, with "The Kid Brother," and Bennie Kreuger's strong stage show, reported excellent business.

The Tivoli on the South Side, with "The Taxi Dancer," was somewhat off.

The beautiful spring weather which prevailed during the week helped the theatre attendance.

Boston

WITH Keith's two downtown houses and Loew's State Theatre observing anniversaries with special programs and an unusually beautiful presentation at the Metropolitan Theatre, Boston had another well above the average week. The general run of features was well patronized in all of the houses.

"What Price Glory," the only road show playing Boston, enters this week on its third month at the Majestic Theatre and box office indications are that the end of this Fox Films' Boston engagement is not yet in sight.

Charlie Chaplin in a re-issue of "Shoulder Arms" proved one of the biggest drawing cards of the B. F. Keith Anniversary Week in observance of the centennial of vaudeville. Special features were shown each day. Keith-Albee's Boston also had a special program with a heavy vaudeville bill. Both houses were well above average in attendance.

Loew's State observed its own fifth anniversary with a Frolic in which a total of forty were participants in the vaudeville and presentation and "A Little Journey" was the feature, playing to well above average audiences.

Metropolitan's "An Alpine Romance" proved a presentation par-excellence and a drawing card which filled the theatre both afternoons and evenings. "McFadden's Flats," showing concurrently at the Olympia, Capitol, Scollay Square, Central Square and Fenway, proved a real box office attraction, so much so that the engagement is extended another week at the Fenway. "Let It Rain," at the Boston; "Flesh and the Devil" at Loew's Orpheum, with "Jim the Conqueror," and "Husband Hunters" playing simultaneously at the twin theatres, Modern and Beacon, all report good business. Even the legitimates report a good week with "Queen High" closing at the Plymouth, playing to such large houses that it moves across to another house for a further run to make way for the "Vagabond King," to appear as per schedule at the Plymouth.

Brenon Signs to Do "Sorrell and Son"

A CONTRACT was signed this week between Herbert Brenon, director, and Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the Board of Directors of the United Artists Corporation, whereby the director will hereafter produce and direct his films independently for release through United Artists. His first independent effort will be the screen transcription of "Sorrell and Son," the Warwick Deeping best seller, the rights to which Mr. Schenck has purchased.

Herbert Brenon

Brenon will sail for England, Saturday, March 26, to meet the author in London, where he will collaborate with him on the picture's scenario. Some of "Sorrell and Son" will be filmed in England, where the scene of the story is laid, the rest in the Hollywood studio of United Artists. Brenon will arrive in Hollywood about May 1, after his return from England.

Cleveland

THE Stillman, Allen, State, Palace and Hippodrome reported excellent business for the week just concluded. Other first-run houses in the city felt a considerable drop. And neighborhood houses, with only a few exceptions, say that business is terrible. The Stillman filled its houses every day for the closing week's engagement of "The Flesh and the Devil." "McFadden's Flats" finished its record-breaking five-weeks' run at the Cameo with a flourish. Keith's Palace drew big crowds both matinees and evenings with "Michael Strogoff." Fritzi Scheff's motion picture theatre debut, coupled with the "The Demi-Bride," brought the Allen receipts up to par, while McIntyre and Heath as headliners, shared popular honors with "A Kiss in a Taxi," at the State. Reade's Hippodrome offered "The Last Trail" the fore-part of the week and "The Wreck," the latter half of the week, with an elaborate presentation called "Sheik Week," with better than average results. "What Every Girl Should Know," at the Park; "The Last Trail," at Keith's East 105th Street, and the Circle, with Vitaphone, did fair business. Weather conditions were unfavorable to good business. Last Sunday it rained all day. And during the week spring arrived in all of its effulgence.

Kansas City

DESPITE the fact that Lent was expected to cause a decrease in downtown theatre attendance the crowds thus far have come up to the usual standard. Warm weather, ideal for golf, cut down the matinee crowds to some extent, but night business easily made up for it.

At the Royal, Clara Bow in "It," after establishing an attendance record for second-week runs, did a good third week's business, while "The Scarlet Letter," at the Newman, played to a week's attendance slightly larger than usual. At the Pantages the picture, "Upstream," augmented by a stage attraction of an indoor circus, did one of the best weeks in several months at that theatre.

"The Night of Love" at the Liberty, on its second week, was productive of better attendance than the average, which may or may not have been due to the fact that the program was strengthened the second week by a bathing beauty selection contest. "Risky Business," at the Globe, played to an average week's attendance.

Tampa

THE Victory closed its vaudeville season a little early this year and brought in the Griffith classic, "The Birth of a Nation," for a run of four days. This picture pulled excellent business at 50-cent prices.

"Casey at the Bat," which played the first four days at the Tampa, went over well but the night show was a little off, caused no doubt by the big draw at Billy Sunday's revival meeting with Aimee McPherson listening in. However, the next three days made up for the loss. "Getting Gertie's Garter" was the attraction for the last three and it did well.

The Strand marked up a good record for the week. Mae Murray in "Altars of Desire" brought out all her followers the first two days, then Marie Prevost pulled in plenty of men, as well as the wives, in "For Wives Only," and "Women Love Diamonds" kept 'em coming the last two.

The Franklin did its usual business with two Westerns, "Desert's Valley" and "Western Whirlwind," and the Liberty feature; "The Wreck." Perfect weather prevailed.

Milwaukee

COMEDY marked the type of pictures in the downtown theatres this week, all big attractions, each well exploited—a situation that made competition of the keenest sort. The crowds selected the Tunney-Dempsey fight pictures, showing at the Garden, as the most popular attraction. Crowds about the lobby and on the street in front of the theatre at all hours of the day attested to its extreme popularity. "Casey at the Bat," at the Strand, and "The Beloved Rogue," held over for its second week at the Alhambra, vied with "McFadden's Flats" at the Wisconsin. "Casey at the Bat" is being held over for a second week to satisfy the Beery fans. The "Fire Brigade," at the Merrill, drew fair patronage.

Business at the neighborhood houses this week was unusually good. The fair weather brought out patrons to crowd the houses.

The "Kid Brother," showing at the Savoy, Tivoli and Milwaukee, brought gratifying results. The State Theatre ran a Red-Headed Girl Contest in connection with "Red Heads Preferred." Weeks of exploitation paved the way to unusual interest in the picture.

Indianapolis

IT was an off week for movie houses here last week. The State basketball tourney Friday and Saturday drew heavy from picture shows the last half.

Otis Skinner, in "The Honor of the Family," first half, and "The Student Prince," at English's, again the last half both sold good. Weather was fair.

With the Vitaphone on the third week, The Circle held the lead on downtown houses. The film was "An Affair of the Follies."

"Let It Rain," at the Apollo and "Casey at the Bat," at Ohio, other major downtown houses, and neighborhood shows, reported only fair business.

Des Moines

"THE BELOVED ROGUE," playing at the Des Moines last week, did very well. However, not as well as might have been expected. The picture received favorable comment.

"A Kiss In a Taxi" did not hold up well for the week's run. Business suffered at the Capitol and the deduction is that the box office will not report a good week unless the picture is there to draw them.

"The Mysterious Rider," playing the half week at the Strand, did unusually well. "Faust" did not start so well.

While "Variety" played up strong, did a big week, it is not predicted that the Des Moines public will ask for pictures of this type very often.

Minneapolis

BUSINESS last week in Minneapolis picture theatres was little better than average, although the weather continued extremely mild and there was not a great deal in the way of competition. "What Price Glory" came to the Metropolitan Theatre, and the film did a very good business, warranting the management holding it over for a second week. "McFadden's [illegible] its second week at the Strand, but the business did not justify a third week, although an unusually successful comedy sometimes stays that long at the Strand. Corinne Griffith in "Three Hours" played to average houses at the State Theatre, and the Garrick, with Norma Shearer in "The Demi-Bride," reported only the usual program picture business. Jack Holt in "The Mysterious Rider" proved a fairly strong attraction at the Lyric. Outlying houses, which include the Loring, Lagoon and Rialto, experienced the same average business as did the downtown theatres. These theatres, which show three pictures a week, played such attractions as "Paradise for Two," "Hotel Imperial," "Just Another Blonde," "The Canadian," "Pals in Paradise" and "Love 'Em and Leave 'Em." Pantages exploited the Russian film, "Michael Strogoff," above its regular vaudeville program, advertised it heavily and had gratifying results at the box office. The picture theatres probably experienced their keenest competition from the Shubert Theatre, where the Bainbridge Stock Company was offering "Rain."

Seattle

BUSINESS at the first-run houses was just about average last week, with the second week of John Barrymore's "Beloved Rogue" at the United Artists Theatre reaching the highest attendance level. The Coliseum with "The Red Mill" and the Fifth Avenue Theatre with "An Affair of the Follies" fell slightly below the mark of past weeks, although a clever stage show, "The Follies of 1900" at the Fifth Avenue, succeeded in bringing in some additional business.

"The Sensation Seekers," at the Columbia Theatre, was only a fair box office attraction. "College Days," at the Embassy Theatre and "The Canyon of Light," at Pantages, were average program attractions. "Man Bait," at the Blue Mouse Theatre, did the usual big business, the twenty-five cents admission policy continuing to pack the house.

The policy of the Blue Mouse Theatre is being watched with interest these days, because Vitaphone is scheduled to make its bow to Seattle audiences at this theatre next week. John Hamrick's Theatre has done a steady big business for several seasons as a straight twenty-five cents theatre, and the entire industry is awaiting with interest the result when Vitaphone is installed and prices are raised to fifty and seventy-five cents.

Atlanta

BEAUTIFUL spring weather both helped and hindered local box offices this week. The Howard did very well on "A Kiss in a Taxi," and the Metropolitan, with "Homestruck," and a local ukulele contest, drew excellent business.

"Held by the Law" pleased well at Keith's Georgia, and Tom Mix demonstrated his popularity at Loew's. The feature billed and played Monday was "No Man's Gold." However, because of no good print being accessible, the management substituted "The Last Trail," starring Mix, on Tuesday for the balance of the week.

The Rialto drew good returns on "Man Bait," which scored a ten-strike with its patrons, and the smaller downtown houses came along nicely. Of these the New Alamo broke its mid-week record on Wednesday with the Paramount re-issue, "The [illegible] Winner Takes Glory" day.

"The Beloved Rogue" did fairly well at the St. Francis and "The Understanding Heart," at Loew's Warfield, did well on days when there was no rain. Part of the attraction there was the exploitation act in which Rube Wolf starred.

"The Rat," at the Cameo Theatre, was more attractive than contemplated by the management, although they expected to do well, as they did. "Almost A Lady," at the Golden Gate, was well liked, but not as much as some of the other houses. "Held by the Law," caused many to appear at the California and the audience seemed pleased. The neighborhood houses, because of the rain, The Coliseum on Geary, near Sixth Avenue, doing especially well, although the Alexandria, another Geary house, did not do so well. One of the attractions at the Coliseum was Max Dolin and his orchestra.

Baltimore

PATRONAGE at all the moving picture theatres in Baltimore seemed to be off during the week beginning Monday, March 14, and not only is this attributed to the Lenten season but it may be affected to some extent by the housekeeping and cooking talks which were given three afternoons and evenings of the week at the Lyric Theatre under the auspices of a local newspaper. Many thousands of women were drawn there.

Fine Control of Fire in Shipments of Film

IN his address before the convention of the National Fire Waste Council of Washington, D.C., March 17, Hickman Price, director of Conservation for the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, commended the remarkable control over fire hazards as evidenced by the fact that out of a five-year period when literally billions of feet of film have been shipped, only three fires occurred with property loss of $50 for two and $300 for the third.

Approximately 125,000 reels of film are shipped daily in the United States, or 37,500,000,000 feet examined, repaired and shipped during the 300 working days during the year. About 60 per cent of this is shipped parcel post or express over the railroads, the balance by trucks and local pick-ups.

During the last four years there has been invested in film exchange buildings and realty $13,914,000.

Del Rio in "'98"; Location Unit Broadcasts

DOLORES DEL RIO will play the principal feminine role in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "The Trail of '98," following the signing of a contract in New York with Edwin Carewe to whom Miss Del Rio is under personal contract.

Dolores Del Rio

On Saturday evening, March 19, Director Clarence Brown and his location company broadcast by remote control from the height sof the Continental Divide through Station KOA of Denver. Most of the principals of the production unit demonstrated their skill as entertainers with Freeman Talbot of KOA acting as announcer and Clarence Brown as master of ceremonies.. More programmes, to be sent out several times weekly, are planned by Brown and his company.

"It," starring Clara Bow, did excellent business at Loew's Valencia, atop Loew's Century, and "Wolf's Clothing" came along with very good business at Warners' Metropolitan. The business done by "Beau Geste" at Ford's Theatre, a legitimate house charging a $1.50 top price, warranted the management of that playhouse holding the picture for a third week.

"Tin Gods" did pretty good at the New Theatre and other pictures which did good during the week included "The Broncho Twister," at the Garden; "Spangles" at Keith's Hippodrome and "The General" at the Century.

"Sealed Lips" and "The First Night" did poor business at the Embassy on a split week policy.

Central Pennsylvania

OPENING of a new first-run theatre in Harrisburg—the Russell, at Thirteenth and Thompson streets—which attracted big crowds all week, and the presence in the Majestic (legitimate), of a formidable counter attraction in the form of six performances of the original New York company in "Rose Marie," might have been expected to cut seriously into the business of the old-line picture houses in that city, but actually had no such effect.

The combination of splendid weather—spring prematurely arrived—with especially strong film attractions served to stimulate business to a most gratifying degree. "Tell It To The Marines," with Lon Chaney, at Loew's Regent was perhaps the best-liked and best-patronized of the movie shows.

Nevertheless the Colonial, where "McFadden's Flats" was the offering, did far more than ordinarily good business. "Sorrows of Satan," at the Victoria, suffered somewhat as a result of the big crowds drawn by the exceptionally popular attractions at Loew's and the Colonial, both of which latter theatres, by the way, had many good lobby displays to aid in the exploitation. The State, part vaudeville, had "Upstream" as its feature film attraction, and enjoyed good box office returns.

Albany

WITH unusually mild weather prevailing throughout the past week, business was good at practically all of the first run theatres in Albany, N.Y., despite Lent and competing attractions. At the Leland Corinne Griffith in "Three Hours" and the reissue of Charlie Chaplin's "Shoulder Arms" played to S.R.O. business each night and with good matinees.

At the Mark Ritz, "God Gave Me Twenty Cents" also ran to exceptional business with the crowds standing each night. At the Mark Strand, "The Beloved Rogue" did fairly well, although not up to expectations. This theatre has been playing to exceptionally large audiences for the last three or four months during which time presentation acts have been given, and which have no doubt been responsible to a large degree for the crowds. These acts are no longer booked as the Vitaphone will become operative this week.

At the Troy Theatre, "The Beloved Rogue" played to but fair audiences during the first four days, while "Faust" the last three days of the week did not do anything to speak of in drawing patronage. The mere fact that the springlike weather brought out the automobiles by the thousands, may also have been responsible for the apparent lack of interest in the pictures being shown.

Court Hears Plea for Review of Eastman Case

ARGUMENTS on the appeal of the Federal Trade Commission for a review of the decision of the New York Court of Appeals, in which the right of the Eastman Kodak Company to own three film laboratories was upheld as not constituting an unfair method of competition or an effort to create a monopoly in the sale of motion picture film, were heard by the United States Supreme Court, Washington, D.C., on March 11.

The case arose from an order issued by the commission following an investigation, requiring the company to abandon an agreement covering the sale and use of film by independent laboratories and to dispose of three laboratories which the commission held were acquired by the company as a means of coercing certain independent laboratories into making an agreement whereby they used Eastman film exclusively.

The company carried the order to the court, which upheld its right to own laboratories, and the commission appealed from that decision.

Salt Lake City

BUSINESS at all of the first run theatres of Salt Lake City held up very good last week in spite of the fact that occasional flurries were had intermittently throughout the week.

"The Sorrows of Satan," accompanied by a special prologue offered by "The Summerhays Trio," went over good at the Paramount Empress with capacity houses being enjoyed.

The Victory Theatre had a successful week's run of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, "The Demi-Bride."

The Vitaphone attractions at the American Theatre included Gigli, the noted tenor, among other features, and in connection with the First National production, "The Sea Tiger," maintained a good week at this house.

The showing of "The Nervous Wreck," a Producers Distributing Corporation special at the Gem Theatre, brought good results, it is announced. The Orpheum Theatre ran the Universal picture, "The Combat," this week in connection with Ackerman Harris vaudeville.

"Altars of Desire" was shown at the Pantages Theatre, as was also one of the Universal series, "The Collegians." A double bill was offered at the Kinema, with "Rustling for Cupid," the surprise feature. Second run theatres here also had good crowds all week, with business at the neighborhood houses not yet being satisfactory.

Oklahoma City

THE Criterion Theatre, showing "The Scarlet Letter," and the Liberty Theatre with "Michael Strogoff," led the week in theatre attractions. Both pictures were shown throughout the week to good audiences. The Liberty, which is a twenty-cent house, kept its prices the same for this big attraction, but expended its advertising money to good effect in the daily papers and billboards and did an exceptional business.

"Easy Pickings" started the week with just fair business and was succeeded with "Rubber Tires," which went well with the good sized audiences. "Mysterious Rider" drew well at the Capitol the first four days of the week.

Studio Briefs

Betty Bronson, whose "Ritzy" has been completed, has left Hollywod for New York on a three weeks' vacation. While in the East she will visit her grandmother.

Emil Jannings, now working in "The Way of All Flesh" for Paramount, has received word from China that his brother, Werner, has safely survived the disturbances at Shanghai.

When Gotham finishes "Sinews of Steel" actual studio work will be started on "The Woman Who Did Not Care," a story based on the novel by Rida Johnson Young and which Sam Sax states will cost more to produce than any other picture made by his organization. Gotham is now conducting negotiations for the services of a prominent director and a leading woman for the title role.

Camera work was begun this week on cabaret scenes from "Poor Girls," the Columbia production which William James Craft is directing. Production Manager Harry Cohn engaged the services of Fanchon and Marco to stage this scene which features dancers of the coast entertainers. One elaborate feature which Marco suggested for the night club will be six living pillars which will hold up the ceiling of the ballrom.

Winfield R. Sheehan, Fox Films vice-president, has signed Phillip Klein, son of the late playwright, Charles Klein, to write exclusively for Fox Films for a long term of years. Klein is now at work on "Grandma Bernle Learns Her Letters," the screen version of the I. A. R. Wylie story which was published in the "Saturday Evening Post." John Ford will direct the Wylie story upon his return from Europe, where he is doing extensive research work.

"Simple Sis," a new Louise Fazenda comedy, and a Sydney Chaplin extended run production went into the preliminary stages of filming at the studio of the Warner Bros. this week. The Fazenda film is scheduled for release among the current program of Warner pictures and the Chaplin special will be held over for next season. Al Kenyon is now doing the script of "Simple Sis" which Herman Raymaker will direct. Chaplin, Charles Reisner and Bryan Foy collaborated on the story and gags of the new Chaplin number and the script is now complete. Camera work will begin within the next fortnight.

Fredonia, N.Y., Permits Sunday Shows After 2 P.M.

At the village election, held March 14, at Fredonia, N.Y., the question of whether exhibitions of motion pictures for profit should be permitted after 2 P.M. Sundays or no resulted in the affirmative vote of 1,184 against the negative vote of 830.

Grange at Work on "The Motor Maniac" for F.B.O.

"The Motor Maniac," the new "Red" Grange starring picture for F.B.O., has been in production for the last week under Sam Woods' direction.

Short Subjects and Serials

"Newlyweds' Shopping Tour" Opens at Colony

"THE NEWLYWEDS' SHOPPING TOUR," the latest of the Stern Bros. comedy series adapted from George McManus' newspaper comic strip, "The Newlyweds and Their Baby," opened this week at the Colony Theatre in New York City. According to Leo Abrams, short subject manager of Universal's New York exchange, it is the first two-reel comedy to play on Broadway in six months.

Augments Pathe News New York Staff

Ray Hall, Pathe News editor, has announced the appointments of Joe O'Brien, Floyd Traynham and Harry W. Smith to the headquarters staff of Pathe News at New York City.

O'Brien has been stationed on the staff of another news reel, attached to its New York office. He but recently returned from a tour of South America where he made a series of pictures. Traynham comes to Pathe from Atlanta, Ga., where he relinquished an owner's interest in a still-camera concern. He has had wide experience as still cameraman, having covered the South and practically all of the European countries. Smith has had experience as production manager, cameraman and has done microscopic and scientific work. He twice traveled through the South American jungles, his last job having been cameraman with the Dickey Expedition.

"U" Signs Desmond and Daugherty

Universal has just signed William Desmond and Jack Daugherty, who will make serials for Universal's 1927-28 schedule. Desmond is to star in "The Vanishing Rider," a new chapter play written for Universal by Val Cleveland. Work will start on it as soon as Desmond completes his present vaudeville engagement. Daugherty will appear in two Universal serials during the coming months: "The Trail of the Tigers," from the story by Courtney Ryley Cooper, and "Haunted Island," an adaptation of "Pleasure Island," by Frank R. Adams.

Continuing Work on "Chronicles" Series

Production on the "Chronicles of America" series will be continued according to A. H. Brooks of the company producing the series who states that actual work will be resumed upon the completion of research and experimentation which is now being conducted under the direction of Dr. Dan C. Nolan of Yale University.

Out of the 32 two-reel historical dramas on the Pathe releasing schedules, fifteen have been released by that company.

Twelve From Educational

Company's Line-Up for April Consists of Six Two-Reels, Two One-Reels and Four Cartoons

EDUCATIONAL'S [illegible] jects for the month of April numbers a dozen subjects not counting the Kinograms Newsreel which is released twice weekly. In the Educational bag for April there are six two-reel comedies, two one-reel comedies and four animated cartoons.

The first release on the programme is "Brain Storms," a Mermaid with Clem Beauchamp, George Davis and Phil Dunham as the featured comedians and Lucille Hutton as the leading lady. Stephen Roberts directed this one under the supervision of Jack White. It is released April 3. "Jail Birdies," a new Bobby Vernon comedy in which Frances Lee has the leading feminine part, is scheduled for April 10. Eddie Baker and Billy Engle are among the players whom Walter Graham directed. A new Tuxedo comedy, starring Johnny Arthur and set for release on April 10, is "The Draw-Back," in which appear Kathryn McGuire, Al Thompson, Henry Murdock, Wallace Lupino and Glen Cavender. Norman Taurog directed.

Lupino Lane's contribution for the month is "Naughty Boy." Kathryn McGuire is the girl and Wallace Lupino is a member [illegible] rected. It will be issued on April 17. Billy [illegible] Duffy and Bill Irving.

[illegible] John. Stephen Roberts directed Clem Beauchamp, Lucille Hutton, Jack Lloyd, Glen Cavender and Phil Dunham. This is also scheduled for April 24.

The first cartoon subject for the month is "Felix the Cat in Germ Mania," April 3, and "Felix the Cat in Sax Appeal," April 17. Besides the two Sullivan subjects [illegible] "The Prince of Whales," April 10, and "Racing Fever," April 24. Pathe's April 3 Releases

Priscilla Dean and Herbert Rawlinson in "Slipping Wives;" Nine Other Subjects Included

THE latest Hal Roach Star comedy—"Slipping Wives," with Priscilla Dean and Herbert Rawlinson in the cast—is the principal short subject on Pathe's releasing schedule for the week of April 3. The nine other offerings for the week are: "Smith's Surprise," one of the "Jimmy Smith" series which Mack Sennett is producing; "Hiking Through Holland With Will Rogers," Pathe Review, No. 14; "The Medicine Man," an Aesop Film Fable; "Water Sprites," a Grantland Rice Sportlight; Topics of the Day, No. 14; the concluding chapter of "On Guard," and the two current issues of Pathe News, Nos. 30 and 31.

In the Hal Roach number comedy characterizations are given by Albert Conti, Stan Leurel and Oliver Hardy. Fred Guiol directed, under the supervision of F. Richard Jones; Lambert did the costuming.

The Will Rogers subject is the second release of a series of twelve of the "With Will Rogers, Our Unofficial Ambassador Abroad." The usual trio of principals—Raymond McKee, Ruth Hiatt and Mary Ann Jackson—are seen in "Smith's Surprise," which Gil Pratt directed under J. A. Waldron's supervision.

"Foiled" is the title of the final chapter of "On Guard," the Pathe serial which was filmed with military scenes and details through the courtesy of the United States Army. Incorporated in Pathe Review, No. 14 are "Underground Sweets," the planting and harvesting of sugar beets in Montana; "Villa Vistas," Pathecolor scenes of some of the estates in the French Riviera country; "Animal Crackers," dumb animals in a sketch on the studio lot. The Grantland Rice Sportlight offers scenes with a water background in Bermuda and features Martha Norleins, Helen Meany, Agnes Geraghty and other members of the Women's Swimming Association.

Educational Moving Into Paramount Bldg. Soon

EARLY in April Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., plans to move into its new quarters in the Paramount Building, Times Square, New York; the company expects to be established there by April 16. The major portion of the moving will be done on Saturday afternoon, April 9, from the present home office at 370 Seventh Avenue. Business will be resumed in the new office the following Monday morning without any interruption.

Educational will occupy the entire 22nd floor and will have 8,000 square feet of floor space at its disposal. The new location will be brighter, as there are nearly 60 windows, and more convenient, it is said. In the new quarters a complete centralization of all departments will be made possible.

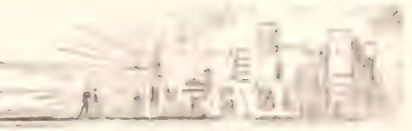
Battle for Riches Theme of "Melting Millions"

THE story of "Melting Millions," the new Patheserial which features Allene Ray and Walter Miller, depicts a battle for great wealth between the heroine and crooks who covets a wealthy estate, the rightful property of the heroine. Spencer Bennet directed the new Pathe chapter play, the first chapter of which will be released on April 10.

E. J. Cour Appointed to Pathe's Chicago Staff

The editorial staff of Pathe News has been augmented by the appointment this week by Ray Hall, edtior-in-chief, of Eugene J. Cour, who will make his headquarters at Chicago. Mr. Cour will supervise the field work of the cameramen in the Mid West region, keeping in touch with all news sources, thus insuring more competent work throughout his territory. In addition to Mr. Cour, Editor Hall has engaged the services of John C. Zimmerman, formerly connected with the New York staff of newsreels, who will work out of Chicago under Cour's direction.

"Joneses" Series Well in Work at Stern Studio



The Stern Bros. have "Keeping Up With the Joneses" well into production at their studio in Hollywood. The players decided upon to play the characters in this series of thirteen two-reelers are: Harry Long, Stella Adams, Addie McPhail and Gene Laymon. Gus Meins is directing and Page Wright, comedy writer, also has a hand in the productions. Two of the comedies have already been finished; the first is called "Keeping in Trim."

Beaudine Making New Jimmie Adams Comedy

HAROLD BEAUDINE is commencing production on a new Jimmie Adams comedy for Educational, based on an original story by Frank Roland Conklin. So far no title has been chosen for the picture, but Ann Christy, recently made a leading lady, will appear opposite Adams.

Studio Briefs

In the cast of Columbia's "Pleasure Before Business," are Lester Bernard and Henri Menjou. The former is the younger brother of the late Barney Bernard, while the latter is the younger brother of Adolphe Menjou. "Pleasure Before Business" is Frank R. Strayer's latest comedy drama for Columbia.

Artclass Pictures has signed Robert Frazer to portray Craig Kennedy in a forthcoming series of twelve two reelers, which will be released one a month commencing August 1, 1927. Dallas M. Fitzgerald will be in charge of production.

Richard Dix's next Paramount picture, his first to be made on the West Coast since "The Vanishing American," will be written by Ray S. Harris, who adapted Dix's football picture, "The Quarterback," and Sam Mintz, who gagged it. The title and theme of the new story is unannounced.

Lionel Belmore, Frank Elliott and Lon Peff have been signed for supporting roles in "The Tender Hour," the George Fitzmaurice production now being filmed.

Lester F. Scott, Jr., producer of Pathe Westerns, has placed in production a new Buffalo Bill, Jr., starring vehicle temporarily titled "Paid Off." Having completed initial scenes at the Chadwick Studios, the company is now on location at Indio.

Kathryn McGuire will be the boarding-school chum of Colleen Moore in "Naughty But Nice." The balance of Miss Moore's supporting cast announced to date includes Donald Reed, in the leading male role opposite the star, Edythe Chapman and Clarissa Selwynne.

Marion Davies this week began work on her new production, "Quality Street" at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios. The picture is being directed by Sidney Franklin from the screen play prepared by Albert Lewin and Hans Kraly.

First National has purchased an original story by Lenore Coffee, entitled "Lonesome Ladies." The picture will go into production at an early date with Lewis Stone and Anna Q. Nilsson in the featured roles. It will be one of First National's early summer releases.

Doris Henderson, member of the scenario staff at Paramount's West Coast studio, is preparing the screen adaptation for "The World at Her Feet," Florence Vidor's next Paramount starring vehicle. The film play will be a screen translation of a French stage success, "Attorney Balbee and Her Husband," by Georges Berr and Maurice Verneuil. Miss Anderson's most recent work was the adaptation for "Kiss in a Taxi," starring Bebe Daniels. Production on the new Vidor film is scheduled to begin within the next two weeks, with Luther Reed directing.

The company making "The Country Beyond Law," Ken Maynard's new First National starring film, is now working on location near Fresno, Cal., for the ranch sequences which picture the introduction of United States [illegible] in a country infested with gunmen. The company will spend at least two weeks on the location and will then return to the studio for interiors. Dorothy Dwan is the Maynard's leading woman. Other players are Tom Santschi, Noah Young, Gibson Gowland and Billy Butts.

Rex Lease, one of the players in F. B. O.'s "Moulders of Men," has been signed to a long-term contract with that organization. His first assignment, under the contract, will be "Not For Publication," which Ralph Ince will direct. Ince will also play the leading role. Lease will have the part of a newspaper reporter in this production, a role which he played in real life before entering the films.

The role of a United States cavalry officer in "The Bugle Call," has been assigned Svend Borg, former interpreter for Greta Garbo, and Swedish consular attache. He was an actor on the stage in his native land before becoming a consular attache. This is his first screen appearance. Nancy Price and Mary Jane Irving, child actresses, are to be Jackie Coogan's playmates in "The Bugle Call."

During the past week five former Grange players were signed by Jess Smith to enact minor roles in "The Poor Nut," the college farce which he is producing for First National. From Iowa University come Paul Minick and Harold "Tubby" Griffin, from Penn State Mike Machalsky, from Indiana Larry Marks and from U. S. C. Bullett Baker. Among the prominent ex-college athletes is Fred Lorenz, former Iowa track star. Smith also has Cornelius Keefe, New York stage actor, in the cast in the role of the cheer leader—the role that he originally played in the stage version of the Nugent play.

"Diamonds in the Rough," and Natli Carr, a Russian actress new to the American screen and stage, made their debut the other day at the First National Burbank studios where photography was begun on the Milton Sills vehicle which Ray Rockett is prducing for First National release. Charles Brabin is directing the story, which was adapted from George W. Sutton's magazine story, "The Dawn of Tomorrow," with continuity by Mary O'Hara. William McCann is assisting Brabin and Charles Van Enger presides over the cameras. Other members of the cast are Charles Gerrard, Edward Peil and John Miljan.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's original schedule with regard to Lillian Gish will be carried out. As a consequence the actress' next picture starring vehicle will be "The Wind," to be followed by "The Enemy." Lars Hanson will appear in "The Wind," which Victor Seastrom is to direct. Work will start on the new production as soon as Hanson finishes the title role of "Captain Salvation."

Upon the completion of "Naughty Nannette," her present starring picture, Viola Dana will start work on "Follow Your [illegible]

[illegible] an exclusive contract by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. He has just completed a role in "'Frisco Sally Levy," a farce comedy as yet unreleased.

Tom Kennedy, whose hard-boiled visage has been seen in several of Paramount's feature comedies, will play the part of a blundering tenderfoot in "Drums of the Desert," the forthcoming picturization by Paramount of a novel by Zane Grey. John Waters will direct. Warner Baxter will play the romantic lead.

The lead in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "The Callahans and the Murphys," will be portrayed by Sally O'Neil. Another important role in the film has been assigned Marie Dressler, who is now on her way to the Coast. The leading man will be Lawrence Gray, borrowed from Paramount for the part. Gertrude Olmstead and Eddie Gribbon are also members of the cast. The picture was adapted to the screen by Frances Marion and will be directed by George Hill.

Hobart Henley will direct "Spring Fever," the William Haines starring vehicle which Sam Taylor was originally scheduled to direct, but due to a change of plans, the latter was called back to the Mary Pickford unit, where he is under contract. Frank Currier and George Nichols were this week added to Haines' support.

Lucian Littlefield has just signed a Universal contract to appear in "The Small Bachelor" which went into production this week at Universal City under the direction of William Seiter, who is directing Andre Beranger and Barbara Kent.

Viola Brothers Shore, contributor to several national magazines, has joined the list of scenarists now working at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio. Under her new contract she will do original stories and adaptations.

"Roped In"
(Educational-Mermaid Comedy—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Paul Thompson)

HERE is a decidedly rough-house comedy filled with action from the very start. Al St. John is the star. He is the author of a book on wrestling based on pure theory. To exploit the book the publisher decides to stage a match between the author and Bull Montana. If you know Bull you will get the possibilities. They are realized to the full. But things start on the train en route to the bout. Bull encounters Al and they mix it up. By chance Bull goes through the car window. He arrives limping. Of course, there is the feminine influence to refine proceedings but does it? It does not. The wrestling match is the wildest sort of burlesque with Al ultimately winning. How it would be unfair to divulge. Sufficient that this is a typical Mermaid comedy with the same group of farceurs, Al St. John, Lucille Hutton, Robert Graves, with Bull Montana as an added starter to provide the fun-making.

Jack White supervised the comedy, with Charles Lamont directing.

"Smith's Surprise"
(Pathe—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

FURTHER adventures of the newly-married Jimmy Smiths and their baby. Wifie plans to surprise hubby by presenting him with a car for his birthday, also contracting with the auto-salesman to teach her to drive. Jimmy's jealousy is aroused when he sees the salesman driving his wife about town so, in company with an office "friend" he sets out to "get" the salesman. The "friend" provides a car and he and Jimmy are on the trail, winding up in a chase at the end of which explanations are made and peace reigns until the next of this series. The baby is a surprisingly good actress.

There's lots of good fun in this number of this series and it's a perfectly plausible idea.

"The Pride of Pipe Rock"
(Universal-Mustang—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Paul Thompson)

THIS is the tale of a marriage that did not come off. It concerns Pee Wee Holmes and Ben Corbett. The former was the bride—disguised, of course, in a lace curtain and some borrowed feminine finery—and the latter the groom. Ben had proposed to Susie Harper and thought she had accepted. Accordingly he got a license and the justice. Susie did not mean it so got Pee Wee to substitute as the bride. From this you will get some idea of the fun put into this two-reeler with all the familiar Pipe Rock characters much in evidence. It was obviously built for laughs and gets its fair share of them.

Vin Moore directed. Released April 23.

"Lookout Buster"
(Universal-Stern Brothers—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Paul Thompson)

"BUSTER BROWN" is threatened with the loss of "Tige." Fortunately, the sagacious dog is not lost except for part of the two reels that compose this latest two-reel comedy.

The tale goes this way: Being hot weather all dogs are supposed to be put in quarantine, including the redoubtable Tige. Naturally, Buster and Mary Jane rebel. Their rebellion takes the form of putting Tige in a box and having him and themselves driven off on a truck. They fall from the truck but Tige's box arrives at a robbers' cave. They play poker on top of the box in which he is confined. He draws the money down through an opening. His presence discovered, they attempt to kill him. He escapes and from the top of a cliff rolls boulders down on them with such accuracy that they are all laid out cold. The rest is easy. The detectives pick up the trail, get the robbers, reward Tige and give him his freedom.

Arthur Trimble, Doreen Turner and Tige, as usual, under Gus Meins' direction. Released April 4.

"Felix the Cat in Barn Yarns"
(Educational-Sullivan Animated Cartoon—One Reel)

VERY materialistic this creation of Pat Sullivan; very little of the spiritual. Always his object in life sems to be food. This issue differs not a whit from many of its predecessors in its motif even if the treatment is varied. Temporarily discouraged from stealing a diner's food by a dose of pepper, Felix pursues a duck as a possible meal. To the edge of a pond he follows on. Onto the pond goes the daring cat. Of course the duck swims but Felix does not. He sinks but is rescued by the conscience-stricken decoy. The latter wins the cat's undying friendship. The first proof of this is when Felix inserts a piece of pipe in the duck's throat so that the farmer's axe has no effect. Then the farmer attempts to drown Felix, but he is rescued by three fish. To repay them for their kindness the cat unhooks worms from the farmer's line. It is good fun.—PAUL THOMPSON.

"Hot Air"
(Universal-Bluebird—One Reel)

CHARLES PUFFY goes up in the air in several ways. He is in love with Elsie Tarron and jealous of her falling for a French aviator. Incidentally the latter's scene with Elsie in the house telling her stories of his deeds is one of the best in the picture and is admirably acted by both. Charles assists at the piano strumming and pounding, while the tete-a-tete is going on. The aviator takes Elsie aloft. Charles climbs into a plane which is started by a mechanic who thinks he is an aviator. Charley thinks the passenger in front of him the pilot. Once in the air with no guide the plane does the thousand and one crazy things one might expect of it. It is filled with trick photography and quite amusing.

Charles Martel and Lydia Yeamans Titus are also in the cast. Sweet directed. Released March 18.—PAUL THOMPSON.

(Fox-Varities—One Reel)

APRIL 3rd's release of 875 feet of Fox Varities takes the camera operator and the movie follower to one of the most beautiful cities in the world—and I know whereof I speak—Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. Complete photographic advantage as far as is possible in less than a thousand feet, has been taken of the beauties of the place. It is shown from all angles, from the mountain tops and from the street level and—best of all—from a hydroplane. The latter reveals perfectly the geographical beauty of the city from the air. If the spectator is afraid of heights he will have to close his eyes for most of the film because to all intents and purposes the movie follower is always alongside of the camera operator. Photographically, also, the issue is admirable.

PAUL THOMPSON.

"Jane's Hubby"
(Universal-Stern—Jane Series—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Paul Thompson)

THIS is quite an amusing comedy Scott Pembroke has directed in "What Happened to Jane" series. It is released April 20. It tells the tale of Jane's new husband who is brought home. Any husband is objectionable to her parents and this youth particularly so. Hence he gets a position in the household as a colored maid. And then the fun begins. The colored butler falls hard for Jane's husband and is continually being hit for a goal by the latter. The black make-up comes off every time he kisses Jane and that helps a lot. After as exciting a half hour as you can ask for, the honeymooners find sancutary in jail by getting arrested for speeding. But—their parents also are locked up for the same reason. Inasmuch as the former is for six days, the latter for thirty, there is a chance for some happiness for the lovers when their term is completed.

It is well written, directed and acted and will entertain.

"First Prize"
(Educational-Cameo—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Paul Thompson)

PHIL DUNHAM becomes a painter for the purposes of the comedy. He paints a portrait of Alice Belcher, the movie mother of Toy Gallagher, because the former insists that the suitor who wins her daughter must be a great painter. Judging by his portrait he is not. But he thinks he is and carries his painting to an exhibition for judgment. Unfortunately going through the streets he has landed in some hay which has stuck to his coat. This means that a veritable Noah's Ark of animals follow the hay—and Phil—to the exhibition. With animals all over the place mingling and butting the guests you will get some idea of what an orderly well-behaved exhibition it turns out to be.

Director Mark Sandrich has seen to it that the most complete advantage has been taken of the opportunities that this combination of circumstances represent. A veritable madhouse of animals and humans.

"Hiking Through Holland With Will Rogers"
(Pathe—One Reel)

CLEVER subtitles, the brain-children of Will Rogers, interesting views of people and country and a few mild bits of comedy make up the second of the "Our Unofficial Ambassador Abroad" series of which there will be twelve in all. While not counting lost the time spent in looking at this number I rather expected better from Rogers, having seen some of his previous film efforts.

You won't experience any trouble selling it, for who amongst us doesn't want to see the famous wit of the day —HAROLD FLAVIN.

"Water Sprites"
(Pathe-Sportlight—One Reel)

ANOTHER of the always interesting reels dealing with sports made up by Grantland Rice. This number, as the title implies, deals with swimming. Rice takes us to Bermuda, where a number of national women stars are wintering and keeping in trim. They demonstrate fancy dives, new strokes and water-waltzing.

All this takes place in the "Blue Grotto," and, photographed in color, it is a very picturesque spot.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

Bebe Has a Slapstick Comedy

Reviewed by Laurence Reid

THE law of averages is at it again proving that Bebe Daniels has had too much luck of late with her pictures to keep up the good record. Her newest exposure is celluloid takes her into the hokum fields of slapstick—and there is not enough of it to keep it going all the way. Consequently, when the action slackens in its pace, they fill up the gaps with flying glasses and crockery. A weak story at best it needs constant aid from the breakable china. The star carries out her assignment in her role of a waitress in a Parisian cafe.

The plot—what there is of it—projects the heroine as very much opposed to the osculatory advances of her customers. Which gives her the opportunity to demonstrate a spirited arm and hand when the big boulevardier happens along. After he has kissed the girl in a taxi she learns that he can help her boy friend in putting his painting over. So she allows him to become serious. Which, naturally, stirs up a pretty kettle of fish since the benefactor has a wife who demands explanations—to say nothing of the youth who wants a show-down.

So the story builds to its obvious conclusion—with complications developing to keep the pot a-boiling. The slapstick intrudes ever so often—and most of it is pretty good because of the presence of Chester Conklin and George Marion, Jr., as funmaker and titler, respectively. Miss Daniels renders a clever characterization.

The Cast: Bebe Daniels, Chester Conklin, Douglas Gilmore, Henry Kolker, Richard Tucker, Eulalie Jensen, Rose Burdick, Jocelyn Lee. Director, Clarence Badger.

THEME: Comedy-romance of waitress who becomes friendly with benefactor in order to help her fiance.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The comedy moments by Conklin. The subtitles. The breezy performance by star. The incident. The development of the conflict. The settings.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Tease along comedy lines. Play up as breezy comedy with star giving dashing performance. Play up Conklin.

DRAWING POWER: Suitable for neighborhood houses.

Johnny Goes from Shoes to Sheiks

Reviewed by L. C. Moen

THIS latest Johnny Hines vehicle is somewhat slow in starting, but once it gets under way it unwinds a goodly number of laughs, chiefly as the hero plays the part of a conventional shoe clerk who forgets to do the right thing from morning to night. In the shoe store he meets Thomas Brooks, who conducts world tours, and his lovely daughter, May, and unburdens his suppressed dreams of traveling. May leaves her vanity case, and Johnny, who loses his job, goes to her father's office and is engaged to conduct a tour through Egypt on which May goes. She is chaperoned by an officious aunt, and numerous complications on shipboard follow. Photographs taken by an amateur incriminate Johnny, and when they arrive in Egypt May is not speaking to him. The Rough Riders

Picturesque and Worth Seeing

THE much-publicized picture of Teddy Roosevelt and the Spanish-American War certainly lives up to its advance notices. Seeing as how these films which embrace wartime adventures must crackle with action this celluloid treatment of the hectic days of '98 sets a fast pace and keeps it through the finish. "The Rough Riders" is not so episodic as its title indicates. True its moving moments have to do with the exploits of the famous troop, but the director has enlarged the theme to capture a romantic yarn having to do with a couple of San Juaners and the girl they left behind in San Antonio.

The story is told in simple style and builds directly to its climax. No attempt has been made to paint a halo over the head of Roosevelt. He merely takes his place here as one of the boys, and Frank Hopper, a remarkable double for T. R., does his work without any ostentatious swagger. The picture balances its war scenes with a deal of comedy gags and keeps from waving the flag as a result. The high spots are found in the training camp at San Antonio and in the climb of San Juan Hill.

There is some good pathos and some worthy heroics, noticeable when Charles Farrell carries his rival, Charles Emmett Mack (who, sad to relate, was killed a few days ago in an auto accident) through the enemy lines to a hospital tent. The acting is good

The Cast: Frank Hopper, Charles Emmett Mack, Charles Farrell, Mary Astor, Fred Kohler, George Bancroft, Col. Fred Lindsay. Director, Victor Fleming.

THEME: Romantic melodrama of Spanish-American War showing a love triangle and exploits of Roosevelt's troopers in camp and in Cuba.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The camp scenes. The climb of San Juan Hill. The historical highlights. The thrills. The love triangle. The rescue of the rival. The acting by every member of cast. The atmosphere. The titles.

The Demi-Bride

Entertaining Little Number With Norma Shearer

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

AS a story this entry of Norma Shearer's is no great shakes. It is rather light and inconsequential, but, thanks to intelligent treatment, it is handled in an easy-going, but thoroughly delightful manner with the result that it measures out a fulsome hour of entertainment. It's a gay little plot which never becomes deadly serious and whoever attended to the job of casting it picked the right players. They don't break it—they make it— and Robert Z. Leonard takes up the megaphone and directs it with good cheer.

The idea expands around a love-sick stepdaughter who falls in love with a young bounder—thus precipitating a romantic how-to-do-right at the start because of the youth's affection for the girl's mother. The film has a breath of "The Marriage Circle" about it which is high compliment indeed. The farcical pretentions are obeyed, which means that the characters must be kept in the dark while the patrons out front must be kept informed over the turns and twists of the plot.

It is pleasant film fare with Miss Shearer, Lew Cody and Carmel Myers giving it just the right proportion of high jinks to keep the spectator interested. It presents some attractive scenes, the sets and costuming being attractive.

The Cast: Norma Shearer, Lew Cody, Lionel Belmore, Tenen Holtz, Carmel Myers, Dorothy Sebastian. Director, Robert Z. Leonard.

THEME: Romantic comedy of school-girl who wins young bounder away from his reckless past and her gay step-mother to boot.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The scene when girl becomes bride. The antics of the step-mother. Cody's suave performance. The fencing scene. The fine work by entire cast. The settings and atmosphere. The light comedy spirit with which it is fashioned.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Exploit through its romantic appeal. Play up as dashing comedy of manners. Feature the star and cast. Use stills of the fencing scene.

DRAWING POWER: O. K. for high class and neighborhood houses.

Slide Kelly Slide

Picture Steals Home as Box-Office Hit

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

IT'S safe to call the turn on this one—it's a box-office hit. Which means that there will probably be a deluge of baseball stories. The season is so short, however, that producers can't waste time with the idea. "Slide Kelly Slide" is a breezy little number—one that does not overdraw its plot, nor on the other hand allows itself to become gagged with baseball hokum. Anyone who can tell a bat from a tennis racquet will find a lot of enjoyment in following the adventures of the smart-Aleck rookie whose wise-cracks and practical jokes lead him into all sorts of trouble before he comes to earth and becomes regular.

William Haines is just the right man for the part of the rookie pitcher. He dazzles the boys at the training camp with his exaggerated opinion of himself—and tempers the role with a deal of feeling when it dawns upon him he is getting nowhere with his "know-it-all" attitude. You can see by this that the theme is founded upon that ancient but honorable device—the making over of a cocky youth.

The training camp stuff is excellent—and the scenes of diamond activity are authentic too. A first rate tie-up has been made with the last World Series, thus affording a fitting background.

THEME: Comedy-drama of rookie ball-player who tries to out-smart everyone, but who eventually is taught how to be regular.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The training camp incident. The rookie's gags. The development of romance. The drama with the mascot of team. The scene when rookie is given the air. The climax. The atmosphere.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Play up as genuine baseball story. Tease the title. Put it on for summer business. Tie up with ball teams.

DRAWING POWER: O. K. for any house.

Resurrection

And How Dolores del Rio Can Act!

ALTHOUGH [illegible] great stories of modern times, and Edwin Carewe has come through with a masterpiece of sure, forceful direction, the work of Dolores del Rio as the peasant girl is so unforgettable that it remains the outstanding impression made by the picture. Carewe has wisely simplified the story rather than alter it greatly, focussing interest on the main theme, the rebirth of two souls through a great sacrificial love.

Count Ilya Tolstoy, the author's son, appears as a philosopher in a series of scenes connecting the episodes of the story, bridging time lapses smoothly and saving much useless footage. The Russian atmosphere of the picture is convincing, so far as we are competent to judge, and there is a remarkable absence of any jarring note. Players, settings, story and photography are in harmony throughout, building up an impressive, gripping narrative that moves with the inevitability of Fate.

Rod La Rocque is splendid in the role of the prince, and the others of the cast deserve more mention than space will permit. "Resurrection" is big in theme, powerful in direction, brilliant in acting—and watch Dolores del Rio.

The cast: Rod La Rocque, Dolores del Rio, Mary [illegible], Lucy Beaumont, Vera Lewis, Clarissa Selwynne, Joseph Southern and Count Ilya Tolstoy. Directed by Edwin Carewe. Scenario by Fred Myton.

THEME: Russian drama of peasant girl deserted by lover and tried for murder, who, when he returns and wins freedom for her, refuses to let him marry a woman of her sort because of her great love for him.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Miss del Rio's acting. Direction and atmosphere. The railway station scenes. The ending. The trial.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Play up the powerful theme and the fame of the story.

DRAWING POWER Big enough for any house.

The Arizona Whirlwind

Bill Cody Outdoes Himself Once More

KARL CRUSADA has provided Bill Cody with one of the most thrilling vehicles which he has had for a long time. With the co-operation of Director William J. Craft he has Bill doing all the hard-riding for which he is famous and also winning more hand-to-hand fights than have characterized his recent pictures. Bill is in love with the daughter of his father's greatest enemy, who is responsible for the latter's demise. To bring to justice this arch-criminal and still hold the affections of the girl is some task which only a scenarist confident of the ability of his star would dare ask of a player. That Bill gets away with it goes without saying.

The story concerns the attempt of a gang of crooked politicians to steal a valuable gold mine from the men who are the real and legitimate owners. To block them the local newspaper publishes the real story. The honest candidate for mayor is spirited away. Bill arrives in time to prevent the eviction of the real owners of the mine but only after a terrific struggle. Then, disguised as a Spaniard, he secures from the villain the paper which was stolen from his father when the latter was murdered. This is the one thing he has been seeking for throughout the picture. Of course it is not achieved until a fight, which suggests some of the John Barrymore or Douglas Fairbanks pictures, has been staged.

As a matter of fact it really is a smashing, gripping, melodramatic picture which unquestionably will go over with old and new admirers of Cody.

The Cast: Bill Cody, Margaret Hampton, Dave Dunbar, Hughie Mack. Director, William J. Mack. Author, Karl Crusada. Cameraman, Art Reeves.

THEME: Melodrama of Western hero who revenges himself upon his father's enemy whose daughter he wins.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Excellent photography throughout.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Above and Cody's growing reputation.

DRAWING POWER: Should be excellent.

Length, 4,134 feet. Released March 27.

Moulders of Men

The Elks Make Their Picture Debut

HERE is excellent entertainment that really needs no fraternal tie-up. It is the story of two waifs of the slums, the principal one a crippled kid brother of a gangster. The idea of fraternal affection is not a new theme, but is so rarely used as to have the virtue of novelty. It all centres around a narcotic crusade on the part of one of those young men who are prosecuting the campaign more to save children from the curse than the older addicts. The story is by John C. Wilder, incidentally the deservedly successful editor of The Elks Magazine.

The Elks organization figures logically and convincingly and not at all too intrudingly. It is at one of their hospitals the crippled boy is made straight and strong again. There is just a flash of the work that the organization does in caring for youngsters. And—the hero is a member of the order. Conway Tearle does this part quite well, but the real honors logically go to the little boy, Frankie Darro. His is a really admirable performance and all sorts of honors are his even if we must not forget that Director Ralph Ince was always there in front with the megaphone.

The squalor of the tenement district sequences is overplayed and stressed too much. That is a minor defect in a piece that does stir and thrill.

The Cast: Conway Tearle, Margaret Morris, Frankie Darro, Rex Lease, Eugene Palette, Jola Mendez, William Enright. Director, Ralph Ince. Author, John Hilder. Adaptation and continuity by Dorothy Yost. Cameraman, Allen Siegler.

THEME: Love of brother for brother. Narcotic evil background.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Frankie Darro's acting. Interesting story well told and directed.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Child theme and star. Of course Elks tie-up. Civic societies helping suppress narcotic evil.

DRAWING POWER: Good.

The Fightin' Comeback

Buddy Roosevelt in a Good Vehicle

(Reviewed by Paul Thompson)

WESTERNS are getting better, I think. More thought seems to have gone into their plots with ingenious twists and characterizations of others than the star, photography, etc. This comes to me, not for the first time, but again after seeing Buddy Roosevelt in "The Fightin' Comeback." Much territory, physically as well as mentally, is covered in this latest hard-riding screen story, two towns in Arizona—between which most of the action swings back and forth—Mexico and intervening states. The plot is new, the characterizations—especially that of Clara Horton as a trouper stranded in a small town and compelled to work in a counter lunch room—good, and the riding all that anyone can ask for.

The tale tells of the hero gambling his month's wages in town and catching the faro dealer cheating. He holds up the gambling house and seeks refuge in Mexico. At the inspiration of a tramp he decides to return and face the music. En route he is held up by a gang of outlaws. He becomes their leader and persuades them also to return. Buddy's arrest is secured and then it appears he was wanted by the sheriff only as a material witness against the crooked gambler. He had escaped with the counterfeit money which the faro-dealer was handling.

The Cast: Buddy Roosevelt, Clara Horton, Sidney M. Goldin, Richard Neill, Robert Homans, Charles Thurston, Richard Alexander. Director, Tenny Wright. Author, Walter J. Coburn. Continuity, Frank J. Ingram. Photographer, Ray Ries.

THEME: Western. Cowboy who thinks he goes wrong but "reforms."

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Originality of plot, character sketches, direction, photography.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Above and Roosevelt's name.

DRAWING POWER: Good.

Length, 4,415 feet. Released April 3, 1927.

Tale of the Coal Miners Filmed

LUCIAN CARY wrote a story for "The Saturday Evening Post" which enjoyed great popularity. It was inevitable that it should be filmed. It has been, Graham Baker doing the work of transposition. The result is a mixture of good and bad. It starts off with a most convincing picture of a miner's family and their life in a western Pennsylvania town, the ambitions of the mother for a different career than that of the father-husband for the son, the latter's love affair and the inevitable opposition to this by the mother because it interferes with her plans.

Alright as a plot; interesting and entertaining. The whole trouble is in the treatment. Possibly the version is what the public wants but I question it. The melodrama has been played up to the detriment of what should have been a human, plausible story. The college phase is absurd and thoroughly artificial. The mining accident and rescue with its toiling, sweating, primitive men borders on burlesque. Instead of a picture that should be suitable for the best houses it resolves itself into one that really belongs off the main highways. It is a shame, because the story and the actors are there, but to my way of thinking, wasted.

THEME: Ambition of a mother for her son to emancipate himself from the mining level and her failure.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Good story. Excellent cast. Convincing graphic shots of a coal-mine town and the lives there.

DRAWING POWER: Fair. Good in second-grade houses.

The Broncho Twister

Tom Mix and Tony Do Their Stuff

(Reviewed by Paul Thompson)

SOMETIMES I wonder if Tom Mix and his collaborators, author, scenarist and director, do not put too much into their pictures. Probably I am wrong and my viewpoint valueless, because, after all, is he not the most popular financially and otherwise, of all the Western stars? The thought, however, has come to me before but especially after seeing his latest offering, "The Broncho Twister." Into this he has put everything and it strikes me that less would do. That striking episodes would gain were they not in such striking prodigality.

For a start, for example, there is the novelty of Tom in the role of a marine returning on a transport from service abroad, where he won all sorts of distinction. Disembarked and discharged from the army he starts for his beloved West. On the train he meets attractive Helene Costello. He starts a flirtation with her. While in her stateroom he discovers through the car window a man and a girl on horseback being pursued by a group of five others, also mounted. He leaps from the car window onto the back of Tony. The girl was his sister, the man his father, the pursuers their enemies. Excellent start. This is followed by material that is quite reminiscent of Fred Thomson's "Don Mike" with a Spanish setting, fiesta, etc. The piece will score the usual Mix success; of that there is no doubt.

The Cast: Tom Mix, Helene Costello, George Irving, Dorothy Kitchen, Paul Nicholson, Doris Lloyd, Malcolm Waite, Jack Pennick, Otto Fries. Director, Orville Dull. Author, Adela Rogers St. John. Scenarist, John Stone. Cameraman, Dan Clark.

THEME: Western; hero fights and beats cattle and land thieving neighbor and wins stepdaughter.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Novel beginning. Multiplicity of stunts and action. Settings.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Tom as a marine; comedy element.

DRAWING POWER: Good.

Length, 5,435 feet. Released March 13, 1927. Produced and distributed by Fox Films.

Better Type of Western; Gold Rush Tie-Up

(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

CLASS this among the better type of Westerns coming from the Universal studios. It has an historical background, considerable action, some mild comedy and a star who can ride and shoot but who should stay away from the romantic scenes, as the only expression he registers in the more tender moments is helplessness. There are several good tie-up possibilities connected with this production which has a gold rush as its main theme in view of the publicity given in the daily papers of late to the two boys who have discovered gold in Tonopah, Nev.

I was rather disappointed with the climax, the attempt of the Indians to wipe out the wagon train; in the first place there are comparatively few close-ups of hand-to-hand fights because the redskins weren't permitted to get that close, owing to the arrival of the troops; again, it seemed rather ridiculous to lay mattresses on the ground to support the wounded who, according to song and story, are big, strong, he-men. However, these are minor faults and do not detract much from the entertainment possibilities of the picture.

The tale tells of the efforts of Black Roger to keep pioneers from encroaching on the gold fields of which he has defrauded the Indians. He is defeated through the efforts of the hero and his very intelligent horse.

The Cast: Jack Hoxie, Ena Gregory, Marin Sais, Francis Ford, Jimmy Kelly, William Malan, Ernie S. Adams, Robert E. Milash, Joseph Bennet, Bert Lindley, John Hall, Bert Apling. Story and continuity by Marion Jackson. Directed by Albert Rogell.

THEME: Western. Villain, seeking control of Dakota gold fields, attempts to ward off pioneers, but is defeated.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The fast action, the riding and shooting of the star. The attempted massacre.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Ready made through newspaper publicity on recent gold discovery.

DRAWING POWER: Okay for middle class houses and people.

Length, 6,155 feet. Released June 5, 1927. Produced and distributed by Universal.

Miss E. Luedtke, of the Columbia Theatre at Kenosha, was a visitor at exchanges recently.

J. S. McCloud, manager of M.-G.-M. Exchange Maintenance Department, was in the local office the early part of the week, studying possible locations for a new M.-G.-M. Exchange.

For once the shovel didn't work. Elmer Huhnke, First National salesman in upper Michigan, had to return on the train. His car, which heretofore yielded to the persuasion of the shovel, is mired somewhere up in the sticks. The roads in the northern territory, according to Mr. Huhnke, are impassable because of numerous sloughs of rich red mud. In places the road takes the appearance of a newly-plowed field, and even old Dobbin cannot negotiate the sticky mud.

Al Picker is planning to start construction of his new theatre in Ironwood on the first of May.

Ed. Wiesner left his position with First National and is now affiliated with the realty department of Saxe Amusement Enterprises.

Ray Zerbal is rebuilding his Opera House at Marquette, and is planning a very modern and adequate house.

The Annual Theatrical Ball

Denver

THE Aladdin Theatre was visited by a gang of safe-blowers Monday morning, March 14, about six o'clock, getting away with about $500.00 in cash. The yeggmen blew the door of the safe with a charge of nitroglycerin, blowing part of the door through the second-story window out into the street, which scared the safe-crackers away, causing them to miss about $4,000 more in an inner part of the strong-box. Harry Huffman, manager of the theatre, his wife, Mrs. Huffman, and several detectives narrowly escaped death when they walked over a pile of papers under which was later discovered a half-bottle of nitroglycerin left by the yeggs. It is believed that the burglars entered the theatre during the last show Sunday night and remained hidden until everyone had left the theatre.

Two new theatres are now in operation in the Denver district. The elaborate new Lincoln Theatre of Cheyenne, Wyo., opened a week ago with a capacity house. This new amusement house has a seating capacity of around 800 seats. Last Friday the Wyoming Theatre of Torrington, Wyo., celebrated its grand opening with an elaborate programme. This theatre has a capacity of 750 seats and is managed by J. L. McDonald, one of its owners. The new Lincoln Theatre of Cheyenne, is owned by the Plains Theatre Corporation.

Albany

L. N. SANSCHAGRIN, who recently leased his motion picture theatre in Saranac Lake, N.Y., is now the head of the Lake Champlain Transportation Company, having bought the controlling interest last week. Mr. Sanschagrin was elected president and general manager and from now on will devote his entire attention to directing the affairs of that company.

George Markell, of the Strand, in Pittsfield, and John Augello, of Utica, made a trip to Albany during the week for the purpose of booking pictures. Tom Thornton, of Saugerties, was in town for a like purpose, treating the boys to cigars, and warning them that he had made them himself. Jerry Sussman and Jim Cook, from Paramount's home office, were in town, as well as Sidney M. Katz, eastern district sales manager for F.B.O.

Welcome news reached town last week from Cooperstown, telling of Bill Smalley's recovery from a serious illness. No sooner was Mr. Smalley out of bed than he reached some of the local exchanges by telephone.

Jack Byrne, of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer forces, is back on the job after an illness. Edward Pollock, of Atlanta, has joined the local F.B.O. forces as salesman. James Dermody, salesman for Fox, and Leon Herman, salesman for Universal, appeared last week with new cars.

Julius Singer is now taking olive oil and gaining weight each day. Mr. Singer spent last Sunday in New York, returning here the fore part of the week to buckle down to business, for Mr. Singer's eyes are now turned toward Europe. The local exchange ran second last week in the United States on a sales contest, ending May 7, and which will take the winners across the pond.

E. Soper, of Inlet, is planning for an early reopening this spring. B. I. Talmadge, of Windham, was in New York City last week, due to the death of a relative. H. A. Matthyer, of Deposit, will begin to run a few extra nights each week after April 1. Clark Sanford, of Margaretville, has just been elected president of a weekly newspaper. He also sells automobiles along with operating his theatre.

Jake Rosenthal, of the Rose, in Troy, is being besieged these days by automobile agents, it having become noised about that he is in the field for his first car. Miss Celia Rosenthal plans to go to Syracuse in April to attend a dinner dance and bridge given by the fraternity of which her brother is a member. Mr. Rosenthal was in New York recently, attending the opening of the Roxy Theatre.

David McBeath, from First National's home office in New York City, was in town for two or three days last week. Herman Vineberg, recently in Morristown, N.J., but formerly manager of a local theatre, is back in Albany, and will probably relocate here. Maurice Chase, of Buffalo, was in town during the week.

When the Vitaphone begins to operate at the Troy Theatre on March 26, admission prices will be increased for the Saturday and Sunday night shows, but no change will be made for the remainder of the week.

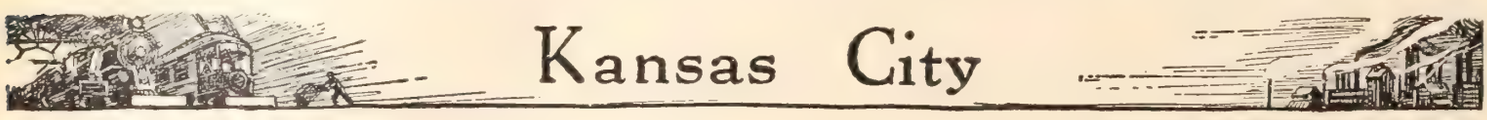
Lew Fischer, of Fort Edward, who motored south some little time ago, is back home.

Ben Stern, of the Lincoln, in Troy, is now running a car that carries a huge advertisement across its back, telling the world of its "low operating cost and supreme power."

Philadelphia

UNITED ARTISTS will move from its present location at 1331 Vine Street to the quarters now occupied by Producers Distributing Company, at 1231 Vine Street, on April 1st. William C. Humphreys, branch manager for P.D.C., has received no instructions from the home office to negotiate for other quarters and the general assumption in Philadelphia is that by April 1st plans for the P.D.C.-Pathe merger will have been completed and that P.D.C. and Pathe will distribute from the office of the latter, which is one of the largest exchanges on Vine Street and has ample room for the P.D.C. force, as well as the Pathe organization.



Bill Quinlivin, who was some years ago branch manager for Vitagraph, and has recently been serving as special representative for Associated Exhibitors, has been appointed assistant branch manager in Philadelphia for Universal Pictures and is taking over some of the duties formerly discharged by S. Witman, Philadelphia branch manager for Universal, who has been in poor health [illegible] time.

James Mulhern, fire marshal, has announced to the motion picture industry his intention to rigidly enforce a new set of regulations that has been promulgated for the film community. It has been the general practice among some exchanges to give Sunday night showings to small groups of friends. Under the new regulations this cannot be continued unless special permits are taken out at City Hall. Seating capacities of projection rooms in exchanges will be limited to ten and screenings of pictures can be held only for business purposes and then only during the day-time. Special metal containers will be required for all films kept in vaults. Heretofore, reels have been permitted exposed in the vaults, but hereafter metal containers must be used even for this purpose. All electric light bulbs and radiators must be covered with wire screenings. There have been a large number of booth fires in Philadelphia recently, due it is believed, to the use of the new high intensity lamps, and the Department of Public Safety is taking every precaution to reduce the minimum fire hazard in booths and exchanges.

Frank N. Seltzer, in charge of publicity for the Fox Theatres in Philadelphia, recently had a narrow escape from death in Fairmount Park when the car in which he was driving home from the theatre was struck by another and catapaulted into a ditch alongside of the road. The car turned completely over. Mr. Seltzer's right hand and arm were badly lacerated and crushed.

The Fox Theatre, Sixteenth and Market streets, Philadelphia, which has been doing an exceptionally fine business for the past several months in the presentation of big names in connection with its pictures, has discontinued the distribution of programs. The house since its opening has consistently used programs and apparently to good advantage, as they were well patronized by advertisers.

Harry T. Jordan, formerly in charge of the Keith interests in this city and now in Hollywood, California, acting as special representative for E. F. Albee, will return to the city early in May to complete arrangements for the marriage of his daughter, Annette. Mr. Jordan will then return to the Coast and it is expected will make his home there permanently.

Kansas City

THE Liberty Theatre, first-run downtown house of Kansas City, acquired recently by United Artists, will be closed after this week for remodeling. The four walls of the theatre only will be utilized in constructing the remodeled theatre. It emphatically was denied this week that Paramount would acquire a 125-foot site at 1304-12 Main Street for a new theatre. Several years ago certain Kansas City realtors who were students of tendencies in downtown properties predicted that Main Street some day would surpass Twelfth Street as Kansas City's theatre and night life street. With the 4,000-seat Loew's Midland Theatre nearing completion, the remodeling of the Liberty and the extensive change in policy of the Mainstreet Theatre—all on Main Street—it looks as though those predictions were to become true.

The Watson Talking Motion Pictures, a development of the Bell Telephone Laboratories, received their first showing in Kansas City this week when a special demonstration was made before the Chamber of Commerce at a luncheon.

The Rivoli Theatre, St. Joseph, Mo., and the Miller Theatre, Manhattan, Kas., have contracted for the installation of Vitaphone, the deals being arranged by Ed Alperson, district manager, and Harry Strickland, Kansas City branch manager, of Warner Brothers.

Among the out-of-town exhibitors in the Kansas City market this week were: Roy Burford, New Burford Theatre, Arkansas City, Kas.; Oscar Reinert, Humboldt, Kas.; Walter Wallace, Orpheum, Leavenworth, Kas.; G. L. Hooper, Orpheum, Topeka, Kas.

O. H. Dutton, District Manager of National Theatre Supply Company, and Alvin Seiler, director of the engineering and research department of that company, were Kansas City visitors this week, as was M. H. Hoffman, Vice-President of Tiffany Productions.

W. P. Bernfield has resigned as branch manager of Tiffany, being succeeded by Eph Rosen, formerly of Minneapolis, Minn.

Miss Rebecca Joffee, of the Universal home office, was a Kansas City visitor, being en route to the West Coast.

Ben Taylor, Universal city salesman, is showing with pride this week a gold membership button of Universal's Star Salesmen's Club.

R. O. Pearson, Pathe branch manager, and Art Levy, feature salesman, made business trips to Coffeyville, Kas., and St. Joseph, Mo., this week.

The Girls' Our Gang Club of the Pathe branch entertained the management and sales force with a buffet luncheon in the screen room. "Red" Jones, Educational branch manager, again is out hustling in the territory.

Miss Virginia McMillan, secretary at the Warner Bros. branch, was called to her home in Savannah, Mo., as a result of dangerous injuries to her mother in a motor car accident.

Charles Knickerbocker has been added to the Fox sales force, covering Southern Missouri.

Des Moines

THE Capitol Theatre at Newton, which will be under the management of A. H. Blank though the theatre itself remains the property of Maytag of the Maytag Washing Machine Factory who are opening up the new theatre in the new Hotel Maytag Building, will open on March 30. George P. Hundling, who has the management of the Rialto, the Blank-Publix house at Newton, will take charge of the Capitol.

R. V. Anderson, sales manager for International News, was in Des Moines and visited the Universal Exchange. He came from the Chicago office.

Sam Swarz, who was formerly with Columbia Pictures in Des Moines will have charge of the booking for the Commonwealth Theatre Company with offices in the Iowa Building. Harry Weinberg, who recently left the Publix Shows in Des Moines in order to take up this new enterprise, is the head of the company and it is announced that he is planning to take over a string of theatres of his own. He has already completed the negotiations for the purchase of the Rex Theatre and the King Theatre at Albia.

Jake Cohen, of the Strand Theatre, at Ottumwa, was a visitor at the office of Famous Players-Lasky. Also G. A. Dhoet, of the Monroe Theatre at Monroe, and J. E. Ridgeway, of the Lyric Theatre, at Coon Rapids.

A. H. Blank and Harry David have been spending the greater part of each week in Omaha getting ready for the opening of the Riviera Theatre there. The Riviera is the latest of the Blank-Publix houses and elaborate plans for the opening are being made. A. G. Stolte, formerly in charge of the larger of the Blank houses, has been selected to take the management of the Riviera and this augurs well for the success of the new theatre for he has made the houses under his management the leading houses of the state during the past years. Mr. Wegener, formerly manager of the Capitol at Davenport for A. H. Blank and before that assistant to Mr. Stolte at the Capitol in Des Moines, will be assistant manager of the Riviera.

Ralph Jones is the new organist at the Capitol Theatre, Des Moines. He follows L. Carlos Moier, who has not announced which of several offers he plans to accept.

Nate Frudenfeld and Lionel Wasson, of the publicity department of the Blank-Publix houses, have been busy outlining a Pageant of Progress which is to be given at the opening of the Capitol Theatre at Newton. The opening of the Capitol, which is scheduled for March 30, will be a fete day in Newton with a number of public demonstrations and dancing in the streets.

Chicago

THE Grand Ball and Movie Frolic Committee of the Exhibitors' Association of Chicago, headed by Ludwig Siegel and Dave Miller, report gratifying progress is being made.

A large amount of publicity already has been secured for the ball, which will be held on May 4th at the Stevens Hotel, through local newspapers and film exchanges, and starting about April 1st, every theatre in Chicago, will display one sheet in their lobbies and trailers, advertising the ball, on the screen.

Al Sobler, well-known exploiter, has been secured as director of publicity for the ball.

Harold J. Marlowe and Jacob Hurwitz are planning to erect a new two-thousand-seat motion picture theatre in West Pullman. The site selected is the northwest corner of Eggleston and 119th streets, now occupied by the J. M. Cochran Nursery, which will be torn down in time to start work on the new structure about May 1st. It is hoped to have the theatre opened by December 1st.

Starting April 3rd, Lubliner & Trinz will change the policy of their Belmont Theatre, eliminating the stage band and presentation, giving five acts of vaudeville and pictures. At the same time, the Pantheon will become a second-run house, showing pictures immediately following the Uptown, at twenty-five cents admission. The Harding and the Senate will rotate their stage bands, one band remaining in each house for a week, then going to the other.

Another change in policy is that of Balaban & Katz Roosevelt Theatre, which has returned to a long-run policy. A large orchestra has been installed and will be an added attraction at the Roosevelt.

Paul V. Miller, of the Tivoli Theatre, Valparaiso, has taken over the Eagle and Roosevelt theatres, Gary, Ind., formerly operated by James Kikas.

Len Ullrich, who recently resigned from Pathe's sales staff, after being connected with that organization for many years, is now connected with Warner Brothers' Chicago exchange and is selling specials in city territory.

Manager Harry Corbett, of the North Center Theatre, has engaged James Casey, formerly connected with the Tivoli and Roosevelt theatres, to be his assistant manager.

Al Short is now conducting his band on the stage of the Piccadilly Theatre, assisted by Ted Leary, formerly of the Stratford, who acts as master of ceremonies. The change is proving popular at the big Schoenstadt house.

Manager Kissock, formerly of the Downer Theatre, Milwaukee, is now in charge of the York Theatre at Elmhurst.

Newspaper Opinions on New Pictures

"The Understanding Heart"—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, State Theatre, Los Angeles

Herald: "'The Understanding Heart' enthralls Loew's crowds. . . . Triumph for cast and director. . . . Here is a picture that makes audiences sit up and gasp. It has everything. . . . Is not built on hokum. . . . Conway has created a picture which moves swiftly to a climax which is both thrilling and original. . . . Excellent continuity, characters have been well cast and the plot moves swiftly. . . . A fine love element throughout which will capture the hearts of the fans. . . . Excellent humor."

Express: "All the thrills in an exciting serial are massed in 'The Understanding Heart.' . . . Joan Crawford does what is undoubtedly the best acting of her career. . . . The picture is notable for good acting. . . . Francis X. Bushman, Jr., is certainly a comer. . . ."

Record: "The film version of 'The Understanding Heart' leaves nothing to be desired. . . . Audiences sat enthralled through thrilling scenes. . . . Directed and portrayed in a logical, extremely interesting manner. . . . Laid in a setting of exquisite beauty. . . . The picture is an ideal form of relief from life's complications."

News: "Peter Kyne film thrills crowds at Loew's State. . . . This story of the forest ranger service thrilled and pleased the audiences at Loew's State Theatre. . . . Both ability of the actors and skill with which director Jack Conway made the most of their natural advantages are to be commended. . . . Good entertainment, so good that one simply enjoys. . . ."

Times: "A scorching, realistic forest fire furnishes a series of thrills de luxe in 'The Understanding Heart'."

Examiner: "Was so interested that I lost myself entirely. Go and see 'The Understanding Heart' and you will cease to remember your troubles. It offers such fascinating entertainment. Abounds in thrills, love and unexpected humor. . . . Picture of extraordinary interest. . . . Film drama of undeniable appeal. . . . Leads the race as entertainment. . . . An achievement from the standpoint of story and direction. . . . I could use all the twenty-five-dollar words in my vocabulary and still not feel I was being over-enthusiastic."

"The Love of Sunya"—United Artists, Roxy Theatre, New York City

Tribune: "Is so engrossing that one hasn't a chance to think of other things. It is a superb picture. Miss Swanson does more wholesouled and convincing acting than ever we have seen her do in all the years we have admired her. We never had any idea that she was so beautiful, so dazzling is Miss Swanson that words fail one. Scene after scene is of such beauty it leaves you gasping for breath—and the cast is perfect."

Evening World: "Will always be remembered as good entertainment. Gloria Swanson will lift it to the success we prophesy for it."

American: "One of the best films ever made . . . her greatest. There isn't a dull moment in the entire picture and the audience is kept constantly on the qui vive. One of the finest film entertainments of this or any other cinema season."

Sun: "Is excellent entertainment for the great general movie audiance."

Times: "An intriguing picture. Miss Swanson gives a far better performance than in any of her other films in the last two years."

News: "A hit. Far superior to anything she has done under another producer's banner for many seasons. You'll enjoy every second of its unreeling."

Journal: "Miss Swanson does the best work she has done for several years."

Graphic: "Was enthusiastically received. It presents an amazingly young Swanson, beautifully slim of form."

World: "I have not seen Miss Swanson more beautiful, more uniformly in tune with her characters."

Telegraph: "Proves beyond any reasonable doubt that its star-producer in her infinite variety is the most versatile of the big names among the celluloid celebrities. . . . She is quite easily the most accomplished cinema artist of all the feminine screen satellites of American origin and development."

Telegraph: "The best of her recent pictures, a distinct triumph for its star-producer and a brilliant feature in her well-plumed diadem. Clinches her claim to the top rung position on the ladder of cinema fame. She is the star of stars among the feminine luminaries. . . . Is a triumph of, by and for Gloria Swanson."

Mirror: "Miss Swanson gave one of the best performances she has ever given."

"The Demi-Bride" — Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, State Theatre, Los Angeles

Record: "Norma Shearer wins audience. . . . 'The Demi-Bride,' according to the reaction of the audience yesterday, is going to prove a popular picture. . . . It brought forth many laughs. . . . Norma Shearer at her best. . . ."

Times: "Comedy drama that moves along breezily. . . . Adorable star and appealing leading man. . . . Any number of uproariously funny situations. . . . Story moves along swiftly. . . . A fine suspense. . . . Norma Shearer is superb. . . . A creditable bit of work for Robert Z. Leonard, the director. . . . Cody gives a performance brimming with personality and humor. . . ."

Herald: "Lively, first-rate entertainment. . . . Not a moment does action lag. . . . Spirited bit of fun."

Examiner: "The same characteristics that lure the tired business man into the legitimate theatre are there 100 per cent in this screen diversion. . . . Audience appreciated 'The Demi-Bride' to the fullest. . . . Nothing if not sophisticated. . . . Is certainly good fun. . . . Exceedingly amusing and original situations."

"Johnny Get Your Hair Cut"—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Los Angeles

Examiner: "Jackie Coogan has many pictures but few with punch of 'Johnny Get Your Hair Cut.' . . . For genuine thrills and moments of intense drama, I do not recall single story of turf to equal Jackie's. . . . I can promise this picture will please, not only kids but mammas and papas as well."

Record: "Most enjoyable is new Jackie Coogan picture. . . . Jackie Coogan fans, and they are legion, certain to derive unmitigated pleasure. . . . Jackie outdoes himself in this production."

Times: "Doubts as to whether Jackie Coogan can weather this growing up process on the screen are settled in 'Johnny Get Your Hair Cut.' Jackie emerges splendidly and it seems probable that he will remain enthroned with his public. . . . Jackie is immense. . . . far cuter and more pleasing with his short hair than he was with his long locks. . . . Where tiny jockey races to victory is real thrill, is something to raise spontaneous 'hoorah.'"

Express: "Lots of exciting things happen. . . . The barber-shop scene is the high light of the picture. . . . Jackie does one of his most winning bits of characterization."

"The Mona Lisa"—Educational, Rialto Theatre, Tacoma

Ledger: "One of the most artistic screen offerings in many a long month is on view at the Rialto this week. It is but two reels in length and wonderfully photographed in pleasing colors, yet it tells a drama of human life that is gripping from start to finish.

"I refer to 'The Mona Lisa,' featuring Hedda Hopper in the title role. It is a gem of art, with a novel story unfolded, which relates altogether to the peculiar smile that Da Vinci gave his painting of the Mona Lisa."

SHOW THIS AD TO YOUR WIFE!

EASTER'S coming. The gowns on this page are the smartest and latest from Paris. The screen's most beautiful girls model them in "FASHIONS FOR WOMEN." Not only gowns, but hats, stockings, negligee and all sorts of filmy do-dabs.

The fashion show's only part of the picture. Screendom's gorgeous blonde, Esther Ralston, in a swift Frenchy comedy-romance. From cigarette girl to the most famous model in Paris.

75% of all screen audiences are women. What a buy for around Easter—OR FOR ANY TIME!

SHORT TALKS

ON

SHORT FEATURES

--- Best, by Your Verdict

In 1925 the Hugo Riesenfeld Gold Medal was established as an annual award for the outstanding Short Subject of the year. The selection was left entirely to a committee of exhibitors—a committee including some of the country's wisest showmen.

The first award was won by an Educational Picture, "The Voice of the Nightingale." The second award, for 1926, has just been made. This medal also goes to an Educational Picture, "The Vision," one of the beautiful Romance Productions in Technicolor. And every subject mentioned by a member of the committee as a candidate for the award was an Educational release.

By the showman's verdict—your verdict—Educational Pictures are the best short features you can play. And that is the verdict of 13,000 exhibitors who are playing them regularly.

Unanimously Acclaimed

JETTA GOUDAL

Did you ever read

"Worthy of the extreme designation of masterpiece. I class it as one of the ten best pictures I ever saw."

Monroe Lathrop, Los Angeles Express

" Without hesitation I pronounce this picture a masterpiece and one of the greatest pictures of recent years."

Eugene Brewster

"One of the cleverest directed and acted pictures in a long time—a box-office winner."

I. W. I., Hollywood Topics

"Those responsible for it should be showered with praise.—It leaves you gasping, because it is truth, not hokum. Superb as the acting is, you feel that the director is the real star of 'White Gold.'"

Norbert Lusk, Picture Play

"'WhiteGold' is a masterpiece—simple perfection. It is the best picture I have ever reviewed."

Rosa Reilly, Screenland

"Will stand out as one of the worthiest creations of this and many another year. It is a feather in Howard's directorial cap."

Herbert Moulton, Los Angeles Sunday Times

"This is real drama. How honestly it is worked out and how perfectly played one must see to appreciate."

Margaret Mann, Chicago Daily News

"'White Gold' is the most interesting picture presented so far this year."

Rob Reel, Chicago Evening American

"A marvelous picture, 'White Gold', splendidly acted by every principal, grippingly narrated by Director Howard. Our advice is: Don't miss it."

Dorothy Herzog, Daily Mirror

"Keen intelligence, artistry and above all an exquisite understanding of the value of modulation have been welded into the fashioning of this superb picture."

"Something new in pictures—something almost startling in picturization. I can't say too much—in fact, I find myself hampered amply to describe it. —One more picture to lay among those few in the Hall of Fame under the sign 'No Hokum.'"

Lui Venator, Baltimore Sun

"I saw it in a cold projection room, without any music except the hum of a projection machine, and I'm here to say 'It's some picture.'"

Ray Murray, Exhibitors Herald

"Powerfully dramatic. Genuinely moving. William K. Howard's direction shows flashes of real genius."

The Film Daily

"Compares most favorably with the best German films that have been brought to America. Miss Goudal does the best acting in her career."

Harrison's Reports

"One of the most interesting and entertaining films made. 'White Gold' is a winner!"

Jimmy Starr, Los Angeles Record

"Splendid characterizations are given by each of the four leading players. William K. Howard's direction is bully."

Paul Thompson, M. P. News

"I call it a gem, a masterpiece—a directorial triumph."

Lincoln Hart, Hollywood News

"One of the most compelling, surely one of the finest pictures made in years —a production that will take the critics of the country by storm. It will establish William K. Howard as one of the outstanding directors in the business."

Whitney Williams, Los Angeles Times

"A positive triumph in simplicity. William K. Howard has unquestionably won a place in that small group of directors who represent the hope of the silent drama."

THE ACID TEST

Just what is it when applied to comedy?

The number of laughs and their kind.

"Clocking the laughs" of a representative audience is the acid test of a comedy.

"Horse Shoes" has been "put on cold" before three large audiences in three representative theatres.

The smallest number of laughs checked against these audiences was 201. The largest was nine more.

Giggles didn't count. Only the big roars of a lot of people thoroughly enjoying themselves.

That means the laughter was almost continuous.

Don't you want a picture like that, in your house?

Hollywood

First of Series of Articles on the Production Centre

By William A. Johnston

¶ Swell-headism and the terrific cost of production.

¶ The real reason for Harold Lloyd's remarkable success.

¶ Hollywood discarding old ideas and moving forward to world objectives.

JUST as I was leaving New York—leaving the Film Building, in fact—I met a man who had just returned from Hollywood.

"I hear you are going to the coast," he said. "Well—here's a tip for you.

"Go to Disney's hat store and buy the largest hats they have. Take them out to your friends—out there. They'll be grateful. They can't begin to wear their own hats and Los Angeles doesn't carry any freak sizes.

"No," he added, on reflection. "It's of no use. Disney hasn't got them large enough. You'll have to have them made to order. And you'd have to take out a carload.

"Sorry the tip is no good. But I meant well."

Is Swell-Headism Rampant?

THERE was no time to ask my friend just whom he referred to—whether executives, supervisors, directors, players, writers, cameramen; or whether all come under his criticism.

So, at least, I approach Hollywood with an open and unbiased mind.

The criticism of it, if a fair one, is intriguing.

If swell-headism is so plainly a feature today of the production headquarters, perhaps it answers a good many questions that are being asked today all along the firing line of the business. One, and not the least of these is: why the terrific cost of production? Or, to be more specific: why is it that the preliminary assessment against a picture today—the accumulated and non-productive overhead—is greater than the whole cost of what was good entertainment just a few years ago?

Perhaps the same charge will also help answer the question put from all sides to the American film man who goes abroad today, namely: "Why doesn't Hollywood pay more attention to the wants of the European market—if you Americans really want this market?"

I would like to say a few things to Hollywood along this same line.

The foreign market today, and this is mostly Europe, pays forty percent of the gross rentals our pictures receive. If we lose this sizable percentage, or any part of it, it would seem that the Hollywood production income—salaries mostly, will have to be cut down that much.

That wouldn't be so good. So, really, it's quite a practical problem—for Hollywood.

And if any Hollywood folks think that our pictures are easily salable in Europe today—well, they had best go over and try to sell them. If, also, they hold the happy belief that American pictures will continue to fill right along their former prominent place abroad, they had, also, best go over and find out the facts. Europe, be it known, is going to produce for its own home market; and competition with American pictures is going to be mighty keen.

William A. Johnston's Survey

It would also shock a good many players, who are so liberally featured in the home town newspapers of Los Angeles, to discover that their names are all but unknown in all western Europe and if known, very little cared about. The stories count over there, not the stars (I except but a very few). And technic counts. And, in Russia and Germany today—where the best pictures are being made—they are working day and night on technic, working like beavers; and some highly trained players are getting salaries that wouldn't be counted cigarette money in Hollywood.

All these things are going to count, of course, in the new world market for pictures.

I HAVE been in Hollywood but a few days, as I write this; but already it seems to me that the production forces of the near future are going to line up pretty clearly over this issue of production costs.

And salaries will be a big factor in the whole issue.

The question is: what is a productive salary? Or, in other words; what is a box-office salary? And what salaries don't produce at the box-office?

But more of that later.

I would like, if I honestly can, to stick along to this alleged bogey of swell-headism.

One Who Stays Sane

I CAME out on the train with one production chief who hasn't it—Harold Lloyd.

I knew him when he was Lonesome Luke—a sort of Merton of the Movies, and later when he had his little side hill studio at Glendale; and from all signs he is still the same boy—ambitious, sane, keen, eager to learn and eager to accomplish. Perhaps it's the rare gift of eternal boyishness that keeps him genuine; when the train stopped for several hours outside a small Kansas town, he readily became an undistinguishable member of a group of boys and girls, all talking gravely and exchanging opinions about dogs, handball, baseball and other important matters. Whether the local lights came to see him or the Saint Bernard dog he was taking home mattered not a bit to him; he believed it was the dog, and not a personality as well known—in Europe, for instance—as any living American. Let us hope he continues that way. He probably will.

Perhaps, too, Lloyd's remarkable success is due to another rare trait—his ability to concentrate. He certainly concentrates on production, and gets his fun out of it, too. The Lloyd studio strikes you as a busy place, but the business is a game. In the bare little room where the structure of the picture is made and the all important gags laid out—a bare table, a few chairs and stools comprise the equipment—you are quite apt to see all work put suddenly aside for a roughhouse. Comedy making is serious enough a job; but it can't be done too seriously.

Fox Plant Impresses

PERHAPS it was partly because it was the first place I visited that the Fox Studios made so strong an impression; perhaps it was because so tremendous a change has been wrought here. Some two million dollars have been spent in turning what was always the largest in area, but certainly not the most modern of Hollywood picture plants, into a young and sightly city of many concrete paved streets and sightly buildings. Certainly, the Hollywood studio of 1927 is, physically, an amazing thing.

There's a snap and sincerity about the Fox works that greets you at the door—with the well-mannered and intelligent pages—and that follows you without fail, on the stages, through the shops and offices till the large, iron exit gates close behind you. The big place clicks at every point. There's no dawdling, no gossiping; there's a decided air of impersonality and serious work—toward a definite end. It is W. R. Sheehan's boast, I believe, that no politics whatever prevail. Surprising though that be, in any studio, it seems true here.

If I were an exhibitor, going about Hollywood with an eye keen to programs, present and future, and sizing them, as you may, by the production spirit and resources back of them, I would lay some good bets on the Fox output for first rank.

of the Production Situation

"Carmen," "Seventh Heaven," and "Is Zat So," are in production, the first two almost finished, the latter about half way along. "Sunrise" has been finished and the print sent to New York.

Notable Pictures on the Way

BY all signs these are notable productions. On the day I happened in at the studios, James R. Grainger and Fred Miller, owner of the now famous Carthay Circle Theatre (some thing about this theatre later), were signing consecutive contracts for "Seventh Heaven," "Sunrise," and "Carmen." "What Price Glory" is now in its twentieth week at the Carthay Circle. It will continue for several weeks, rounding out a run of six months or more. If "Seventh Heaven," "Sunrise," and "Carmen" meet expectations, these contracts will sew up the Carthay Circle for Fox for about two years. The Carthay Circle gets $1.65 top.

I saw one of the closing interiors of "Seventh Heaven," the one which all who saw the play will always remember; where the blinded soldier (Charles Farrell) clasps his sweetheart (Janet Gaynor) in his arms. Exhibitors at large will agree with me on the potency of this climax when the fact is stated that its pathos brought tears to the eyes of Sales Manager Grainger. Charles Farrell is an admirable actor. Janet Gaynor, too, is coming along fast.

Novel Scenes Promised

WAR sequences will play but a minor part in "Seventh Heaven," but one will, apparently, be a striking and novel spectacle. This will show the rush out of Paris and to the Marne of the horde of French taxis and delivery motors. A small army of these have been built after models of two that have been brought over and were actually in the action.

The Gypsy set in "Carmen"—which features Dolores Del Rio—is one of the most beautiful I have ever seen. With its camp foreground and its horizon of snow-capped mountains, it fills the entire width of the stage. Certainly, they are doing great things out here in the way of magnificent and novel interiors. Alfred Green, who is directing "Is Zat So," has schemed out a unique departure from the usual fight scene. In the foreground of his set is a nursery with a boy, governess and mother, all eagerly getting the fight returns over the radio. Then the camera shoots through a gauze curtain upon the fight itself, with excellent shots of the ringside fans and in the ring George O'Brien is exchanging some honest-to-goodness blows with a punch-crazy gentleman who spars with Jack Dempsey.

"The Cradle Snatchers" has been finished, sent to New York and already booked at the Roxy Theatre.

Era of New Personalities

ACCORDING to W. R. Sheehan, $5,000,000 worth of completed negatives are now ready for September release and three times that sum is budgeted for next year's product. The production program is well ahead of schedule.

He points with pride to the stars that have come to the fore from Fox productions just this year, namely, Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell, Olive Borden, Dolores Del Rio, and he predicts for all production a new era of new personalities from now on. As for pictures, there is also a sharp breaking away from the old order of themes. New and big and vital ones are the order of the day. They must have, too, an international flavor and appeal.

It is quite apparent to me already—and on all the lots I have so far visited—that there is a new and large ground-swell in production. It takes the form of the picture—in story, acting, color, character, technic in general—of universal appeal. There seems very little vestige of the old ideas and ideals of Times Square and Hollywood. The studio imagination and objectives are vastly widened. All of which is of the utmost importance and I shall tell more about it.

WILL H. HAYS, speaking at the luncheon on Tuesday, when he presented the Riesenfeld gold medal to Eugene H. Roth for "The Vision," as the best short subject (comedies excluded) of 1926, touched upon the honor paid Dr. Riesenfeld in selecting him to prepare the musical setting for "The King of Kings."

This picture, Mr. Hays pointed out, was more than a photoplay; it was a great message that would live long after the present generation of picture makers. He related, with dramatic enthusiasm, some of the remarkable incidents which had happened during the filming of this story, and predicted that it would rank high—very high—among contributions to the screen, and to humanity.

EUGENE H. ROTH well deserves the Riesenfeld medal, and we are pleased to see that his efforts have met with this recognition. The production of the Romance series of two-reel stories based upon famous paintings, done in technicolor, was undertaken with the same scrupulous care and preparation that would have gone into a feature, and their quality was outstanding.

E. W. Hammons, head of Educational, has a standing bet with any exhibitor that if he will play "The Vision" without a line of advertising or publicity it will capture more than half of all the comment and reviews on the program.

WE had the somewhat unique experience this week of seeing the initial episodes of a serial which, in photography, in acting, in lighting, in sets and general production values, was on a par with a first class feature. This was "Blake of Scotland Yard," a serial of which Universal executives think so highly that it will be put out as "A Universal Junior Jewel," a title heretofore reserved for "The Leather Pushers" and "The Collegians," and will be presented by Carl Laemmle.

Directed by Robert F. Hill, this serial opens with a series of atmospheric shots of London in a fog, slowly lap-dissolved into one another, worthy of any feature, and the characters are introduced with all the care usually expended on more ambitious productions. The free camera work, dissolves, shadow effects and the like are in the best German manner, and lend themselves admirably to the serial atmosphere of mystery and suspense.

It's gratifying to see the increasing effort to produce every type of picture in the best manner possible and Universal and Mr. Hill are to be congratulated on this achievement.

JOHN BARRYMORE, speaking at the Los Angeles premiere of "The Beloved Rogue," proposed the making of a picture which would be a film cross-section of American life in 1927, with such persons as Henry Ford, Thomas A. Edison, Babe Ruth, General Pershing, Jane Addams, and the like included in it, to be shown at present and then placed in the government archives for showing one hundred years from now.

The idea is tremendously interesting. Think what it would mean to us now if we had a film actually showing us the leading figures of American life in 1827—how much better than any book of history it would be.

IT was our pleasure to see last week at the Fifth Avenue Playhouse in New York an absorbing exploration film, "The Epic of Mount Everest," and to meet the man who photographed the hazardous ascent, Captain John Noel, F.R.G.S. The picture is being given noonday showings for 14 days, accompanied by a lecture delivered by Captain Noel.

Starting in Phari, the squalid, filthy settlement below Everest, the film follows the progress of the expedition past cliffside hermit's dwellings, forest monasteries, through the unexplored valleys and finally up the face of "Nature's greatest stronghold."

The drama becomes tremendous when the explorers reach the final stage—the wind-swept and precipitous northeast face of the peak. Up and up they go, until the camera can be taken no further and follows the party by means of a telephoto lens from another peak. We see Mallory and Irvine, the ill-fated adventurers, at a distance of four miles from the camera, when they were but 600 feet from the top of the unconquered summit. They were never seen again, and their fate is a mystery which will never be solved.

The picture in its present form is wisely not intended for general theatrical showing. The present engagement is under the auspices of The Film Associates, Inc., and further showings will be in concert halls with Captain Noel's lecture.

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

Murnau's American Success

JUST what F. W. Murnau has accomplished in his first American-made picture, "Sunrise," we probably will not know until next September when it opens in New York, for the greatest secrecy is being observed at Fox concerning it and it will be shown to no one. Murnau, however, is quietly confident that it is his best picture, and he is of a type likely to be slow in coming to such a decision.

There were many predictions that he would not fit into the Fox organization—we, ourselves, felt that he would have a difficult situation to face in any American studio—but the best answer to all that is the fact that he has signed up with Fox for five years, despite hysterical efforts by rival companies to obtain his services. Now he has gone back to Berlin to make one picture on his old contract, "From Nine to Nine," which will be produced jointly by Ufa and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, with Lars Hanson and Camilla Horn in the leading roles.

The future of the screen, Murnau believes, lies with the youngsters now coming along who have been raised on motion pictures, and bring no false theatrical or literary traditions to their work. Young writers, he feels, should be strongly encouraged.

All in all, Murnau is well pleased with his stay here, and his reception exceeded his expectations. And it is nice to know (as a personal letter from the Coast informs us) that even the grips, props and electricians on his set fairly idolized him. We need such directors, of whatever nationality.

Foxites Honor Tauszig

AN enthusiastic testimonial dinner was tendered to Douglas N. Tauszig at Janssen's Hofbrau, New York, last Tuesday night, by his associates of Fox Film corporation, in appreciation of his untiring efforts in making the Fox Fun Frolic the remarkable success that it turned out to be.

Fox Film executives, departmental heads and employes united in paying tribute to one who is active in the interest of Foxite welfare and whose inspirational work has made of Fox Athletic Club an institutional organization.

Just before calling upon the guest of honor, Toastmaster Harry Buxbaum presented Mr. Tauszig with an English combination Celleret containing sterling silver coffee and liquor sets. In addition to "Doug," others who spoke were vice-presidents Jack G. Leo and Saul E. Rogers, Vivian M. Moses, Milton Schwartz, Charles Levin, Roger Ferri, Joe Engel, Jack Sichelman, Eddie Grainger and Joe Lee.

Among those who were present were: Joe Engel, Truman Talley, Vice-President Jack G. Leo, Douglas N. Tauszig, Toastmaster Harry Buxbaum, Milton J. Schwartz, Vice-President Saul E. Rogers, Charles Levin, Jack Sichelman, Harry Reinhardt, Eddie Grainger, Wayne Pierson, Roger Ferri, Nat Finkler, Eddie Collins, Aaron Fox, Nat Dorfman, Ben Holzman, Irving Maas, Joe Lee, Eddie Schnitzer, Jack Bloom, Mike Hill, Louis Levin, W. Shea on Ship Shows

JOSEPH SHEA, erstwhile advance man for "The Big Parade" and now of the J. J. McCarthy offices, contributes a comprehensive article to the February issue of Cinema Art Magazine on "Join the Navy and See the Movies." Probably few persons realize the scope of the distributing system which provides motion picture entertainment for men in the U.S. Navy in all parts of the world. About one hundred and seventy-five showings a day are given. Subjects are leased for three years, which is the period of time required for a film to go over the entire floating "circuit." The Navy library now includes about twelve hundred features and three hundred short subjects. Among the most popular subjects, of course, is "The Big Parade." We commend the article to your attention.

Donald Keith's Sixteenth Wedding

AFTER participating in some fifteen make-believe weddings for the screen, Donald Keith, motion picture leading man, decided to inject some realism into the scene and Sunday married Kathryn Spicuzza, 21 year old Los Angeles girl.

The ceremony, which took place in the Church of Blessed Sacrament in Hollywood at 6.30 P.M., culminates a courtship of eight years' standing. The couple will leave for a honeymoon in the North immediately following the completion of Keith's current picture.

Miss Spicuzza, a graduate of Manual Arts High School, Los Angeles, has never appeared in pictures nor seen her husband upon the screen. The marriage license was issued to Keith under the name Francis Feeney. He gave his age as 23.

The Paramount Exodus

THE population of Hollywood will be considerably increased within the next fortnight due to the exodus from the Paramount Long Island studio of players, directors, cameramen, executives and writers, who have been transferred to the company's West Coast production center.

Among those departing recently are Walter Goss and Ivy Harris, graduates of the Paramount School, who heretofore have appeared only in Eastern-made films, Mona Palma and Josephine Dunn, also of the school, and Philip Strange, a contract player.

Ralph Block, editor-in-chief of the closing Long Island studio, started Saturday, stopping one day in Kansas City, which formerly was his home. Of the writers on the scenario staff, Ray S. Harris and Sam Mintz, who have been employed most recently on the Ed Wynn and W. C. Fields pictures, left Sunday.

Fred Fleck, casting director, and Julian Fleming of the art department also entrained on Saturday.

Of the camera staff, three members are westward bound: A. Fischbeck, who has photographed "The Sorrows of Satan" and "Cabaret"; Ed Cronjager, chief photographer for Richard Dix productions, and Alvin Wyckoff, Meighan's cinematographer.

Robert G. Vignola, director of Gilda Gray's "Cabaret," left Friday for Albany, and after three days with his relatives there, continued his journey to California. Another Friday departure was that of Lynn Shores, assistant director. J. M. Jerauld and William H. Wright of the Long Island studio publicity department will leave for the West Coast within the week.

"Abie" Alumni at Roach

THREE members of the original cast of "Abie's Irish Rose" are appearing in the third of a series of Jewish comedies being produced by Hal Roach for Pathe, Max Davidson, Lillian Elliott and Sidney Franklin.

Ed Wynn Once a Director

ALTHOUGH it is not generally known, Ed Wynn, who is making his first movie, "Rubber Heels," at the Paramount Long Island studio, under the direction of Victor Heerman, himself directed one of the greatest all-star pictures ever produced. He directed it, moreover, lying on his stomach, which put him far in advance of his time, for the film was made in 1915 at the Willat's Studio in Fort Lee, long before German camera-angles had been invented. In the cast were: W. C. Fields, Ina Claire, Leon Errol, Bert Williams, Annette Kellerman, Ann Pennington, Olive Thomas, Bernard Granville, Flo Ziegfeld, Julian Mitchell and Mae Murray—all making their first appearance before the camera.

This expensive aggregation of players, many of whom, including Wynn himself, have since become legitimate screen stars, were appearing in the Ziegfeld Follies. Gene Buck, the librettist, conceived the idea of having the entire cast appear in a brief movie scenario thrown on a screen on the stage, with Wynn standing in the audience making humorous criticisms and giving directions to the shadowy figures. During the making of the picture, Wynn lay on the floor to shout his remarks and directions to the actors, so that their glances down at him would fall at a proper angle when the picture was shown on the stage.

McCollum Returns West

HUGH McCOLLUM, who for the past year and a half has been assistant to Richard A. Rowland, general and production manager of First National Pictures, left last week for the West Coast to fill an important post in the company's production department.

With Ned Marin, recently appointed assistant production manager, acting as toastmaster, all of the executives who are now in town and department heads at the home office attended a farewell luncheon at the Hotel Lorraine and paid tribute to the popularity of Mr. McCollum, who has made many friends during his stay in the East. Charles Einfeld, on behalf of Mr. McCollum's associates, presented him with a handsome traveling bag. Hearty expressions of good wishes were voiced by all those who attended the luncheon. Among those present were W. C. Boothby, Robert Perkins, A. W. Smith, Jr., W. C. Callaway, S. W. Hatch, C. E. Chandler, H. A. Bandy, Albany's Glenn Lyon Dennis, C. M. Steele, F. E. Cahill, A. L. Barlow, J. M. Loeb, Ralph Stitt, William P. Mullen and Sol Shernow.

Sam Receiving His Due

SAM HARDY, who has done yeoman service in various Bill Kane productions, such as "Bluebeard's Seven Wives," "The Great Deception," and others, has come into his own and is being co-starred with Lois Wilson in "Broadway Nights," just finished, as he thoroughly deserves. While a stage star on Broadway he appeared with Lenore Ulric in "Kiki," so he bought a sailboat and christened it "Kiki." Now he says he's going to have it painted black and call it "Lulu Belle."

Garden of Alla Becoming Film Center

SEVERAL prominent film folk recently arrived in Hollywood have engaged villas at The Garden of Alla, the new southern California residential hotel, built on the former homesite of Alla Nazimova, and fast becoming the popular rendezvous of picture celebrities.

Among those registered at present are Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Williams, Ralph Block, of Famous Players-Lasky; Viola Brothers Shore, of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; Andres de Segurola, formerly of the Metropolitan Opera Company, but more recently seen in "The Love of Sunya," who will also appear in Douglas Fairbanks' next picture, and William Randolph Hearst.

These, added to Mr. and Mrs. William Seiter (Laura La-Plante), Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Barber (Dorothy Farnum), Elinor Patterson, who, following her engagement in "The Miracle," succumbed to motion pictures, Beulah Livingstone and Lillian Gale, form a representative group of permanent motion picture guests, whose luncheons, dinners and teas in the administration building keep The Garden of Alla a continual scene of festivity.

Ben Returns

BEN LYON left Hollywood last Tuesday on the completion of "The Tender Hour," a George Fitzmaurice production for First National, in which he is co-featured with Billie Dove, and arrived in New York on Saturday. Mr. Lyon will be featured in Robert Kane's current production to be made at the Cosmopolitan Studios, New York.

A Girl Who Put It Over

DOROTHY HOWELL'S story reads like an Horatio Alger story from the feminine angle. This girl, who is now in New York on her first visit as assistant production manager of Columbia Pictures, with charge of scenarios, left Chicago six years ago as a stenographer. She went to California, and became secretary to Irving Thalberg. Two years later, she went with B. P. Schulberg in a similar capacity. Three years ago she became secretary to Harry Cohn at Columbia—and thanks to the knowledge of production gained in association with these executives, she has risen to the post of assistant production manager—one of the very few women in the industry to hold such a post.

In addition, she is a mainstay of the story department. Original screen stories which she has contributed to the Columbia program this past year include: "Remember," "Wandering Girls," "The Wreck," "The Romantic Age," "Birds of Prey" and "Rich Men's Sons." But this is not all. Continuities which have flowed from her facile typewriter include: "Sweet Rosie O'Grady," "Obey the Law," "The Better Way," "The Price of Honor," and "Paying the Price."

Mr. and Mrs. Zukor to Vacation

ADOLPH ZUKOR and Mrs. Zukor sailed Friday night on the Majestic for a two months' vacation trip abroad. They expect to visit Paris and London and will spend considerable time in Spain and resorts on the Riviera, returning at the end of May.

Vanderbilt Interiors for W. B.

THAT a building devoted entirely to Warner Bros.' interests is a thought for the future was made known this week when H. M. Warner purchased several of the art interiors of the two Vanderbilt mansions at Fifty-second and Fifty-seventh streets and Fifth Avenue, New York City, which now are in the hands of wreckers.

At the Fifty-second Street residence Mr. Warner bought for Warner Bros., the marble dining-room, the mosaic floor, and marble hall of the rotunda and the ebony room. The panelling, ceiling and walls of five rooms of the Fifty-seventh Street residence were also purchased. Originally, those rooms, it is said, cost upward of $100,000 to construct.

Rowland Enthusiastic

RICHARD A. ROWLAND, general and production manager of First National Pictures, who recently went to the Burbank studios, spent the first week there in conference with John McCormick, general manager of production at the West Coast studios, and in viewing early prints of pictures now in the making. The Burbank studios, which have been in operation for approximately one year, are now geared to the top notch in order to handle the biggest production program ever outlined by the company. That Mr. Rowland is highly enthused over the prospects for a great line-up of features is indicated by a wire to Samuel Spring, secretary-treasurer.

Smith Takes Over Arizona "U"

AN entire University has been turned over to Jess Smith for the filming of the screen version of "The Poor Nut," which he is producing in California for First National release.

This week Director Richard Wallace took his company of players, headed by Jack Mulhall, to the University of Arizona, at Tucson, where a large part of the picture will be filmed. The picture is laid in a college, so Smith decided that the best way to make it accurately and well was to get a college to do it in, so arrangements were made with the University of Arizona. Needless to say, there is not much studying going on at the university this week while the picture is being filmed.

Hal Directs Color Comedy

TO Harold R. Hall, formerly associated with First National and now directing for Colorart, goes the honor of directing the first one-reel comedy in natural color, "A Greenwich Village Romance," destined for release by Tiffany as a Color Classic. Antrim Short, Yvonne Bristol and Ricca Allen are the principals, and a number of gorgeous tableaux and dance scenes are contributed by four of the beauties of Earl Carroll's "Vanities," Jean Murray, Gladys Philbin, Irma Philbin and Eileen Wenzel.

Hal started another this week, "The Call of the Sea," with Hope Hampton and Marcos Valls in the principal roles.

An Ardent Fan

WHEN Tom Mix received injuries in the accidental, premature explosion of a cartridge, one six-year-old girl telephoned all the way from Pittsburgh, Pa., to find out how serious it was, to the star's great gratification. Physicians have assured Mix that the powder burns about the eyes will not affect his sight.

No Stars in Our Crown

THE National Board of Review looked at three features and two short subjects this week, but no item in the array tempted the board to get out the rubber stamp and place an asterisk denoting particular merit.

Chaplin Portrait Shown

CHARLIE CHAPLIN, in oil, painted by the Marquise of Queensbury, daughter-in-law of the gentleman who preferred law and order to catch-as-catch-can, is now in exhibition on the walls of the Jacques Seligman Studios on Fifth Avenue, New York City. Charlie was placed there last week, minus his derby, cane and flapping shoes.

Mr. Chaplin sat three times for the visiting English noblewoman, said to be an accomplished portrait artist. The Marquis and his wife are personal friends of the comedian, who was born in London.

Carewe Departing

EDWIN CAREWE, director and co-producer with Inspiration Pictures of the film version of Tolstoy's "Resurrection," left New York for Los Angeles on Wednesday, March 30. He has been in New York attending plays and consulting with executives of United Artists Corporation in his search for a male actor to be co-starred with Dolores del Rio, who was discovered by Mr. Carewe. The producer is to make other films for United Artists Corporation and he is anxious to develop a screen pair such as Mr. Goldwyn's combination, Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky.

They Can Have the Bet!

WINFIELD R. SHEEHAN and Tom Mix have entered into a unique wager. Sheehan has wagered that not one of five Fox male players will wed within one year, while Mix bets that two of them will. Should only one of the actors marry within that time, both must pay the stake to a worthy charity. The five players are George O'Brien, Charles Farrell, Richard Walling, Barry Norton and Clifford Holland.

W. Hoyts Open Office Here

W. A. ROBBINS, for many years identified with the Australian film trade, has opened an office at 140 West 42nd Street, New York City, where he will represent Hoyts Theatres, Inc., of Australia. This circuit has recently been enlarged considerably by consolidation with other circuits, and has a number of large, new theatres under construction.

"Seggy" Signed

ANDRES DE SEGUROLA, who made his first screen appearance in "The Love of Sunya," after a long operatic career, has been signed for a role in the second Gloria Swanson production for U.A., and has departed for the Coast. No information has been given out concerning his role, but since it is to be a desert story we presume that "Seggy" will turn up as a turbaned and sophisticated sheik.

Lois on Coast

IMMEDIATELY on her arrival in Hollywood, Thursday last, Lois Wilson went to the F.B.O. studios, where a conference was held regarding early production of "The Gingham Girl," in which she is to be starred. Just before leaving for the West Coast, Miss Wilson completed work in the starring role of "Broadway Nights," a Robert Kane production made at the Cosmopolitan studios in New York City.

Four P.D.C. Films Approved

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION, which, at the urgent request of clergymen and welfare organizations throughout the country, recently incorporated a Blue Ribbon List of motion pictures suitable for the family, has placed four P.D.C. releases on its list in its latest issue.

These four productions are "Risky Business," "The Nervous Wreck," "The Clinging Vine" and "Rubber Tires."

N. "U" Addition Named After "Strogoff"

N. L. MANHEIM, export manager of Universal, has just received a report from David M. Gould, Universal's Porto Rican manager, concerning an addition to the Universal forces in that country who does not appear on the payroll. It is Michael Gould, now three weeks old, born to Mrs. Gould March 5th in the Presbyterian Hospital in Santurce. Dave named the baby in honor of "Michael Strogoff."

Kent Not to Leave Famous Players

Signs New Contract; Remaining With Firm Six and a Half Years

Sidney R. Kent

SIDNEY R. KENT this week issued a formal statement emphatically denying rumors that he was to resign as General Manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

He announced that he had signed a new contract with Famous by which he will remain with the company for six and a half years. His present contract still has eighteen months to run.

The statement issued by Mr. Kent said: "I have no intention of leaving Famous Players," said Mr. Kent. "My present contract with the company has eighteen more months to run. Proof of the fact that I do not contemplate severing my connection with Famous Players can be found in the fact that I have just signed a new five-year contract which becomes operative on the expiration of my present agreement. Thus for the next six years and a half I shall continue with Paramount those pleasant relations which have marked my career for the last nine years. I hope this formal statement will set at rest for all time any rumors of my departure."

Loew's, Inc., Will Continue to Expand in South

COMMENTING on a report published in Charlotte to the effect that Loew's, Inc., is planning to build up a circuit in small towns of the South for vaudeville and a twice weekly policy of pictures, E. A. Loew, of Loew's Inc., intimated that his company will continue Southern expansion although no definite programme has been decided upon by Loew's, Inc., regarding the development of the chain. The company has reestablished its Southern office at Atlanta.

United Artists in Hays Organization; M.P.P.D.A. Officers Re-elected

AT the sixth annual meeting of the Motion Pictures Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., Will H. Hays, President, the following directors were re-elected:

Messrs. G. McL. Baynes (Kinogram Publishing Corp.), Charles H. Christie (Christie Film Co.), R. H. Cochrane (Universal Pictures Corp.), William Fox (Fox Film Corp.), D. W. Griffith (D. W. Griffith, Inc.), E. W. Hammons (Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.), Will H. Hays (Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc.), Joseph P. Kennedy (Film Booking Offices of America, Inc.); Marcus Loew (Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corp.), Frederick C. Munroe (Producers Distributing Corp.), J. Homer Platten (Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc.), Richard A. Rowland (First National Pictures, Inc.), Joseph M. Schenck (United Artists Corporation), Albert Warner (Warner Bros.), Adolph Zukor (Famous Players-Lasky Corp.). The members elected United Artists Corporation to membership, the roster of the Association now being twenty-four members.

At the regular quarterly meeting of the Board of Directors of the Association immediately following, Will H. Hays, Carl E. Milliken and J. Homer Platten were re-elected president, secretary and treasurer respectively.

In his annual report, Will H. Hays noted the development of the organized industry's program of enlarged usefulness of the motion picture as an instrument for entertainment and instruction and indicated that the only possible limitation to the scope of the industry was its need for executive, technical and artistic ability of the highest degree, now becoming available in greater measure than before.

Plan Road-show Protest as Controversy is Revived

Playing in "Legit" Houses Opposed; J. J. McCarthy Gives Views

IT is expected that one of the chief features of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America convention will be the exhibitor opposition to presentation of road-show productions in legitimate theatres. A protest against this practice may be forwarded to Will H. Hays, it is understood.

Theatre owners claim they are entitled to play road-show pictures in their theatres declaring that bookings in legitimate theatres are depriving them of profits which are rightfully theirs. They stress the fact that, in most cases, legitimate houses are not properly equipped for picture presentations and also that these houses have not contributed to the building up of picture business.

Key city theatre owners contend they are willing to turn over houses for road-show presentations, believing there are to be a greater number of these productions for which the increased admission must be secured. One exhibitor in a key city where business is below normal, reports a decrease of business which approximates the net takings at a legitimate house playing a road-show production.

J. J. McCarthy, who is handling the road-showing of "The Big Parade" and "Ben-Hur," states that, until exhibitors can furnish a circuit of houses covering key cities, the only practical way to book these attractions is in legitimate houses. For the first-run theatre owner in a key city to discard a season's bookings in order to take on a road-show picture is dangerous, he claims. It means an entire change of policy and building up of a new patronage and what, queries Mr. McCarthy, is the exhibitor going to do with his regular patrons in the meantime?

According to McCarthy, there only have been about six legitimate road-show productions in the last 12 years—an average of one every two years. These pictures represent a specialized field which cannot very well be handled through showing them in regular picture houses for the reason stated. His experience proves that the road-show production presented in the legitimate theatre for a long run at top prices builds patronage for the picture house when it finally books the film at popular prices, according to McCarthy. Road-showing does not tap the popular price patronage, which automatically goes to the picture houses, and these eventually show the production. The road-show benefits the picture houses also by creating new patronage, and building a prestige for the motion picture in general that directly helps every exhibitor box-office, he believes.

Medal Awarded to Roth's "Vision"

Will Hays Praises Short Subject When Presenting Producer of Best Release in 1926 With Riesenfeld Prize

WILL H. HAYS formally awarded the Dr. Riesenfeld Gold Medal for the best short subject of 1926 to "The Vision," Eugene H. Roth's Romance production, E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, accepting the medal for Mr. Roth at a luncheon at the Hotel Astor, New York City, on Tuesday.

"The Vision" was a two-reel Romance production, distributed by Educational, and produced by Mr. Roth from a story suggested by Sir John Millais' famous painting, "Speak, Speak." It was done in technicolor throughout. It attracted wide attention on the part of press and public, and was selected for the Riesenfeld medal by a committee of distinguished exhibitors.

Mr. Hays, in presenting the medal, said:

"The motion picture industry started as an industry of short subjects. The first films were one- and two-reelers.

"The short subject has always been an essential part of the motion picture program.

"Its place was never more assured than it is today. Its future was never more bright.

"The public wants and demands diversity in its amusement.

"The short subject is as the perfect salad, the perfect dessert, to a perfect meal.

"As important as the feature picture is, the exhibitor who overlooks the fullest opportunities and advantages of the short subject on his surrounding program is keeping money out of his pocket. He is overlooking a tremendous asset.

"More than 200,000 miles of motion picture film are manufactured annually in this country.

"Within the last four years, more than 150,000,000,000 feet of motion picture film have been shipped by parcel post and express and truck in this country.

"And in that four-year period—so orderly and carefully are the shipments made and supervised under the conservation activities of the industry—that only four fires have resulted, with a total loss of only $450.

Eugene H. Roth

"17,846 feature pictures, comedies, and news reels were shown last year to the helpless shut-ins in the hospitals, orphanages, homes for the aged, and prisons in this country, without cost to the inmates or sustainers of those institutions.

"A quarter of a million workers are engaged in making, distributing, and showing motion pictures.

"This means roughly that a million of our citizens are directly dependent on the industry for their living.

"This means, in addition, that each of those workers is putting other workers in jobs, because the motion picture directly affects nearly every trade and profession in the world.

"For instance, $67,000,000 go annually to the newspapers and mazagines of the country for advertising. Thus the printer, the lithographer, the paper manufacturer, the publisher, are all affected.

"More silver is used in treating the motion pictures than in making silver coin.

"Thousands of bales of cotton are needed in the manufacture of film base.

"The past year has been one of many accomplishments, of fine achievements.

"Never before were so many great pictures produced. Never before were the standards so high. Every week brought pictures that can be called truly great pictures.

"The attitude of the public has been more friendly than ever before. Comment of press and critics has never been so constructive and so helpful. This is the result of the honest effort on the part of the industry to square its performances with its promises. Public confidence depends on private conduct.

"Harvard University, the oldest university in America, has already inaugurated a course in motion pictures in the Graduate School of Business Administration.

"Columbia has a committee appointed by President Nicholas Murray Butler at work with us now considering the establishment of a Motion Picture School of Technology.

"Fogg Museum of Fine Arts at Harvard will preserve the classics of the screen along with the masterpieces in other arts.

"University of Washington, Western Reserve, University of Pennsylvania and other great educational institutions are studying the motion picture as a part of drama, art, business.

"The Central Casting Bureau has finished a year of finest service.

"Placements of 259,000 extras were made without a cent's cost to the workers.

"This is an average of 710 a day.

"More than 8,000,000 telephone calls were handled last year in that work, and handled promptly, efficiently.

"In 1926 thirty-three Boards of Arbitration disposed of 12,566 cases, amounting to $2,712,495.22 in the United States. Of these 5,018 were settled before hearing. All but 25 of the 5,476 on which hearings were held were settled by unanimous or majority vote.

"The improvement in the motion picture theatre, as well as in the pictures, has aided in developing the appreciation of the industry. Space and beauty, music and art, every sort of decoration, once available only for the rich, are now at the service of all. And indeed, is ambition promoted, homes improved, conditions all advanced, as the motion picture creates honest desires, the desires create demands, the demands create ambition to work and to use the ingenuity God has given us."

Mr. Hammons, in accepting the award, expressed his pleasure at receiving this medal for the second time, and said he would bend every effort this year toward making it "three in a row."

A full analysis of "The Vision," with pictures, will appear in next week's issue of "Motion Picture News."

Stanley Company's Activities Doubled in 1926; Present Position Strong

THE Stanley Theatre Company has attained a commanding position in the industry during the past year owing to doubling of its field of operations. At the close of 1926 the company's total assets were $71,669,836. This includes: $46,205,865, properties owned; $9,917,757, leaseholds; $4,093,925, investments, and $3,629,806, cash. This compares with $24,497,293 total assets at the end of 1925 and $19,217,350 at the close of 1924.

Earnings for 1926, after charges but before depreciation, total $3,148,809. These profits, however, reflect earnings for but a portion of the year on acquired properties. Minimum earnings this year are predicted at $6,000,000.

By virtue of its acquisition, with West Coast, of control of First National, and the national theatre pool the company now is engineering, Stanley has assumed a position of greater dominance in the industry.

Rork Picture to Star Will Rogers

Charles O. Hoyt's "A Texas Steer" Chosen as Vehicle

WILL ROGERS has been signed by Sam E. Rork to portray the star role in "A Texas Steer," an adaptation of one of the eminently successful stage plays written by Charles O. Hoyt some years ago. Production on the filmization is scheduled for August and, though the director or cast supporting Mr. Rogers have not been named, it is understood that the picturization will be handled by a very prominent director and the supporting roles played by noted screen luminaries.

Mr. Rogers' role in "A Texas Steer" might have been written especially for the star. The story tells of a bluff, blustery Westerner in Congress in the early days of American history whose constituents descend on him because they believe he is mishandling their affairs. Of course he isn't, so everything is ironed out satisfactorily. The production may well take its place among those pictures portraying types of early American pioneers.

Mr. Rogers' writings at present are syndicated to approximately 150 newspapers and it is said by some that his voice will play no little part in the coming presidential election. The radio, too, has claimed his attention.

Washington Film Board Settles Claims

During 1926, 138 claims were brought before the Washington, D.C., Film Board of Trade for settlement, according to a report recently made public by James Blaine Fitzgerald, secretary of the Board.

Awards were made in 65 cases while in 51 cases they were settled before hearing, one was dismissed and one was taken to the courts. Twenty were pending when the report was made.

Eberson to Design Australia Theatres as Result of Buyers' Guide

AS a direct result of the second issue of the Motion Picture News Buyers' Guide, featuring the work of John Eberson, theatre architect, Stuart F. Doyle, president of Union Theatres, Ltd., of Australia, now on a visit to the United States, has commissioned Mr. Eberson to design several houses to be built in Sydney and Melbourne. Accompanying Mr. Doyle is Mrs. Doyle and Henry E. White, the engineer for Union Theatres.

The cities being taken in include Chicago, Detroit and New York, and Mr. Doyle is attending not only to theatre matters but to production and other matters pertinent to the affairs of Union Theatres.

Stanley, K-A Merger in Negotiatory Stage

J. J. McGuirk States Several Months Required for Completion of Final Details

ACCORDING to John J. McGuirk, president of the Stanley Company of America, who has just returned from a series of conferences held with officials of the West Coast Theatres, Inc. at Hollywood, where final arrangements were made for the assumption of control of First National Pictures, Inc. by Stanley and West Coast, it will require several months before the final details of the proposed Keith-Albee and Stanley mergers are completed.

The plan, as outlined, which is now in its tentative form, provides for the amalgamation of the Stanley-Keith-Albee interests, including the Orpheum Circuit, Producers Distributing Co., Pathe Exchanges, Inc., and the subsidiary companies of both circuits. E. F. Albee, head of the Keith-Albee Circuit, has not yet taken an active part in the negotiations, J. J. Murdock having so far represented the vaudeville interests. Mr. Albee has returned from a month's stay in Florida and conferences will be resumed in New York, where final negotiations will be completed.

There are such a great number of interests involved that it is believed that several months' time will be entailed in bringing all of the varying interests to a point of agreement. Harry O. Schwalbe, who was formerly secretary of First National Pictures, has expressed to Stanley Company officials his desire not to re-enter motion picture production or distribution.

His name has been mentioned in connection with an important executive position now that Stanley has taken control of First National. Unless some influence is brought to bear by Stanley Company officials, who are very friendly with Mr. Schwalbe, it is not likely that he will resume his activities in the motion picture industry.

Roxy Theatre Added to Fox Chain

"Cathedral of the Motion Picture" to Be Producer's First Run in New York; Roxy Remains at Helm; Other Houses Building

THE ROXY, New York's newest picture palace, has been sold to William Fox and the Fox Theatres Corporation, it became known this week, by Herbert Lubin and associates. S. L. Rothafel continues as director of this, as well as the other Roxy theatres to be built under Fox control, and will act in an advisory capacity to the Fox circuit.

This deal was rumored many months ago, but strongly denied at that time. The negotiations have long been under way, and probably forestalled the construction of a Broadway house by Fox. Reports this week were to the effect that the Roxy circuit would be extended to the principal capitals of Europe by Fox eventually.

Roxy Theatres, Inc., now has under construction Roxy's Mansion, between 58th and 59th streets on Lexington Avenue, New York, and has drawn plans for Roxy's Midtown, 75th and Broadway. These are included in the deal.

Fox pictures will of course receive preference, giving Fox a Broadway first-run for the first time, although it is announced that the "best product obtainable in the open market" will continue to be played in the future.

The consideration involved in the deal was not named, but Mr. Fox placed the valuation at $15,000,000 and said "you can say that that is what we paid and more."

To Mr. Fox the acquisition of this theatre is, as he described it, "the supreme achievement of his life." There are now 31 houses in the Fox chain, with the Roxy, and the nine Fox theatres and two Roxy houses under construction, will swell the total to 42.

Contrasted with this, Mr. Fox described the "hole in the wall" in Brooklyn where he began his career as a theatre operator. Back in 1903, his other business not being very profitable, he decided to become a theatre owner. His financial resources were limited, but he managed to scrape together some $1,600, with which he purchased "the smallest theatre in Brooklyn," at 700 Broadway in that city, which had a seating capacity of no less than 146 persons. A second-hand piano (at a cost of $30) furnished the music—a point which Mr. Fox compared with the magnificent organ in the Roxy, as showing the forward march of the motion picture during the years from 1903 to 1927.

Mr. Rothafel in a supplementary statement said:

"This affiliation brings to us the forceful personality of William Fox, one of the pioneers of the industry. I have known Mr. Fox intimately for 15 years, and have admired his great fearlessness, his vision and his great success in building his corporation to rank as one of the great forces in the motion picture industry. He seeks an ideal which he sees exemplified in the theatre which we have the honor to direct, and I have a feeling of great security and assurance, not alone because of his advice, counsel and guidance which he is so fitted to impart, but also because of the knowledge that the affiliation will give him an impetus to produce films of a quality to merit presentation in the theatre that we so proudly call 'The Cathedral of the Motion Picture.' I am very happy indeed and am sure that the success of our enterprise is assured."

Philip Russell, of Wing & Russell, and Edwars Sonnenschein, of Sonnenschein, Berkson, Leutman, & Levinson, Chicago, and Harry G. Kosch, New York, were attorneys for the Roxy circuit, with Saul E. Rogers acting in a legal capacity for Fox.

Motion Picture and Columbia Notables Confer

LEADERS of the motion picture industry and professors at Columbia University met Friday, March 25, when the conferences between the movie men and the educators were begun with a meeting of the Union League Club of committees appointed by Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University, and Will H. Hays, president of the M.P.P.D.A. The conferences are expected to result in the establishment of courses of motion-picture-making at Columbia in photography, architecture business administration, scenario writing and other phases of the motion picture industry.

Among the committee members are several prominent movie figures: Adolph Zukor, R. H. Cochrane, Nicholas M. Schenck, William Fox and Frederick C. Munroe and Carl E. Milliken. On the committees are the following educators: James C. Egbert, Director of University Extension. Frank D. Fackenthal, Secretary of Columbia University, William A. Boring, Director of the School of Architecture, Walter I. Slichter, Professor of Electrical Engineering, Daniel D. Jackson, Professor of Chemical Engineering, James P. C. Southall, Professor of Physics, and James Kip Finch, Associated Professor of Civil Engineering.

Hugenberg Controls Ufa, Is Latest Report

According to a dispatch to the "New York Times," not officially confirmed, Herr Hugenberg, German publisher, has virtually acquired control of the Ufa, together with Otto Wolf, iron and steel baron. Hugenberg is a strong reactionary, and it is feared in some quarters that he will use the motion picture screen as an added means of propaganda. His newspapers have been waging a bitter war against American productions.

Just what will happen to the $4,000,000 loan to Ufa by Famous Players and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has not been announced, although it is understood that Ufa-Haus, held as security, was sold last week for 15,000,000 marks.

New Butterfield Theatre at Niles, Michigan

The W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc., began work Monday, March 21, on a new 1,200-seat theatre at Niles, Mich. T. W. Ready, well known citizen at Niles, is financing the project. The Butterfield interests have taken a long term lease on the building which will cost about $300,000. The architects are Myrle Smith of South Bend and W. P. Whitney of Chicago.

Rome Has Only 45 Seats to Each 1,000 Population

"Il Cinema Italiano" states that there are 54 picture theatres in Rome with a seating capacity of 35,900, according to advices to the Department of Commerce from Trade Commissioner J. E. Wholean at Rome. This is 45 seats per 1,000 inhabitants. Paris has the same proportionate number.

Opposition to Ohio Block Booking Bill Renders Passage Unlikely

PASSAGE of the bill prohibiting block booking and compulsory arbitration in Ohio seems unlikely, as many prominent exhibitors of the state appeared at a hearing on the measure this week and opposed its passage on the grounds that block booking is a necessary trade practice and arbitration is a success in Ohio and throughout the country. The bill is similar to the one sponsored by the exhibitor unit in Indiana which failed of passage.

P. J. Wood, business manager of the Ohio exhibitor unit; J. J. Harwood, president of the Cleveland association; H. T. Palmer, arbitration representative for northern Ohio, and Fred Desberg, of Loew's Ohio theatres, were present at the hearing, as was C. C. Pettijohn of the Film Boards of Trade. An attorney representing George Schade of Sandusky was the only speaker in favor of the measure.

Judge Harry Ball suggested to Schade's attorney that the bill was unconstitutional because it sought to deprive contracting parties of the rights to contract. The attorney admitted he questioned the constitutionality of the bill.

Change Proposed in Arbitration Plan

Committees to Iron Out Minor Disputes Suggested by Hays

ARBITRATION methods are likely to be materially changed throughout the country as the result of recommendations sent to the Film Boards of Trade by the Hays office last week suggesting the appointment of conciliatory committees to pass on cases prior to their submission to arbitration, with a view to disposing of many of them without recourse to the arbitration board, simplifying the work of that body.

This has already been decided upon in Cleveland, where two changes in the arbitration procedure are being made: first, all matters proved to be pertinent to the case under consideration will be heard, and not merely those things clearly set forth in the contract, as is done under the Minneapolis plan; and, second, the appointment of conciliatory committees.

This latter plan is similar to one followed in Philadelphia for the past two years, where a committee known as "the flying squadron" hears cases and settles a large portion of them without taking them to the arbitration board. Under this arrangement conciliatory committees are appointed both by the exhibitor organization and by the distribution organization. Each organization will have a committee, probably of two members. Exhibitors with a grievance against an exchange will first submit the difficulty to this conciliatory committee. In many cases the grievances are so small that they can be settled right then and there. In case they cannot be settled, then this conciliatory committee will take it under advisement and determine whether or not the plaintiff has a case against the distributor. The distributor body will act in similar manner as regards claims of its members against exhibitors.

These conciliatory committees are not final. They cannot pass finally on whether a case is one subject to arbitration or not. They are not even compulsory. But they aim to lessen the work of the board of arbitration by disposing of those minor cases which can be amicably and satisfactorily settled, without clogging up the operations of the board, thus leaving time for the consideration of important cases.

C. C. Pettijohn, general counsel for the Film Boards of Trade, expressed himself in favor of this short-cut method of operation.

"Yankee Clipper" Previewed by Missouri Legislature

A preview screening of "The Yankee Clipper" was held at a dinner given in honor of the adjourning Fifty-fourth General Assembly of Missouri by the Jefferson City Chamber of Commerce, March 22. Among the representatives of Jefferson City and State of Missouri were Lieutenant Governor Bennett of Missouri and Mayor Thomas of Jefferson City.

"Big Parade" Reaches Thousandth Consecutive Showing at Astor

ON April second Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "The Big Parade" will be shown for the thousandth time at the Astor Theatre, New York City. This, says the J. J. McCarthy offices, accords the production the distinction of the third longest continuous run known to the American theatre; the two productions outstripping it in point of number of performances are the legitimate plays, "Abie's Irish Rose" and Lightnin'." It is probable that the war picture will be in second place before the close of the current engagement.

It is pointed out that "The Big Parade" will have a greater box-office gross than either of its competitors before the end of the present season. At the present writing its total for the seventy-one weeks at the Astor is a trifle over $1,300,000.

Badger Film Buying Unit Is Disbanded

Opposition to Methods of Milwaukee Corporation by Distributors Is Reported Reason

THE Badger Theatres Corporation, organized a little over a year and a half ago with the backing of the principal suburban exhibitors of Milwaukee, has been officially dissolved. It is reported that opposition of the leading distributors to the methods of the combine resulted in the decision this week to disband.

At the beginning about half a dozen out-of-town exhibitors were enrolled in the Badger ranks but one by one they withdrew and at the finish only the city of Milwaukee was represented in the membership.

Max Wiesner, formerly sales manager for Grauman, was general manager of the Badger organization and his connection with the buying combine gave rise to repeated rumors of Grauman's backing of Badger. Mr. Wiesner as well as all of the other officials and members of Badger Theatres Corp., have refused any statement, but it is known that former Badger members who, under the rules of the combine, entrusted all of their buying to Mr. Wiesner, are now buying independently and have stated to the exchanges that Badger is finished.

The first rift in the Badger ranks came when Jack Silliman sold his circuit of eleven Milwaukee houses to the Universal chain. Then a few months later, E. W. Van Norman, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin, and one of the most active figures in the Badger organization, sold out to the Goetz brothers, as did also Fred Seegert of the Regent Theatre.

With the many changes in the Milwaukee situation, due to the extensive building campaigns of Saxe and Universal, there is a threatened shortage of product for the fall and this fact, it is believed, was one of the determining factors in the move to disband Badger. It is understood that three or four of the leading companies took a determined stand several months ago and have refused to recognize Badger, insisting on dealing directly with the exhibitors, which was contrary to the Badger regulations.

Mr. Wiesner has not announced his plans for the future but it is believed he is contemplating an independent invasion of the state-rights field.

"U" Theatres Expanding

Michalove Supervising Extension and Re-Equipment; Milwaukee House Planned

DAN MICHALOVE, who is supervising the extension of the Universal theatre chain, including the re-equipment of all houses in the Milwaukee Theatre Circuit, formerly the Silliman-Grauman Circuit, conferred this week with N. J. Blumberg, Wisconsin division manager for "U" theatres. The Milwaukee chain includes twelve houses with seating capacities running from 900 to 1300.

Improvements planned for these houses include re-seating, furnishing and decorating and in some cases a new organ will be installed. Another house is planned for Milwaukee which will seat 2,000. A site has been purchased on Third Street and construction is estimated at a half million dollars. Erection of the building is now under way.

Mr. Michalove this week appointed Charles C. Branham division manager of the "U" chain in the Omaha-Kansas City territory. This move marks the merging of the two districts under a central control. Marshall Taylor and W. L. Doudlah, district managers of the Omaha and Kansas City territories respectively, will continue in their present capacities under Branham.

Dolores del Rio Will Be Starred in United Artists' "Ramona"

DOLORES DEL RIO is to be starred in a United Artists picture, "Ramona," which Edwin Carewe will direct and co-produce with Inspiration Pictures in California as soon as Miss del Rio has finished her work in "The Trail of '98." Mr. Carewe left for California this week to begin work on the scenario of the Helen Hunt Jackson novel, which has sold into 127 editions.

Dolores del Rio

The star, a native of Mexico, will play a Mexican girl in "Ramona." The decision to star Miss del Rio was reached after Joseph M. Schenck, Walter Camp, Jr., president of Inspiration Pictures, Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford and Charles Chaplin had previewed "Resurrection," the picturization of the Tolstoy novel.

Companies Preparing for Sales Conventions

Plans Being Formulated for Sessions, Majority of Which Will Be Held in May; Some Dates Set

THE majority of film companies are at present preparing for the annual sales conventions and some have announced definite meeting dates. Details are now being settled with most firms planning to hold the sessions in May.

Famous has made no definite decision, but from present indications the convention will start May 2 for the Eastern division in New York, swing to Chicago May 6 for the Middle-West division, and finish in San Francisco for the Western division. The executive and sales staffs will follow the convention throughout the schedule.

M. G. M. will convene at Los Angeles from May 19 to 24 inculsive, with full sales representation from all branches.

First National has set May 19 to 23 inclusive, as the dates, the convention to be held at the Burbank studio, with a complete representation of executives and all branches.

Fox will hold its convention at Atlantic City, about the second week in May with all exchanges in attendance. No definite dates have been set.

Educational has set a tentative date early in May, with the Ambassador at Los Angeles as the probable choice if reservations can be made.

Universal has made no definite decision, its plans still being in the formative stage.

Warners will await the return of H. M. Warner from the Coast before definite plans can be announced.

Pathe is holding plans in abeyance till the question of the impending merger with P.D.C. is settled. It may develop that this company will dispense with an annual convention and confine itself to regional gatherings.

Any announcement of its convention dates at this time would be premature, John C. Flinn, vice-president and general manager of P.D.C., states.

C. E. A. Split is Feared

British Exhibitor Organization Divided on Quota Question and 1926 Annual Report

FACTIONAL differences, with a possible split in the organization, are feared in England for the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association, according to reports, following differences of opinion over the quota bill and dissatisfaction with the annual report of the officers.

Many exhibitors are hostile to the quota features of the bill, according to trade paper reports, although they are strongly in favor of abolishing block booking and blind booking. The bill meanwhile has passed its second reading.

Another factor in the situation is the complaint by some members that the annual report shows very little accomplished in view of the expenditures made. This has led to open complaints in the trade press by exhibitors, who have pointed out that while operating costs of the organization were high, it had little to point to in the way of concrete achievements for 1926.

The C. E. A., on the other hand, points to the prospective action on blind and block booking, and to its services in obtaining electric current supply during the general strike, averting what would otherwise have been a tremendous loss to the theatre owners of Great Britain.

Taylor, Watertown; Edward P. Holden, Jr., Brooklyn.

New South African Group Form Syndicate

A new syndicate known as Kinemas, South Africa (Proprietary), Ltd., has recently been formed in South Africa with an initial capacity of 25,000 pounds, according to advices to the Department of Commerce from Trade Commissioner Perry J. Stevenson, Johannesburg. Large houses will be built in Johannesburg, Cape Town and Durban, while a distributing department is contemplated. Programs will be shown in town halls for the present.

Four New Finnish Houses Planned for 1927

Four new motion picture theatres are being built in Finland during the current year, according to a report to the Department of Commerce from Assistant Trade Commissioner F. B. Lyons, at Helsingfors, the seating capacity to range from 1,200 to 1,500. The latest available figures on the total for the country are for 1924, at which time there were 150 houses with a total seating capacity of about 40,000.

Canadian Imports Largely from United States

According to official Canadian Government figures, just given out at Ottawa, Canada, last year, imported 23,593,221 feet of film from the United States, 286,158 feet from Great Britain, and only 24,660 from all other sources.

Temple Bailey Signed By Kennedy

A LONG term contract with Film Booking Offices has been signed by Temple Bailey, novelist, who affixed her signature to the arrangement at the behest of Joseph P. Kennedy, F. B. O. vice-president. By the terms of the contract F. B. O. acquires the right to film every novel that comes from the Bailey pen for the next five years. The first production to be filmed will be "Wallflowers," a serial in Good Housekeeping Magazine.

In And Out of Town

TONY SUDEKUM, of Nashville, Tenn., one of the South's best known exhibitors, will leave Nashville next week for New York, from which port he will sail April 9 on the Leviathan for an eight weeks' tour of European countries. He will be accompanied by three other Nashville business men. They expect to visit England, France and Germany and will return to New York early in June.

ERLE HAMPTON, assistant to Robert M. Yost, director of publicity at Fox Films' Hollywood studio, arrived in New York this week to enter the home office, where he will be stationed for four months. Hampton will assist Vivian M. Moses, director of publicity and advertising, in the preparation of the Fox Films publicity campaign for the 1927-28 production schedule.

DAVE BADER, better known as "Accessory Dave," has just returned to New York following a trip to the Universal exchanges in Albany and Pittsburgh, where he tried out some ideas in poster and other accessory sales. He proposes to visit some of the other Eastern exchanges for the same purpose within the next week or ten days.

CHARLES STOMBAUGH, newly-made special representative at the Pathe home office, left New York on Friday, March 25th, on his first trip in his new capacity to Pathe branches. His first stop will be St. Louis. He will then continue on to Kansas City and Oklahoma.

J. ROBERT RUBIN, vice-president and general counsel of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, has arrived on the West Coast to consult with Louis B. Mayer, regarding the organization's schedule for the new season. Rubin will remain in Los Angeles for another week before returning to New York.

S. C. JACQUES, Pathe central division sales manager, left the home office on Friday, March 25th, for a tour of exchanges in his territory, making his first stop in Cleveland and then continuing on to Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Buffalo and Indianapolis. He expects to return to his desk in New York on or about May 15th.

H. A. R. DUTTON and George De Kruff, of the Chicago offices of the National Theatre Supply Company, have returned to their headquarters after a several days' business trip to Eastern cities.

SAM SAX, president of Lumas, returned East this week to confer with Budd Rogers regarding the 1927-28 production schedule. Sax went to the West Coast about five months ago to supervise the production of his product. He will remain in New York for about a month after which period he will return to California to start active work on his new program.

Atlanta Film Damage Stir

Film Board Issues Appeal for Cooperation Toward Elimination of Condition; Situation Acute

As a result of a long conference brought about by increasing complaints of local film exchange managers, the Atlanta Film Board of Trade has issued an appeal to exhibitors for cooperation in the elimination of the practice of mutilating and damaging prints. The situation, says the Board, has been growing worse for some time and has now reached an acute stage. Reports from exchanges in the Atlanta territory indicate that a general laxness is responsible for the trouble.

Exchange managers assume a large share of responsibility in preserving the life of films; they maintain organized inspection departments, every film being carefully inspected both on its arrival and departure. Through this method placing of blame for damage is easily determined on those "out" and "in" shipments and the duty is to freeze the source of damage to films that are coming from one booking to another.

But even in instances where responsibility for mutilation is fixed definitely on the one theatre where a film has been used for a specific booking the exchanges report that they often find exhibitors unwilling to admit responsibility for such damage. As a result the matter will go before the Board of Arbitration which is ready to take positive action on future complaints.

It is pointed out that projection machine inspection can be had for the asking. The National Theatre Supply Company recently added this feature to its service and inspection will be furnished without [illegible]

Glenn Explains F. N. Policy

Exploiteers' Assignments Temporary, He States; Denies Report of Department's Abolition

COMMENTING on a statement which appeared recently in a motion picture trade journal to the effect that "First National is doing away with its exploitation department, and practically every man is out," Allan S. Glenn, supervisor of exploitation for First National, states the writer was laboring under a misapprehension. This was "induced no doubt by the fact that several weeks ago we discontinued the activities of several of our agents who had been assigned to temporary duty in certain exchange territories," declared Mr. Glenn.

First National's exploitation policy, decided three years ago, excludes the permanent assignment of agents to fixed territories and the company does not maintain a fixed number of agents throughout the year, he stated. When needed, a list of agents available at most times is at hand and the majority of these men are ready for immediate call.

Mr. Glenn also declared that the day of the "All-round" agent is past. He has found that each assignment calls for a definite type of exploiteer, either a man capable of creating good newspaper copy for the town where reliance is placed upon that organ, or one that "we term a 'stunt' town," which requires a man with a bent for that method of exploitation.

"The policy of the Exploitation Division of First National, as I have briefly outlined it, has been eminently successful ever since it has been in effect and will remain unchanged unless new conditions arise which make necessary its revision."

Garbo Signs Five Year M-G-M Contract

GRETA GARBO has signed a contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer calling for her services with that company for five years; her first assignment is the starring role in "Anna Karenina" which will be directed by Dmitri Buchowetzki, also under contract with M-G-M.

Greta Garbo

The announcement of the contract was made by Louis B. Mayer and the negotiations were handled by J. Robert Rubin, vice-president and general counsel for M-G-M, and H. E. Eddington, representing Miss Garbo. Her first story is from the pen of Count Tolstoy. The star is not yet twenty-one years of age, but has won considerable popularity both in this country and abroad.

Anti Daylight Saving Bill Up in Minnesota

Exhibitors of Minnesota are showing a lively interest in the bill prohibiting the establishment of daylight saving in the state which was recommended for passage by the house committee on general legislation of the state legislature last week. Duluth will vote on daylight saving at its general municipal election April 5. The proposed ordinance provides for setting the clock ahead one hour between April 24 and October 2, and is being sponsored by the Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Princess Theatre, Bristol, R. I., Damaged by Water

The Princess Theatre at Bristol, R.I., was damaged by water and smoke on Monday when fire damaged the adjoining Tracey & Lilley building to the extent of $100,000. A fire wall separating the theatre from the damaged building saved the theatre from total destruction.

Universal Spending $15,500,000

Schedule for 1927-28 Includes Sixty-Seven Features; About Six Hundred Reels of Short Subjects

WHAT Universal considers its most ambitious program is announced for the 1927-28 season. Sixty-seven feature productions are scheduled and approximately six hundred reels of short product will be released. This schedule will represent an expenditure of more than $15,500,000, states Carl Laemmle.

The schedule includes a dozen special productions, thirty-three Jewel pictures and twenty-two of the thriller and fast action Western variety.

The list of specials is headed by "Uncle Tom's Cabin," a production with forty-five principals in the cast which has been in the making for two years, representing an expenditure of $2,000,000. Harry Pollard directed. It is expected that the picture will be road-showed. Next is "The Cat and the Canary," an adaptation of John Willard's stage play which Paul Leni directed with Laura La Plante in the starring role.

The third special will be "Les Miserables," the Universal Film de France filmization of Victor Hugo's story. It has already been previewed in many centers. A school scholarship tie-up has been arranged and four publishers are bringing out new illustrated editions of the book to be timed with release of the picture. "Big Guns" is another special which Irvin Willat is directing from a story by Richard Barry with the cooperation of the U.S. Navy. George Lewis is starred.

"Love Me and the World is Mine," a story by Hans Bartach which A. E. Dupont is transcribing to the screen with Norman Kerry and Mary Philbin in the featured roles, is the next special. An exploitation campaign built around the revival of the familiar ballad is in progress. "Show Boat," an adaptation of Edna Ferber's popular novel, is another special on the schedule. Harry Pollard is scheduled to direct the picture version as soon as he finishes work on "Uncle Tom's Cabin." "The Man Who Laughs," Victor Hugo's novel, will be screened as a Universal special for next year. Conrad Veidt will play the principal role and it is expected that Mary Philbin will also appear in the production.

Another special is the sequel to "The Cohens and Kellys," which will be called "The Cohens and Kellys in Paris." This too, will be directed by Harry Pollard. Four Reginald Denny vehicles will also be produced as specials; they are, "Out All Night," "Good Morning Judge," "Painting the Town" and "Watch My Speed."

Next in order is the Big Gun group comprising thirty-three Jewels. Another Paul Leni production leads, "The Chinese Parrot," from the Earl Derr Biggers novel. Marian Nixon, Hobart Bosworth and K. Sojin are featured. Next, "The American Eagle," a story of the American Flying Forces in the World War, written by Lieutenant Howard Blanchard, an American Ace. This will be an Emory Johnson production with Raymond Keane and Barbara Kent.

The succeeding Jewels will be as follows: "Wild Beauty," starring Rex, the wild horse, directed by Henry MacRae from a story by Sylvia Seid. June Marlowe, Universal junior beauty, featured in the production. "Silk Stockings," a Laura La Plante picture, directed by Wesley Ruggles, from the Broadway stage play "A Pair of Silk Stockings," by Cyril Harcourt. "The Small Bachelor," a William Seiter production from the P. G. Wodehouse-Liberty Magazine serial. Andre Beranger, Barbara Kent, Otis Harlan, Carmelita Geraghty, Gertrude Astor in the cast.

"You're in the Army Now," a comedy written by Stuart Lake around the Army of Occupation. Mel Brown will direct. "He Knew Women," another Paul Leni picture, starring Ivan Moskine and Lya De Putti, adapted from the musical comedy "The Peasant Girl," a Morris Gest production. "Midnight Rose," an all-star picture directed by James Young. "Back to God's Country," a James Oliver Curwood story directed by Irving Willat with a cast headed by Renee Adoree.

"The Four Flusher," a Mel Brown production starring George Lewis, adapted from the Caesar Dunn stage play. "Finders Keepers," another Laura La Plante picture made by Wesley Ruggles. It is from the story by Mary Roberts Rinehart. "Cheating Cheaters," an adaptation of the Max Marcin stage play, made by Edward Laemmle, with a cast headed by Betty Compson, in her first starring vehicle for Universal.

"Alias the Deacon," an adaptation from a Broadway stage play, made by Edward Sloman with Jean Hersholt. John B. Hymer wrote the original play. "The Shield of Honor," an Emory Johnson thriller, dealing with the life and adventures of a police hero. "My Wonderful One," starring Mary Philbin. "The Girl Show," an all-star production directed by William Wyler from an original story by Charles Logue.

"Thanks for the Buggy Ride," a Laura La Plante Jewel, directed by Wesley Ruggles. It is from a story by Byron Morgan. "We Americans," an all-star production from the M. H. Gropper and Max Siegel stage play.

"The Eternal Silence," a Jewel adapted from William McLeod Raine's story, "The Yukon Trail," with Francis X. Bushman and June Marlowe in the lead. Directed by Ernst Laemmle. "Thirteen Washington Square," a Mel Brown production with an all-star cast from the Broadway stage success by Leroy Scott. "The Stolen Lady," an all-star production from a story by William Dudley Pelley. "The Crimson Hour," a Mary Philbin picture, in which she is co-starred with Ivan Moskine, in the European play "Lea Lyon," by I. Brody. "The Irresistible Lover," a Norman Kerry picture, directed by William Beaudine. "The Counsel for the Defense," a picture from the pen of Henry Irving Dodge. Edward Laemmle is the director.

"How to Make Love," an all-star picture which probably will be made by William A. Seiter from a story now being written. "Hot Heels," a new picture from the pen of Gerald Beaumont. Directed by Robert Hill. Also, there will be seven Hoot Gibson Jewels, several of them written by Peter B. Kyne and the others by established Western authors.

Next in order are ten Thrill Feature series, consisting of five features made with Dynamite, the Devil Dog, and five Aviation Stunt pictures made with Al Wilson, the leading air-devil.

The feature program also includes twelve Western features made with two Western stars and with the Universal Ranch Riders.

All varieties of entertainment are offered in Universal's one and two reel subjects. Included are Westerns, specials, serials, newsreels, and comedies. Heading the list are the Universal Junior Jewels. A new series of ten two-reelers, the second series of "The Collegians." A second series of "The Newlyweds and Their Baby," twelve two-reelers made by the Stern Brothers.

Also scheduled is the first 1927-1928 serial, "Blake of Scotland Yard," featuring Hayden Stevenson, and directed by Robert Hill.

There are fifty-two Stern Brothers comedies, four series of 13 each, including the Buster Brown series, from the R. F. Outcault comics, the "Mike and Ike, They Look Alike" series, from Rube Goldberg's celebrated newspaper comic characters; "Keeping Up With the Joneses," from Pop Momand's widely famed comic strip, and "Let George Do It," also adapted from a George McManus comic strip.

A new series of Gump Comedies also will be released, made with Joe Murphy, Fay Tincher and the youngster, from the well-known Sydney Smith cartoons. There will be twelve in this new series, each two reels in length.

Another new two-reel comedy series is the six Octavus Roy Cohen comedies made with Charles Puffy, the fat comedian. In the one-reel comedy field will be 26 Snappy Comedies, 13 of them to be known as Drugstore Cowboy Comedies, and 13 as Harold Highbrow Comedies, featuring Churchill Ross. Likewise 26 Oswald Cartoons, one-reel animated cartoon comedies featuring a new character, Oswald the lucky rabbit, made for Universal by the Winkler Productions, Inc.

The 52 two-reel Westerns will consist of four series of 13 dramas each. The several series are the Northwest Mounted Pictures, featuring Jack Perrin; the Texas Ranger Pictures, featuring Fred Gilman; the Stunt Cowboy Series, featuring Bob Curwood, and the Champion Kid Rider Series, featuring Newton House.

The other four serials are "The Trail of the Tiger," featuring Jack Daugherty, directed by Henry MacRae; "The Scarlet Arrow," featuring Francis X. Bushman, Jr., directed by Ray Taylor; "The Haunted Island," featuring Jack Daugherty, directed by Henry MacRae, and "The Vanishing Rider," featuring William Desmond, directed by Robert Hill.

Finally, Universal will release 104 issues (two a week) of the International Newsreel.

President Joseph P. Kennedy of F. B. O. has secured the signature of George B. Seitz on an F.B.O. contract to direct "The Great Mail Robbery." Peter Milne is now working on the scenario and shooting will start as soon as the script has been completed. The leading role will be played by Theodore Von Eltz while other roles will be portrayed by Holmes Herbert, Jeanne Morgan, DeWitt Jennings and Frank Nelson.

Shadur Promoted to New "U" Supervisory Post

Arthur E. Shadur, Universal studio manager, has been appointed supervisor of a new production, as yet untitled. In accordance with his newly acquired powers, Shadur will select a story, director and cast and will assume full responsibility for the new picture.

"Romance," Conrad Novel, Next Novarro Vehicle

Joseph Conrad's "Romance" will serve as Ramon Novarro's next vehicle for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer as soon as the star has finished work in "Old Heidelberg." Josephine Lovett is now adapting the book to the screen. The story will be produced on an ambitious scale, it is said, with John Robertson at the megaphone.

"The Circus Cyclone" New Tom Mix Film

Having just finished "The Outlaws of Red River," Tom Mix is preparing to start work on his next picture for Fox Films. The story is called "The Circus Cyclone." Jack Jungmeyer has written the continuity. Ben Stoloff will direct the film at the Fox Hollywood studio.

Business Discussions for M. P. T. O. A. Meeting

Constructive Program To Include Talks by Experts, Woodhull Announces

DISCUSSIONS led by experts on presentation, projection and other theatre problems will be featured at the national convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to be held at Columbus, O., June 7, 8 and 9, according to R. F. Woodhull, president.

Mr. Woodhull told a representative of the "News" this week that the program as already outlined would follow the plan of conventions in other industries. Experts in their several fields will be asked to address the convention, their talks to be followed by discussions by the delegates. "The idea is to make this a real business convention," Mr. Woodhull added.

Active preparations, under the direction of Mr. Woodhull, are under way. A large attendance is expected. The change in date will enable Western delegates to take advantage of [illegible]

Mr. Woodhull's election to the presidency, following the resignation of Hiram S. Collins, [illegible] and favor among State leaders, it was announced at national headquarters where reports of letters enthusiastically approving his election by the administrative committee, were made public.

STUDIO BRIEFS

Monte Blue's next picture for Warner Bros. is "The Black Diamond Express" and the actor is now at work on the new vehicle following the completion of "The Brute," soon to be released. Edna Murphy will have the feminine lead in the forthcoming film for which Harvey Gates has written the screen adaptation.

Marietta Milner, imported from Germany by Paramount, will have the chief feminine role in "Drums of the Desert" in which Warner Baxter will enact the role of hero. Arlette Marchall, originally scheduled to do the heroine of the piece, is still working in "Wings." Among others assigned to roles this week were Ford Sterling, Wallace MacDonald, George Irving, Bernard Siegal and Guy Oliver.

Lloyd Bacon will direct "The Heart of Maryland" for Warner Bros. and not Alan Crosland, who was originally programmed to film the story before the end of the current season. Crosland is to direct another, soon to be announced. Dolores Costello's next picture, as yet untitled, is now being cast. Malcolm McGregor, Betty Blythe and Warner Oland will appear in the production. Warner has signed a new director in Archie Mayo, whose first assignment is to be decided upon soon.

Harry Cohn, Columbia's vice-president and general manager, has engaged Fred Mynon to do the scenario for "The Blood Ship." The scenarist will have the cooperation of Hobart Bosworth, star of the production, in adapting this sea story.

One of the principal roles in "The Woman on Trial," in which Pola Negri is being directed by Mauritz Stiller, will be played by Vera Voronina, Russian actress under contract to Paramount.

The Gotham production, "The Woman Who Did Not Care," now being adapted for screening purposes by Marion Orth, is to be directed by Phil Rosen, who is collaborating with Miss Orth on the continuity. He will start casting immediately upon the completion of the screen manuscript.

Kathryn Carver, characterized by Harrison Fisher, the artist, as "the typical American girl," is appearing opposite Adolphe Menjou in his next picture for Paramount. No title has been given the production so far.

Paramount has signed Fred Kohler to play an important role in "Underworld," the film of gangster life which Josef Von Sternberg is now directing. George Bancroft has the principal role, Evelyn Brent plays the girl and Larry Semon contributes the comedy.

Much of the activity on the Warner Bros. Hollywood lot is being concentrated on "The Race Track Tout," the working title of Syd Chaplin's next comedy to be directed by Charles F. Reisner. Helene Costello is one member of the cast and the others are now being selected. "The Climbers," Irene Rich's newest picture, is progressing toward completion under the direction of Paul L. Stein. Kathleen Key was the latest addition to the list of players.

Ivan Petrovitch, Serbian actor discovered by Rex Ingram abroad and featured by him in "The Garden of Allah," will be farmed out to a French company producing "Tosca" at the Ingram studio at Nice as soon as the director has finished with him in "The Garden of Allah," now being made in location in Africa and France. The picture will be finished before June 1st and will be shipped to New York from the French Riviera after being edited and cut abroad. This is the fourth Ingram production to be made abroad.

"Magic Flame" Title of Banky-Colman Vehicle

Samuel Golwyn has chosen "The Magic Flame" as the definite title of his newest production co-featuring Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky, based on Rudolph Lothar's play, "King Harlequin," which Henry King has been directing in Culver City. "United Artists will release "The Magic Flame."

Several American M. P. Concerns in Shanghai

A number of American motion picture concerns are located in Shanghai, China, which, with Nanking in the same province, is the center of revolutionary and communistic disturbances, it is indicated by unofficial but authentic trade reports received in Washington, D.C.

Among the concerns in the disturbed district, it is shown, are branches of the Eastman Kodak Company, the Fox Film Corporation and the Universal Pictures Corporation. There is also in Shanghai the Odeon Theatre, Inc., and the Peacock Motion Picture Corporation.

"U" Plans Modern House in Uptown, Kansas City

Following its acquisition of the Uptown Theatre in Kansas City, Universal plans to make the house one of the most modern in the city. The house is now under construction at Valentine Road and Broadway. Universal bought both the freehold interest and the theatre property proper and a 20-year lease which was made to the Valentine Amusement late last year. Universal will spend $500,000 on the house, in addition to what is now being spent on it and will make the Uptown its first-run house in Kansas City.

John Krafft Signs Long Term DeMille Contract

The Cecil B. DeMille Company has renewed its long term contract with John Krafft, title writer. Krafft has had over seven years' experience in the titling field and has titled fifteen pictures during the twelve months he has been associated with DeMille. He is now titling "Turkish Delight," co-featuring Julia Faye and Rudolph Schildkraut.

Establishes Direct Contact With Foreign Papers

FOURTEEN million people in the United States and Canada, the majority of whom cannot read English, are reached by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer through the establishment of a direct contact bureau with the foreign-speaking newspapers and periodicals in the United States and Canada. The publicity departments at the Culver City studio and the home office in New York jointly participate in the service. A net work of contacts through the whole of North America has been established, it is said.

Most of the men employed by the government in operating a special publicity bureau during the war are now engaged in this particular field as part of the M-G-M national publicity, it is said.

Gliese, Ufa ex-Director, Signed by De Mille

ROCHUS GLIESE, former director with Ufa, has affixed his signature on the dotted line of a long-term contract with Cecil B. De Mille. His first production has not been decided upon, but it is understood that he will handle one of the next pictures to go into production at the De Mille plant. While with Ufa, Gliese served as art director for Lubitsch and Murnau. He did the settings for "Sunrise."

Theatre Included in Boston Development Project

A new theatre, to be one of the largest in Boston, is included in a development project which is now pending before the State Department of Public Safety for final approval. The project includes a very large development at the North Station, Boston, including the erection of a new North Terminal Station, hotel, and extensive mercantile development through construction of new streets and widening of some of the present streets. The proposed theatre is part of the project, which is already financed. Frank G. Barrows heads the group of Boston financiers backing the project.

Burr Purchases More Stories for Hines

Two orginal stories, "The Horse Doctor" and "Lucky Day," by Joe Blutz and Harry Fuhr, have been purchased for future use for Johnny Hines by C. C. Burr, who has the two stories registered at the Will Hays office. No definite statement has been made as to when these two stories will be converted into pictures. Hines is now doing preparatory work before applying the make-up for "White Pants Willie," his next comedy for First National.

Promotions in First Nat'l's Canadian Sales Force

Promotions affecting the Canadian Division of First National's sales organization were announced this week by Ned E. Depinet, general sales manager. Advancing as supervisor of Western Canada, James I. Foy, manager of the Toronto exchange, fills the position vacated when R. S. Bell succeeded W. A. Bach as Canadian district manager. Harry Paynter, salesman at Toronto, succeeds Mr. Foy as manager of the Toronto branch.

Billie Dove to Play Title Role in "The Stolen Bride"

Billie Dove is to play the title role in "The Stolen Bride," as her first stellar vehicle for First National which will also serve as the first American work of Alexander Korda, European director under contract to First National. Lloyd Hughes has been assigned the leading male role opposite Miss Dove in "The Stolen Bride," production on which has just been started.

Warner Oland Signs Warner Bros. Contract

Warner Bros. has signed Warner Oland to a long term contract by the terms of which he will be seen hereafter exclusively in Warner productions. He will play roles of featured importance—his first to be in the next Dolores Costello picture.

Vitaphone Heard at Capitol, St. Paul

St. Paul heard the Vitaphone for the first time when a performance of the contrivance was given at the Capitol Theatre, Saturday, March 26, before a large audience. As no settlement has been reached in the controversy between the Minneapolis operators' union and the Northwest M.P.T.O. over the number of men who will be employed in the operation of the device, the Vitaphone equipment in the State Theatre, Minneapolis, must remain idle. It is possible that the State will be able to show the Vitaphone before the end of Lent. The St. Paul operators' union and the M.-P.T.O., by agreeing on two men, made it possible for the Vitaphone to be shown at the Capitol.

Belsize, New Famous Canadian House, N. Toronto

The latest link in the Canadian theatre chain of Famous Players Canadian Corp., Toronto, is the Belsize Theatre at Mount Pleasant Road and Belsize Drive, North Toronto, a suburban house costing $160,000, and seating 1,000, which was formally opened March 24. Mayor Thomas Foster of Toronto, Controller Wemp and Ald. Beamish were among the notables who took part in the ceremonies.

The Belsize was built by George W. Hunt and Ronald McClelland of Toronto, with Murray Brown as architect. The manager is Harold Hitchinson.

Dix to Begin Active Work on West Coast

Richard Dix, just arrived in Hollywood, will be the first of the Eastern Paramount studio stars to start working on the West Coast. His next film, as yet untitled, was written by Ray Harris and Sam Mints of the Eastern studio's scenario staff. It will be directed by Malcolm St. Clair with Ralph Block as editor-in-chief of the production. Mary Brian has been chosen as Dix's leading lady.

Fox Net Earnings $5.14 on Stock in 9 Months

NET income of $2,572,936 after taxes and charges are deducted is reported by Fox Film Corporation for the nine months ended September 30, 1926, or $5.14 a share on the half million shares of Class A and B stock outstanding. Total assets are listed at $31,624,319, current assets, $13,703,722, current liabilities, $4,869,160, land, buildings and equipment, $12,958,383. The investments in West Coast Theatres, Inc., are placed at $3,085,820.

First Nat'l and College Humor Launch Tests

ALL plans pertaining to the launching of the First National-College Humor screen test campaign by means of which ten young men will be selected from 33 or more leading colleges throughout the United States as possible screen material, have been completed. John McCormick, who is behind the venture, will have the assistance of John Leroy Johnston and a corps of assistants who will visit the colleges selected and test the entrants, the last test to take place about May 18. There will be two units from the studio, one to cover the Eastern colleges, the other to cover those in the West.

First National guarantees each man selected 8 weeks of work at $50 per week and gratis transportation from his college to Burbank and return. If he is taken up after the expiration of the trial option his wages will be scaled on a graduating basis.

Bill Cody Starts Another Western for Pathe

Bill Cody, Pathe Western star, has started "Out of the Dust," a new Western for Pathe release at the California studios. Alvin J. Neitz is directing the Cody vehicle, assisted by Joseph Murphy. H. Wenstrom and Dave Smith are at the cameras with W. S. Johnson in charge of the lighting. The title "Out of the Dust" will probably be changed owing to its similarity to another recently-made film. The story is an original by Melville Shayer, with continuity by L. V. Jefferson.

Audience Sees Pre-View of "Broadway Nights"

"Broadway Nights," Robert Kane's recent production for First National, was previewed by the audience attending the showing of the feature on Saturday last at the Ritz Theatre in Staten Island, a one night house. The "Broadway Nights" pre-view was staged in conjunction with an automobile show which the Staten Island Advance, a newspaper, was sponsoring. Due to Kane's initiative in supplying the automobile show with several screen stars, the "Advance" ballyhooed free of charge the Ritz's showing of the Kane production.

Metropolitan Signs Richard Crawford to Contract

Richard Crawford, Joan Crawford's younger brother, has been signed by Metropolitan Pictures to a long-term contract which will groom him for stellar roles. He first came to the attention of Metropolitan officials when he was cast for a small role in "The Night Bride."

Universal Changes "Yukon Trail" to "Eternal Silence"

William McLeod Raine's "The Yukon Trail," which Universal is producing, has had a change of title and will hereafter be called "The Eternal Silence." Edward Laemmle has been preparing for the production for the last six months or so.

Southern Vitaphone Show

Special Demonstration at Chattanooga April 7-8-9 For Benefit of Exhibitors and Public

A SPECIAL three-day [illegible] of Vitaphone subjects will be given at the Municipal Memorial Auditorium in Chattanooga, Tenn., each afternoon and evening of April 7, 8, and 9 as the result of a three-cornered cooperative arrangement between the Western Electric Company, the Vitaphone Corporation and Milton B. Ochs, owner of the Chattanooga Times.

The public will thus be given an opportunity to see and hear the new device and, through a blanket agreement with the management of the Auditorium, the Western Electric Company has arranged to have a choice block of seats set aside at each performance for the free use of near-by exhibitors who may care to hear the device. The program will be made up of:

Will Hays—President of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, welcomes Vitaphone in an address. (8 minutes)

New York Philharmonic Orchestra 107 men, Henry Hadley, conducting the "Tannhauser" Overture (with film). (10 minutes)

Elsie Janis—Vaudeville act—war-time setting showing Miss Janis entertaining American, English and French soldiers behind the lines.

Songs: "When Yankee Doodle Learns to Parley Vous Francais," "Madelon," "In the Army," "Goodbye-ee." Assisted by [illegible] (10 minutes).

[illegible] A. Watson, Co-Author of Alexander Graham Bell, and the first boy to hear words spoken over a telephone, describes the dramatic events incident to the invention of the telephone. (20 minutes).

Roy Smeck—Wizard of the Strings in "His Pastimes"—popular solos on Hawaiian guitar and ukulele. (10 minutes).

Address—C. W. Barrell, Director of Motion Picture Bureau, Western Electric Company, "The Audible Motion Picture —A New Art." (20 minutes).

Mischa Elman—Celebrated concert violinist. Solos: "Humoresque" by Dvorak; "Gavotte" by [illegible] (8 minutes).

George Jessel—Comedy [illegible] solo: "At Peace with the World." (10 minutes).

Mary Lewis—Soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company. Scene—"Way Down South" depicting piazza and garden of a Southern mansion. Songs: "Swing Along Sue," "Dixie," and "Carry Me Back to Old Virginny," with chorus of male voices. (10 minutes).

Giovanni Martinelli—Leading tenor of the Metropolitan Opera Company. Solo from the opera "Pagliacci" by Leoncavallo,—"Vesti la Giubba." (6 minutes).

Britain Deal for Columbia

F. B. O., Ltd., H. and W., Ltd., Sign for Handling of Firm's Product Exclusively Under Quota

COLUMBIA PICTURES obtains a strategic position in the forthcoming battle for the inclusion of American-made pictures under Great Britain's quota arrangement as a result of the conclusion of negotiations with Film Booking Offices, Ltd. (1919), which assures Columbia of 100 per cent distribution in the British market. F. A. Enders, managing director of F.B.O., Ltd., and Joe Brandt, president of Columbia, arranged the deal whereby the contracts for the continuation of the Columbia franchise in England was renewed and H. and W., Ltd., Columbia's agent on the Continent, was maintained. The arrangements entered into with Mr. Enders' concern, insure, a statement for Columbia reads, that F.B.O., Ltd., will handle Columbia pictures exclusively in the British market. F.B.O., Ltd.'s statistics on the returns received on Columbia product for the present season and which Mr. Enders brought with him from abroad predicted the arrangements between Messrs. Brandt and Enders. All of the Columbia films distributed on an individual basis instead of the block booking methods of disposal did exceptionally well, it is said.

Mr. Enders announced that with regard to the legislation about to be passed in England requiring the inclusion of a number of home-made films in the program of every distributing company, his company, F. B. O., Ltd. (1919) has arranged for the production of the necessary quota of pictures. While on the Coast he secured options on the services of several American players, with the intention of bringing them to England to appear as co-stars with English players in F. B. O., Ltd., productions. Though Mr. Enders did not say whether the direction of the films would be entrusted to American or British hands, it is known that British players and technical help will predominate in the making of each British film, with the exception of one American star in each production.

While in this country Mr. Enders visited Jack and Harry Cohn in Hollywood to confer and to obtain information on Columbia's plans for next season. Mr. Enders returned to England on the S. S. Aquitania.

Werner to Confer with Laemmle on "Uncle Tom"

David C. Werner, [illegible] advisor for Universal Pictures, has been summoned to Los Angeles by Carl Laemmle with whom he will confer on plans being developed for the handling of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" in legitimate and other theatres throughout the country. Details of Universal's plans for the road showing of their special will not be made public until after Werner has returned to the East.

Reports from Key Cities

Brief Reviews of Box Office Conditions at Leading Theatres About the Country

New York City

BUSINESS on Broadway was pretty well recovered last week from its slump of the previous seven days, and many of the houses showed substantial gains in receipts. The outstanding item of interest, of course, is still the Roxy and the crowds are flocking to see the house.

Opinions and stories differ on the gross taken in by the Roxy's second week of operation. Probably it was not far from $105,000, although claims for a substantially higher figure are being made. "The Love of Sunya" was the feature.

The Paramount enjoyed a very comfortable week after a slump during the previous period, going well over $70,000 on "Evening Clothes."

The second week of "The Beloved Rogue" at the Strand was thoroughly successful, although the picture did not go into the third week understood to have been expected of it when it opened.

Norma Shearer, who is always popular at the Capitol, put the house well above $50,000 with "The Demi-Bride," which seemed to please.

"The Big Parade" showed some gain last week, as did "What Price Glory." "The Rough Riders" started off very well, and "Old Ironsides" showed improvement. The Vitaphone shows were off a little, while "Metropolis" at the Rialto showed excellent strength, holding to a figure which promises a run.

The Colony's return to the multiple show policy proved disappointing, which is natural after a term as a two-a-day house.

Chicago

ANOTHER week of normal business was the report of both outlying and loop theatres in Chicago last week, continued favorable weather and some good pictures offsetting the Lenten handicap.

At the Chicago Theatre only an average business was done with "The Scarlet Letter," while at the Oriental Paul Ash and "Blind Alleys" combined did a big business.

McVickers got away to a good start with its extended run of "Sorrows of Satan."

Lubliner & Trinz, Senate and Harding both were playing "The Kid Brother," and box office reports were considered somewhat disappointing for a Lloyd feature, being only slightly above normal.

The Uptown Theatre with "Tell It to the Marines" did better than average business and on the Southside with "Orchids and Ermine" and an elaborate Bennie Kreuger show the Tivoli did a big business.

The Granada reports better than average business with "Getting Gertie's Garter," and a big stage show.

In the smaller neighborhood houses business was somewhat spotty, some having had a good week, while others complained of poor business.

St. Louis

THE first-run houses enjoyed from fair to good business during the week ended on March 25, but the patronage of the neighborhood shows was far below what it should be, even considering the fact that many people are observing the Lenten season. This is largely due to the fact that many are without employment or working part time.

At the Ambassador Colleen Moore occupied the screen in "Orchids and Ermine" and aided by the Publix unit "Opera Versus Jazz" pulled in her share of the shekels for the week.

Over at Loew's State Theatre on Washington Avenue the chief screen attraction was "The Red Mill," and business was good, considering general conditions. Another film on the program was the comedy, "Are Brunettes Safe?" in which Charlie Chase was starred.

The Missouri had a good week with "Evening Clothes" as the big screen offering. The usual program of song, dance and orchestral offerings was also included.

Across the street at the Grand Central business might be classified as fair to middling. On the screen was seen Patsy Ruth Miller in "What Every Girl Should Know." Miss Miller has a very large following in St. Louis and her fans and fanettes were out in force to see her work.

The St. Louis Theatre, Grand Boulevard at Morgan Street, continued to pull in the crowds. For the week the screen offering was Madge Bellamy in "Ankles Preferred." Much of this house's good business for the week was due to the Variety Show that Ned Wayburn put on. Wayburn also appeared in person Wednesday and Thursday.

Philadelphia

IN spite of the much-heralded Lenten slump, business has held up remarkably well in the downtown first-run houses last week. This is especially true of the recently opened Fox Locust Theatre, where "What Price Glory" is playing to turn-away business. House records have been broken at the Aldine, a Stanley road-show house, with John Barrymore in "Don Juan" with Vitaphone music.

"McFadden's Flats" flanked by some good presentation acts, had a fair week at the Stanley. Wallace Beery in "Casey at the Bat" at the Stanton, did not do so well, the title failing to attract matinee audiences, which are largely governed by titles. The Fox, with "Ankles Preferred," and a fair presentation program, did a mediocre business, not up to some of the preceding weeks. The Arcadia and the Karlton, the former with "Orchids and Ermine," and the latter with "A Kiss in a Taxi," ran along to about average business. "Tell It to the Marines" switched from the Stanton to the Palace, continued its success there.

Minneapolis

ANOTHER week of fine spring weather found business booming at many of the picture theatres in Minneapolis last week.

"What Price Glory" stayed over for a second week at the Metropolitan and the film did a very good week's business, although it is likely that "Tell It to the Marines," which opened at the Strand Theatre, proved a strong counter attraction. This latter picture showed to large crowds at the Strand and was held over for a second week; the fact that things were popping in China during the week, and that the local papers were filled with references to the marines, undoubtedly helped to jam the house.

At the State Adolphe Menjou in "Blonde or Brunette" gave that theatre one of the busiest weeks it has experienced for a long time, although the film was by no means the entire attraction. Dayton's semi-annual style show was staged in conjunction with the photoplay, and with 40 models and a number of song and dance acts included on the bill, it was not a very difficult task to draw in the crowds.

Reginald Denny proved a bit disappointing in "The Cheerful Fraud" at the Garrick. The business was not quite up to standard, although "Tell It to the Marines," located a few doors away, may have been responsible for this. Mae Murray in "Altars of Desire" proved a popular attraction at the Lyric.

Outlying houses reported a fairly lively week for the ticket-sellers. "It" went over big at the Loring, and Richard Dix in "Paradise for Two" proved a good drawing card. The Bainbridge stock company, by inaugurating its visiting star season at the Shubert, provided some real competition, offering Edith Taliaferro in "Pygmalion" and drawing fine houses all week.

San Francisco

THE San Francisco motion picture houses did very well last week, for two reasons. One being because the weather was favorable and the other being because of favorable pictures. "Casey at the Bat," at the St. Francis, did an excellent business, not only because of the picture, but also because the papers played up the poem, "Casey at the Bat," that was written in San Francisco forty years ago. Because of its success, "Casey at the Bat" has been held over. "The Scarlet Letter," shown at the Imperial, attracted attention because of the effective advertising in the windows and the book stores showed the book.

"After Six Days," shown at the Rivoli at advanced prices, did not do as well as expected, some think because it was not well enough advertised. The Granada did well with "The Mysterious Rider," part of the crowd being caused by the farewell party of Eddie Peabody. "The Love Thrill" at the California attracted the average crowd and more going because weather conditions permitted. Rube Wolfe attracted many to the Loew's Warfield, as did the Fanchon & Marco presentation of "Golf Ideas," as this was the beginning of the golf season. The picture "Orchids and Ermine" was considered fair.

"Flying High" at the Union Square did well and the Golden Gate reports good business with "Nobody's Widow," although the main reason for success was the few vaudeville acts that were high class. The Cameo reports good business with "Hunting Big Game in Africa," and the appearance of one on the stage who was with the crowd in Africa was popular. The residential houses also did well. The Coliseum led in the Richmond district with "The Flaming Forest" and Max Dolin. Young Richardson manages this house.

Kansas City

THE fact that Kansas City experienced snow, rain, sleet and sunshine all in the brief period of ten minutes the first day of last week, with the remaining days keeping apace, may be offered as reason aplenty for an attendance slightly under the usual mark. There was one exception, however. That was the Liberty, which provided the unusual novelty of a manager personally leasing the theatre for the week. The house, which has been leased by United Artists and was to have been closed this week for repairs, was leased by Samuel Carver, manager, who ran Clara Bow in "Free to Love," an old picture, but new to Kansas City. The week's attendance was good.

At The Newman "Evening Clothes" did a steady business, but not what it would have done under better weather conditions. "Casey at the Bat," at the Royal, which had only a fair week, is expected to do much better on its second week, it having been held over another week. At the Pantages Theatre, "Ankles Preferred" did an average business, while the same can be said of "The Sea Tiger" at the Mainstreet Theatre. "For Alimony Only" at the Globe Theatre played to a week's attendance slightly less than the average.

Atlanta

THE outstanding successes of last week were "Tell It to the Marines" at Loew's Grand to big attendance and "Casey at the Bat," which scored strongly at the Howard with one of the best weeks the house has experienced recently. "The Love of Sunya" drew divided opinions and very good business at the Metropolitan, while the Rialto's double program of "The Adorable Deceiver" and "The Gorilla Hunt" pleased emphatically but did not develop great drawing strength.

"The Nervous Wreck" was fairly well received at Keith's Georgia, where a good vaudeville bill put the house over to a nice showing.

The Tudor, featuring Westerns and action pictures on a split-week policy, fared badly on "Red Clay" and a little better on "The Denver Dude." The Cameo, second-run downtown house with three weekly changes, did not score conspicuously, but the New Alamo, popular small house in the shopping section, played "Beyond the Rocks," reissue, three days to record business and held it over for a fourth day, Thursday.

Weather was snappy all week, with rain Monday and Tuesday. Last four days ideal.

Cleveland

EXTRA strong attractions, with added exploitation and drawing numbers proved adequate competition to the Lenten season. All of the downtown theatres did exceptional business. But they all went after it hard.

"Slide, Kelly, Slide" literally packed 'em in at the Stillman. Matinees were crowded at the evening performances. It is being continued.

"It" taxed the capacity of the big Allen Theatre. That it did not establish any new records is due to Lent and the spring social and club activities. "Casey at the Bat" didn't break a record but it came near to the record at the Cameo.

"The Sea Tiger" came up to expectations at the State. "One Increasing Purpose" was rather disappointing from the box office angle at Keith's Palace. Reade's Hippodrome drew big business with "The Mystery Club" the first half of the week, and "The Price of Honor" the last half of the week.

Keith's East 105th Street Theatre is feeling a depression. "The Mystery Club" pulled only moderately well. The Circle Theatre, playing "The Winning of Barbara Worth" second run with Vitaphone specialty attractions, maintained the average standard of the house. And business was moderately good at the Park, where "Heaven and Earth" was surrounded by an exceptionally strong musical program. The neighborhood houses in general report business way off normal, but about average of last year's Lenten business.

Milwaukee

MILWAUKEE theatres, in spite of the rain and snow storms over the week end and early part of last week, and in spite of or because of the home show at the Auditorium, which draws thousands daily, found at the close of the week that active exploitation and good pictures had netted them a very favorable week.

"The Fourth Commandment," at the Alhambra with an appropriate presentation, introduced by widespread advertising, drew very well. "Stepping Along," at the Merrill, helped by a bit of amusing exploitation proved exceedingly popular.

The Wisconsin had its annual "Taka Chance" week, program unannounced. "An Affair of the Follies" was the unheralded photoplay. An elaborate presentation and an usher-guessing contest completed the bill. "Casey at the Bat" held over for its second week at the Strand just missed living up to its first week's popularity. "The Lunatic at Large," at the Garden, drew an excellent patronage. "Fighting Love" made a pleasing addition to the Orpheum bill, while "Tell It to the Marines" proved the drawing card at the Miller.

Business in the neighborhood houses was a bit below par during the week but proved more lively as the week end drew near. "The Silent Lover" at the Milwaukee was well attended. "Hotel Imperial," showing at both Modjeska and Tower, proved fairly popular. The Venetian continued to draw crowds to view its atmopsheric interior and also to see "The Cheerful Fraud."

Seattle

JOHN HAMRICK's Blue Mouse Theatre, in this city, last week presented motion picture fans of the Northwest with the premiere showings of "Don Juan" and the Vitaphone, and indications based on the opening two days predict a tremendous success for the venture in this territory. In place of the former 25-cent admission policy, the Blue Mouse now gets 50 cents and 75 cents, offering six shows daily. The same policy, announced Mr. Hamrick, will begin at his Blue Mouse Theatre in Portland next week. "Don Juan" is expected to play at least three weeks in this city, to be followed by "The Better 'Ole" and a second Vitaphone program.

Chilly, wet weather and a general slump in retail business throughout the Northwest [illegible] week, and box office [illegible] reached by "Orchids and Ermine" at the Fifth Avenue Theatre, aided by a prologue [illegible] leen Moore picture to a considerable extent.

At the United Artists Theatre, "The Fire Brigade" failed miserably to attract business, opening to small houses over the week end and then gradually dying. The picture, originally scheduled to run at least two weeks, was taken off after seven days and hurriedly replaced by "McFadden's Flats."

The Coliseum Theatre did a pleasing business with "The Show," although this Gilbert Vehicle did not meet with the popular approval of some of the past pictures that have featured this star.

Hamrick's Egyptian Theatre in the University district continued to do a remarkable business on a 35-cent second-run policy. The week was divided between "We're in the Navy Now" and "Stella Dallas" and both pictures attracted large houses, despite their previous big first runs.

At Universal's Columbia Theatre, Douglas McLean in "Let It Rain" played to average houses. This is the first Famous Players' picture to play the Columbia in many seasons, a fact which was widely commented on by audiences.

Albany

ALTHOUGH the week opened with weather conditions prevailing that made inroads in the attendance at practically all of the motion picture theatres in this city, conditions became more favorable on Tuesday with the result that the week found excellent business at all of the downtown houses and a majority of the neighborhood houses.

At the Mark Strand, the opening of the Vitaphone brought better than the usual crowds on Monday and by the latter part of the week record breaking attendance characterized the house. The picture shown was "Orchids and Ermine."

At the Mark Ritz, for the first half of the week, only fair business was done with "The Gay Old Bird," while "The Magic Garden" during the last half of the week brought better business to this theatre. At the Leland, also a downtown house, "The Understanding Heart," running for the week, played to capacity business each night with crowds generally standing for the second show. Thus far the business during Lent has run far ahead of last year.

Proctor's Grand Theatre is planning to stage another personal appearance of a motion picture star in the near future, following the one of a week or so ago, when Bert Lytell, in person, brought the biggest crowds in many months. The fact that the Capitol Theatre, which has been playing road shows, goes into stock on April 5th will no doubt contribtue additional busjness to the motion picture houses. A survey of the neighborhood houses for the week showed that there had been good business in nearly all of these.

New Orleans

THE combination of excellent weather and substantial advertising and exploitation on the part of the downtown houses brought out above the average attendance last week. Patrons packed Loew's State at almost every show during the week to see

Jackie Coogan in "Johnny Get Your Hair Cut."

At the Saenger, Gloria Swanson in "Sunya" played to exceptionally large houses, the picture having a strong feminine appeal. "An Affair of the Follies" proved a pleasing screen feature at Saenger's Strand, though the house did not have one of its usual big weeks. The Liberty Theatre did a fine business with "Everybody's Acting," starring pretty Betty Bronson. "The Fire Brigade" continues to draw. The Trianon had one of the biggest weeks this year during the showing of this screen epic with Charles Ray and May McAvoy.

Business was slow at the Globe Theatre, which played "It" with Clara Bow and Antonio Moreno. The Tudor Theatre drew a large patronage with the racing film, "The Thoroughbred." Racing is at its height in New Orleans and this is one of the city's most popular sports. The Coogan film at Loew's State also deals with this subject.

New Orleans neighborhood theatres report a slight decline in business. New Orleans is a large Catholic city and managers attribute the drop in attendance to the Lenten season.

Baltimore

THREE houses in Baltimore ran up the scale with big business during the week beginning Monday, March 21. Keith's Hippodrome, with Johnny Hines, in "'Stepping Along," and five acts of family vaudeville, topped the list with big business all through the week while at Loew's Century "Sorrows of Satan" and the Russian Choir did big business and "It," with Clara Bow, pulled them in very strong during its second week at Loew's Valencia.

"Stranded in Paris" did not prove a particularly strong drawing card at the Rivoli but business held up pretty good and opinions were divided regarding the humorous qualities of "Getting Gertie's Garter," with Marie Prevost, at the New Theatre, where it went over good but was not a howling success.

Rin-Tin-Tin did not draw big houses at Warner's Metropolitan in "Hills of Kentucky," but there was good patronage throughout the week with Vitaphone attractions on the program.

"Tarzan and the Golden Lion," shown with five acts of family vaudeville at the Garden, went over all right but the Embassy with its split-week policy did very poor all week with "Exit Smiling" and "Ladies of Leisure." At Ford's Theatre, a legitimate house, "Beau Geste" did all right during its third week at $1.50 top.

Central Pennsylvania

CRISP and mostly clear weather during the week stimulated attendance at the Harrisburg picture theatres, in spite of the fact that the Lenten season is still causing many patrons to stay at home.

Capitalizing on the interest of the baseball fans in the near approach of the league season, Manager Charley Jones reports excellent box office receipts from "Casey at the Bat," featuring Wallace Beery, in the Victoria.

The pulling power of Milton Sills, a Harrisburg favorite, in "Paradise," brought good business for the week to the Colonial. At Loew's Regent the feature attraction was Gloria Swanson in "The Love of Sunya," with the personal appearance of David Rubinoff, the violinist, in a return engagement, as an added attraction. There was normal attendance at this theatre throughout the week.

As a counter attraction to the movie, the Morgan Wallace Players opened in stock at the Majestic, with six night performances and three matinees.

Indianapolis

ONLY a slight drop in movie business was expected to result from the opening of the stock season at English's this week by the Berkell players. Colleen Moore in "Orchids and Ermine" and the Vitaphone at the Circle were the attractions on the opposite side of Monument Circle.

Business in first-run houses was very good last week, with "Don Juan" at the Circle leading the receipts at downtown houses. The Vitaphone has swelled Circle attendance the past few weeks, despite the omission of the regular orchestra. The orchestra conducted by Stolarevsky was back in the pit this week.

Charlie Davis and his gang in "Ride 'Em, Cowboy" held business at normal last week at the Ohio with the film, "Afraid to Love." Davis' orchestra draws considerable of the Ohio business. Showing this week was "Slide, Kelly, Slide," which did a fair business.

Plastering of posters all over town and co-operation of the fire department boosted business of "The Fire Brigade" at the Apollo.

Neighborhood business was reported normal.

Salt Lake City

BUSINESS downtown in the Salt Lake first-run theatres was fairly good as a whole last week.

"A Kiss in a Taxi" was not quite up to par in creating enthusiasm at the Paramount Empress. "Blonde or Brunette" did well at the Victory, as did "Sunny Side Up" at the Gem, the latter picture having received quite a bit of publicity and exploitation. "Ladies at Play" went over fairly good at the American, in addition to the Vitaphone offering.

"Slide, Kelly, Slide" was the feature picture at the Pantages, with "Stage Madness" being shown at the Orpheum in connection with their vaudeville programs. A second showing of "The Scarlet Letter" and an added attraction billed as "Sunbonnet Belles and Beaux" was offered at the Kinema.

Neighborhood business picks up intermittently, but is hampered by the large number of ward chapel houses here offering weekly picture performances. The Mission Theatre, a neighborhood house, did fairly well with "Summer Bachelors," it is reported.

Des Moines

CASEY AT THE BAT," playing at the Des Moines Theatre, did a very good week and was a good drawing card. It is a picture that sells itself.

"Blind Alleys" at the Capitol is one of the most interesting things Thomas Meighan has done in some time. Mr. Meighan had been falling off a bit here and good pictures were needed to keep his rating up.

"Sensation Seekers" at the Strand did very well for a half-week. Billie Dove is getting a following of her own. "An Affair of the Follies," recently shown, did much to add to her popularity.

Ottawa

EXHIBITORS in Ottawa, the Canadian capital, had no complaint to make regarding business during the week of March 21. With the festive observance of Mi-Careme (Mid-Lent), the attendance of French-Canadians at various theatres was particularly pronounced but there were excellent crowds generally throughout the week.

"Don Juan" was the outstanding attraction, this being presented at the Regent Theatre to full houses afternoon and night. "Nobody's Widow," a picture in lighter vein, was a feature that pleased at the B. F. Keith's Theatre. Corinne Griffith has a large following in Ottawa and there was substantial patronage all week for her "Three Hours" at the Center Theatre. "The Third Degree" was fair at the Imperial Theatre. "Beverly of Graustark" packed them in at the Fern Theatre for second run.

Tampa

LAST week opened with beautiful weather, but Tuesday it rained, followed by two days of real chilly weather which put a crimp into the box office receipts. The Tampa had "The Winning of Barbara Worth" the first four days, which pulled big for the first two days, but the bad weather hurt business the last two. For the last half "The Demi-Bride" was the attraction and it did well. Norma Shearer and Lew Cody are both well liked in Tampa.

At the Strand "The Understanding Heart" did good on Sunday and Monday. "The Sea Tiger" was the attraction the next three days and opened to only fair business Tuesday, caused by the rain, but Wednesday saw the crowds coming better and it finished up with an excellent day on Thursday. "Easy Money" did average business the last two days.

The Victory brought back two pictures this week that had been very successful here on their first showing. "The Phantom of the Opera" failed to arrive for the matinee opening on Sunday and they were forced to offer a substitute. This hurt the matinee business, but the Phantom arrived in time for the evening show and the picture pulled very well. The other feature was "The Thief of Bagdad" and it did as well as could be expected for a second showing.

The Franklin kept its receipts up to the mark with "Wolf Hunting," "Pals in Paradise" and "When a Dog Loves," though they, too, felt the effect of the inclement weather.

Oklahoma City

THE Criterion Theatre won large audiences all last week with their double-header, "Blonde and Brunette" and a style show staged in conjunction with one of Oklahoma City's best woman's wear stores. Good sized ads in the daily papers were carried throughout its run.

At the Empress "Venus of Venice" held the screen all week, and managed to bring in the uniformly good sized crowds in spite of keen competition from the other pitcure houses.

"A Little Journey" seemed to please fair sized audiences the first half of the week at the Capitol and was succeeded by a four-day return run of "The Big Parade" the last of the week.

"Sensation Seekers" started a successful week for the Liberty Theatre and gave way in mid-week to Tom Mix in "The Canyon of Light." Mix seems to be a good card for any week end at the Liberty.

Animated score board ballyhoo for "Slide, Kelly, Slide" (M-G-M), at Loew's State, Los Angeles

1,500 Newsies formed a parade and marched to the theatre

The Los Angeles Express newsboys in front of Loew's State just before the show

NEWSIES ROOT FOR "SLIDE, KELLY, SLIDE"

ONE of the biggest newsboy parties given at a picture theatre was staged in Los Angeles recently at Loew's State Theatre in connection with the showing of "Slide, Kelly, Slide." The affair was for the benefit of fifteen hundred newsies comprising the complete carrier system of the Los Angeles "Evening Express."

Outside on top of each of the Loew's State marquees, was a mammoth world series baseball score board, being operated by a man in baseball uniform. Each board was presenting the last inning of the Yank-Cardinals world series game. And each was heavily placarded with signs of "Slide, Kelly, Slide."

The effect of these score boards was such that traffic cops were repeatedly forced to clear the way for pedestrians.

Spectacular Exploitation for "Convoy"

Navy Escort and Plane Flight Feature Hartford Campaign

"CONVOY" sailed into the port of Hartford, Conn., on Saturday, March 19th, supported by the combined forces of the United States Army and Navy and heralded with a flourish and roar that literally set the good people of Hartford by their heels.

The big show just referred to was the initial feature of the spectacular campaign sponsored by First National Pictures and the Strand Theatre, Hartford, for the national premiere of "Convoy." The campaign plans were laid several weeks ago by Allan Glenn, manager of First National's Exploitation Department, and Henry Needles, General Manager of the Hoffman Theatrical Enterprises, operators of the Strand Theatre, Hartford. First National's Exploiteers, Walter Lind and L. R. Brager, working under the supervision of Mr. Glenn, constituted the gun-crew of "Convoy."

The opening broadside consisted of a teaser ad campaign, which was started a week ahead of the showing.

The local daily press was contacted by Wilbur Morse, Robert Kane's publicity representative.

The sixteen-inch gun of the campaign was fired on the day preceding the opening, with the arrival of the "Convoy" print in the custody of Joseph Boyle, director of the production. Official greetings were extended to Mr. Boyle and his party at the railroad station by Lieutenant MacGregor, commanding the 19th Fleet Division. Mr. Boyle turned over the "Convoy" print to two Chief Petty Officers of the United States Navy, in side arms, carrying signed orders to convey "Convoy" to the Strand Theatre. Mr. Boyle and his party were escorted to automobiles in the line of marchers, the "Convoy" print was deposited in an armored car and the Naval guard, augmented by four officers from the local police force, and with a blare of trumpets the procession got under way.

The next big salvo was fired on the evening of the 19th, with the staging of one of the most spectacular aeroplane night flights. An Army plane was reconstructed to permit the conveyance of a large electric sign underneath the lower wing of the plane. In the framework of this sign were fastened electrically illuminated letters, each seven feet in height, and forming the word "Convoy." At seven-thirty Lieutenant C. A. Dixon of the U. S. Army and Sergeant William Arnold took off in the plane from Brainard Field and headed for a point above the heart of the city. Starting about a quarter of eight o'clock, at a time when Hartford's evening traffic is just beginning to reach its point of maximum congestion, the aerial fire-works began. The plane by this time had attained a height of about 6,000 feet. Suddenly the attention of the thousands below was riveted to a single point in the sky by the appearance of brilliant flashes, followed by loud detonations. The plane started swiftly downward, intensifying the illusion of an accident. At a height of about two thousand feet the fire-works went out as suddenly as they had appeared, the plane was momentarily lost sight of, and then there appeared the six huge letters of "Convoy" in brilliant illumination. The aeroplane remained in flight for the next hour with the letters always plainly visible to the watching thousands below. The local newspapers played the big story. The same flight was repeated with similar features on the next evening.

The front of the Strand was profusely decorated for the opening. Signal flags were strung from the electric sign to the marquee and along the top of the building.

Ballyhoos are strictly taboo in Hartford under local ordinance and some difficulty was experienced in providing an exploitation "gag" of this type. However, the ditty-bag of the "gob" saved the day. Four ditty-bags were lettered with the word "CONVOY." Then these bags in the hands of four sailors were conveyed about town. There was no attempt to mention Strand Theatre, dates of showing, or even to refer to "CONVOY" as a motion picture.

: : : : "THE CHECK-UP" : : : :

"The Check-Up" is a presentation in the briefest and most convenient form of reports received from exhibitors in every part of the country on current features, which makes it possible for the exhibitor to see what the picture has done for other theatre managers.

The first column following the name of the feature represents the number of managers that have reported the picture as "Poor." The second column gives the number who considered it "Fair"; the third, the number who considered it "Good"; and the fourth column, those who considered it "Big."

The fifth column is a percentage figure giving the average rating on that feature, obtained by the following method: A report of "Poor" is rated at 20%; one of "Fair," 40%; "Good," 70%; and "Big," 100%. The percentage ratings of all of these reports on one picture are then added together, and divided by the number of reports, giving the average percentage—a figure which represents the consensus of opinion on that picture. In this way exceptional cases, reports which might be misleading taken alone, and such individual differences of opinion are averaged up and eliminated.

No picture is included in the list which has not received at least ten reports.

Charlie Murray, Chester Conklin, and the big laugh idea are the potent selling features played up in display advertising for First National's "McFadden's Flats" at the first-run theatres. Adaptations of campaign book ads by several of these houses show many clever arrangements, as illustrated in the group above, used by the following theatres: Cameo, Cleveland; Liberty, Pittsburgh; Adams, Detroit; Strand, Albany; Rialto, Omaha; and Pantheon, Toledo.

Short Subjects and Serials

New Patheserial Placed in Production

"The Hawk of the Hills," a new ten-chapter serial by George Gray, has been placed by Pathe in production at the Fine Arts studio in California. Allene Ray and Walter Miller are the stars of the production which also has Paul Panzer, Frank Lackteen and Wally Oettel in prominent supporting positions. Director Thomas Storey is casting the remaining players; Spencer Bennet is directing. Headquarters are stationed at the Fine Arts studio, with Willard Reineck as production chief.

Mildred Kornman Returns to "Our Gang"

Mildred Kornman, eighteen-months-old baby star in Pathe's "Our Gang" comedies, has returned to studio work in the current Hal Roach two-reeler with the "Gang" after a couple of months' leave of absence. Jean Darling, the new leading lady of the "Gang," who bears the screen name of "Bossie," is said by Directors Anthony Mack and Charles Oelze to be a real find.

Stern Bros. Sign Chicago Beauty Contest Winner

Florence Allen, winner of the Chicago beauty contest a year ago, has been signed by Julius Stern, president of the Stern Film Corporation, for appearances in the Stern Bros. comedies. Miss Allen has been appearing for the past year in Universal pictures, her best work having been in "The Radio Detective," a serial.

Bushman, Jr., to Star in New "U" Serial

Francis X. Bushman, Jr., has signed a Universal contract whereby he will be starred in "The Scarlet Arrow," one of Universal's new serials for the coming year. The new chapter-play is to go into production within a few weeks. No further details of its cast and production are available at the present time.

Shallenberger Established at New Headquarters

W. E. Shallenberger, general manager of Plaza Pictures, Inc., announces that the company's new offices have been opened at 1650 Broadway. Shallenberger is augmenting his organization and is also working out the details of a production schedule.

Ince Signs Five Year F. B. O. Contract

Ralph Ince last week signed a five-year contract with F. B. O., according to Joseph P. Kennedy, president of the company. Ince is now filming "Not For Publication" in which he plays the lead as well as directs.

New Serial on Pathe List

First Chapter of "Melting Millions" Heads Releasing Schedule for April 10; Six Other Subjects

THE first chapter of "Melting Millions," the new Patheserial co-starring Allene Ray and Walter Miller, is the featured subject on the Pathe list of short subjects released during the week of April 10. Also included among the Pathe shorts are "Forgotten Sweeties," a Charlie Chase two-reeler, "The Honor Man," an Aesop Film Fable, Pathe Review, No. 15, Topics of the Day, No. 15, and the two current issues of the Pathe news reel.

"Melting Millions" is a ten-chapter play written by Joseph Anthony Roach and directed by Spencer Bennet. In supporting roles are E. H. Calvert, Frank Lackteen, William Norton, Richard Travers, George Kuwa, John J. Richardson, Eugenia Gilbert, John Cossar, Robert Burns and Ernie Adams.

The Charlie Chase comedy is presented by Hal Roach. It was directed by James Parrott, supervised by F. Richard Jones and costumed by Lambert. Mitchell Lewis, Shirley Palmer and Anita Garvin are members of the supporting cast.

Four subjects are presented in Pathe Review, No. 15. "Down in Tropic Banana Land," shows the harvesting, packing and loading of bananas in Columbia, South America; "A World Center of Learning," gives glimpses in color of Cambridge University in England, one of the world's foremost institutions of knowledge; "If a Table Could Talk," is a novelty subject on Furniture; "Shanghai Super-Cops," reviews the training of Oriental policemen, from the rookie to the man on duty.

The Animated reels are represented by "The Honor Man," of the Paul Terry series. The latest wit and humor from the press of the world is offered in the Topics of the Day offering. Pathe News, Nos. 32 and 33 complete the Pathe releases for the week.

"Big Boy," who will be starred by Educational in a series of Juvenile-Big Boy comedies

"Big Boy" Will Star in Educational Series

"BIG BOY," Educational's three-year-old star who has played in Educational-Juvenile comedies during the present season, will have a series of comedies named after him when Educational stars him in eight Big Boy-Juvenile comedies during the 1927-28 season.

The child star first came into prominence in 1924 and 1925 when he began as an "extra." He was only eighteen months old when his "Baby Blues" was released. After his initial Juvenile comedy, "Baby Be Good," he was featured in subsequent comedies of the series. With the advent of the present season he was featured prominently in six Juvenile comedies.

Bevan on Sennett Lot; Other Sennett News

Billy Bevan has returned to the Sennett lot in Hollywood and is portraying a prominent role in the current Madeline Hurlock-Eddie Quillan comedy which Earl Rodney is directing. Phil Whitman and Jefferson Moffitt did the story and the supporting cast in addition to Bevan includes Andy Clyde and Barney Hellum.

The locale of the latest of the "Jimmie Smith" series now in production with Alf Goulding directing is a baby contest. As usual, Raymond McKee, Ruth Hiatt and Mary Ann Jackson are playing the principal roles.

The Sennett scenarists are completing a feature-length adaptation of the Johnny Burke vaudeville monologue "Dirty Work." This production will be cast shortly and placed in work with Harry Edwards directing.

"Queer Ducks," Educational Comedy, Being Edited

"Queer Ducks," a new Educational Christie, with Jack Duffy, Ann Christy and others, is now in hands of the editors. Hal Conklin is the author of the story. Harold Beaudine, director, was assisted by Eddie Baker, who has acted and otherwise aided in the production of several comedies this year. In supporting roles are Billy Engle, Jimmie Harrison, Gus Leonard, George French, Gail Lloyd, Evelyn Egan, Elinor Black and Helen Cox. The company making "Queer Ducks" spent [illegible] the golf course where the $10,000 golf tournament was staged recently.

"Thru Darkest Africa"
Thrilling Search for the White Rhino
(Reviewed by Paul Thompson)

CAPTAIN HARRY EUSTACE spent three years with his wife in Africa in search of the white rhino. Credited by the Encyclopaedia Britannica with being extinct, the doughty captain proved that he is still roaming Africa. But this was only after all sorts of the most exciting and thrilling adventures. It is a companion piece for "The Gorilla Hunt" on the same continent which was shown comparatively recently at the same theatre, the Cameo, in New York. It is a valuable picture also from a natural history and ethnological point of view because the various animals of that part of the African continent and native tribes encountered on the journey in search of the white rhino are shown. It also has thrills aplenty, culminating in the near-death of Captain Eustace. To get some hippopotami to come to the surface so they could be photographed, he constructed a raft with meat on it. In towing the raft out into the stream so that the animals would be attracted to the same he was attacked, dragged down and nearly killed. He had not learned his lesson from broken ribs received when flirting with an ostrich, so that the cameraman could get more effective pictures. These are but two of many exciting experiences undergone by the captain on the trip. Add to this phase uniformly good photography and you will get an idea of the effectiveness of the picture which took three years and 2,400 miles to make.

Herbert Illingsworth edited the picture. It is 4,900 feet in length and was released March 20th at the Cameo Theatre, New York.

"Circus Daze"
(Universal-Gump Comedy—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Paul Thompson)

CIRCUS DAY! Can you not imagine from that the possibilities of this Sidney Smith-inspired cartoon with chinless Joe Murphy featured? Well, they are realized under Earl Kenton's direction. "Andy" buys a "guest" badge, whatever that may be. It theoretically entitles him to a free circus seat. The gullible one is thrown out several times before he becomes convinced that all is not well with his purchase. His bald head among the melons hides him for a while. Discovered, he seeks refuge in the shooting-gallery and the detective nearly kills him. Under the tent onto a stage where a hypnotist is working to escape the all-avenging plain-clothes man, hypnotized "Andy" knocks out the professor and then the strong man of the show. By the latter feat he wins a thousand dollars but then "Min" enters the scene. She knocks out her husband and corrals the thousand and awakens her dumb helpmate. Home, James!

It is filled with the usual rough-house, knock-down-and-drag-out comedy which followers of the Gump fortunes have come to love. That means this is on the same level as others in the series and will score with movie fans who like that sort of humor.

It was released March 21st.

"In Again, Out Again"
(Universal—One Reel)

DURING the unreeling of this Bluebird Comedy, which features Arthur Lake, who worked under Slim Summerville's direction, the onlooker is treated to a wild and hilarious chase—with Arthur the pursued and two speed cops the pursuers. Arthur is a speed demon: as a matter of fact he is a regular guest at the jail because of his inability to obey the traffic regulations. The initial sequence shows him in the pitcher's box in the prison yard where inmates are engaged in playing ball. In the [illegible] how to strike an opposing player out. But between the first and last scenes many things have happened to Arthur. He was pardoned by the warden and upon his release was asked by a doctor to hurry him to a case with the result that [illegible] pursuing cops again greeted his ears and the clash of the prison doors again resounded behind him. It is all very good, especially the sequence where Arthur renews his acquaintance with the speed cops. An April 25th release.—RAYMOND GANLY.

"Melting Millions"
(Patheserial—10 Episodes)
(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

THEY'RE off again. Allene Ray and Walter Miller this week travel through the Hell and high water of San Francisco's Barbary Coast to escape the gang trying to defraud Allene of her inheritance of property worth material, not melting, millions. Among the many virtues possessed by Spencer Bennett as a director is his faculty of getting these "continued next week" thrillers started in the first reel of the first chapter. Scarcely had we sat back to watch the unfolding of the first three episodes than Allene was decoyed to a cabaret dive, Miller entered the dive, Allene was molested by the toughs and the fight was on: and it was a peach.

Miss Ray and Mr. Miller are the heroine and hero of this latest Patheserial. Allene, an orphan, is heir to many millions which are sought by an unscrupulous gang. In addition to fighting the gang Allene is having difficulty proving her claim which is contained in "the papers" which will probably change hands often before the final denouement. The figures familiar to this type of production are again in evidence—several mysterious individuals, the cold, cruel, villain, his henchman and, of course, the "papers," without which no serial is complete. The story and scenario were written by Joseph Anthony Roach.

Spencer Bennett's direction is excellent, the photography of Edward Snyder is all that could be desired and, naturally, Miss Ray is her usual charming self, ready to do and dare. Neither Miss Ray nor Mr. Miller need introducing to the audiences as both have appeared in many productions of this type in the past. The supporting cast includes E. H. Calvert, who plays the "heavy," William N. Bailey, Eugenia Gilbert, John J. Richardson, Frank Lackteen, another familiar serialite, Bob Burns, Ernest Adams, George Kuwa, Richard C. Travers, John Cossar, Ann Gladman and Albert Roccardi.

Judging from the first three episodes, "Melting Millions" should prove a successful addition to your program. Both stars are well-liked, the director has proved his worth in previous efforts, the photography and settings are good and, if the marriage license gag used in the second episode is a criterion of the "business" to be introduced, then you're in for more serial intelligence than is ordinarily on view in chapter-plays.

"Odd-Jobs"
(Curiosities-Educational—One Reel)

THERE'S nothing curious about this number but the brand name. It purports to show the unusual in jobs, hazardous, dare-devilish and ludicrous, but most of the scenes incorporated in this issue, airplane stunts, a deep-sea diver at work, coal miners, a "human spider," are efficiently covered in the news reels. What may be classed as curiosities or unusual are the waiter balancing a tray of food on his head while riding a motorcycle and the Bowery bum selling cigar and cigarette butts.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

"George Leaves Home"
(Universal—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

A [illegible] to the big city years and years ago. That's the incentive that drives Sid Saylor along the course of this—the latest adventure of what [illegible]. He's a likeable rant fellow, continually getting into trouble with vamps and crooks and other persons who career their merry way through this opus. Sid's quest is successful, of course, but only after he has gone through heaven knows what. The gags and comical situations in which he finds himself, though not new, are executed in a satisfactory fashion; and so they please and produce the laughs and when a comedy does just that it has succeeded in its purpose. This one comes to you on April 27. It was directed by Francis Corbey.

"Art, Utah and Animals in Africa"
(Pathe Review No. 12—One Reel)

MISS BRENDA PUTNAM, sculptress, shows how she—and others—work. This is the first of the review and is titled "Teamwork in Art." It shows how modern industry helps in this work from the cast to the completed model. Second of the review is Zion Park in Utah. This is one of the series of "American National Parks." Done in Pathecolor with camera shots from various angles it cannot fail to hold the interest of the spectator.

"Trapping Wild Game," is the start of the Chrysler-Smithsonian expedition to Africa last year after wild animals for the Washington Zoo. the start and the arrival at Dar-es-Salaam and the journey to Tanganyika, the scene of the rounding up of the animals, take up this first chapter. Charles Charlton took the pictures. This means they are good technically and informative. It promises to be a mighty interesting series.—PAUL THOMPSON.

"An Exciting Day"
(Universal—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

HERE is a Mustang offering featuring Edmund Cobb and possessing the attributes of snappy action, convincing acting and plot and scenic splendor to lend it their various cumulative advantages. It certainly lives up to its title with Cobb working with speed and dexterity and receiving admirable support from players among whom is Elsie Tarron as the heroine. Imagine a horse thief knocking you unconscious, robbing your clothes and letters of identity and you regaining consciousness only to be arrested by the sheriff and his posse as the hoss rustler they were seeking. Also conceive that after escaping from the posse you seek refuge in a nearby cottage only to have a woman upon your entrance throw her arms around your neck and claim you as her husband. That is what happened to Cobb and how he finds a way out of this maze of difficulties forms an interesting two reels of entertainment. Ray Taylor directed. Release date, April 30.

"Ruling the Rooster"
(Life Cartoon-Educational—One Reel)

THIS is along the line of the Aesop's Fables and Winkler cartoon comedies but not of the same entertainment value. An egg-laying contest is the highlight of this number. Kid Quack and Red Leghorn battle for supremacy in that department and the result shows Quack to be in better form. The antics of the pen-and-ink spectators furnish most of the comedy.

It is just fairly amusing.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

"Forgotten Sweeties"
(Roach-Pathé—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

MIRTHFUL, fairly plausible, well produced and directed Charles Chase comedies appear with, what seems to a reviewer, monotonous regularity. H. M. Walker's titles, too, play their part in making this series among the best in short-length comedies. Chase has a wonderful personality and his supporting cast, which includes Mitchell Lewis, is as good an aggregation as may be found.

This number deals with the marital difficulties of a young husband who is absent-minded to an extraordinary degree. This affliction gets him into several tight situations as he unintentionally wanders into the apartment of another couple, the male half of which is exceedingly jealous. Of course it all comes out in the wash.

Directed by James Parrott. Released April 10th.

"Local Talent"
(Educational—One Reel)

A LIFE Cartoon which is crammed full with all sorts and conditions of animals as this one is certainly makes up in quantity what it lacks in quality. A country fair attracts the throng who have novel and devious methods of gaining admission. Nibbins is doing a rushing business because of his sagacity in catapulting his customers onto the bleacher seats, and official quadrupeds are busy chasing vagrants all over the lot. There are many big features on the bill, quite a variety in fact, and all the animals are enjoying themselves hugely when from the sky comes the menace and the cause of their flight from the arena. Their forceful ejection is due to none other than the arrival of two skunks whose balloon had collapsed. While not as amusing as some of the other cartoons on the market this one will please quite a few among the vast audience of movie-goers.—RAYMOND GANLY.

"Bruce Scenic Novelty, No. 8"
(Educational—One Reel)

IN this subject, the ninth of a series of twelve, we view "Hawaii From the Car Window," travelogue through "the Paradise of the Pacific" with its surrounding ocean and surf-swept reefs, waterfalls, tropical palms, canyons and what not. More of the beauties of this dreamy land are unfolded in "Black Sand," a scenic, which offers us views of Kalapana, the little bay on the southern coast of Hawaii. The reel closes with "The Harbor Beacon" as seen from the harbor. One sees its blinking glow in a twilight scene and as silhouetted against a moonlit sky. Shots like these fill one with a desire to travel. They contain, as does its object, pictures of charming and glamorous beauty. They fit in nicely in almost any bill and convey a pleasurable feeling to the beholder.—RAYMOND GANLY.

"Cash and Carry"
(Christie-Educational—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

THIS is a well-balanced combination of the situation type and slapstick form of comedy. It moves along at a fast pace, the producers have made a liberal production outlay, the troupers perform creditably and there is more story material in evidence than in most comedies. Three sub-titles should be deleted as they are decidedly bad form; one having to do with squeezing blackheads, another "like a Scotchman, he holds you so close"; the third describing a "rise to the garter," or something of that sort.

Department store floorwalker and clerk desire company of same girl at dance. Clerk has no dress suit, appropriates one from store and escorts girl to affair. Floorwalker makes life difficult until clerk finally wins right to suit as prize for his dancing.

"Slipping Wives"
(Pathe-Hal Roach—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

WELL-KNOWN names for the marquee, Priscilla Dean and Herbert Rawlinson, and the comedy antics of Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy under the skillful direction of Fred Guiol—a combination of this type deserves booking.

The wife, fearing her husband is tiring of her, engages a slow-witted young man to make love to her in order to arouse jealousy and its resultant re-appreciation of her charms in the husband. The hired Romeo makes good to such an extent that he is chased by the husband and connubial bliss once more reigns.

"Here Comes Precious"
(Educational—Two Reels)

THIS latest of the "Jimmie Adams Comedies" contains some really good humor but there is not enough of it to go all the way round. Jimmie Adams roughhouses through the two reels as a timid lover whose rival, Eddie Baker, has scared him away from Vera Steadman, the object of the affections of the two. His rival dresses up as a vicious looking hairy individual who threatens Jimmie so that the latter is always on the qui-vive so to speak. But our hero finally outwits the terrible Eddie, winning Vera for himself, by a ruse. A hilarity-provoking incident is that where Jimmie unwittingly carries a parrot on his back and jumps and quivers every time it utters a command, thinking that it is his enemy threatening him. It is an average comedy, but it will please some. Released March 13. Directed by Earl Rodney.

Pathe Review No. 15
(Pathe—One Reel)

A PICTORIAL affirmative to the banana question is the first sequence in the regular weekly issue of the Pathe Review. The process of distribution is described starting at the plantation and ending with the transposition from trains to ships. The following scenes, in Pathecolor, show Cambridge University in England, the ancient seat of learning. A highly ingenious bit is next unreeled—a poker game in which cards and chips are distributed and played without any visible human contact. The number closes with views of Chinese policemen in the making, from the time they are enrolled to their graduation.

Instruction and amusement are meted out in fair degree.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

"Galloping Justice"
(Universal-Mustang—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Paul Thompson)

AGAIN the hero is misunderstood for most of the two reels and then at the end proves to be not a crook and a fugitive from justice but a Texas ranger who has been traveling incognito for the sake of rounding up the villain and his pals. That is the tale of this Mustang two-reeler in which Edmund Cobb co-stars with beauteous Alma Rayford. William Wyler directing has co-operated with the author to create a stirring and ingenious western showing both stars off most favorably. Released April 9.

Pathe Review No. 14

RAISING sugar beet in Montana, an old industry but new to this state, occupies the lead-off position in this issue. The process is described from the planting in April, the harvest in November, right through the refinery, where the sugar crystals and molasses are separated. Then views of a French Riviera estate in Pathecolor showing beautiful flowers, handsome architectural designs of the Italian school and some beautiful pottery work.

A number of clever animals, monkeys dogs, etc., put on a "taking movies" playlet in the concluding footage of the reel. Moderately entertaining.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

"The Medicine Man"
(Aesop's Fables-Pathe—One Reel)

FARMER ALFALFA, selling hair tonic, loses out when his horse drinks a bottle of the medicine and bolts. The cat, the mouse and Al are chased by a lion to the stronghold of a bear family, which, resentful of the disturbance, proceeds to broil Al until he is rescued by the lion; the lion was friendly because the mouse gave him some hair tonic.

Just a hodge-podge but it's funny and I think they'll enjoy it. This type of comedy always seems to go well, even on blase Broadway.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

"The Honor Man"
(Aesop's Fables-Pathe—One Reel)

THIS release measures up to the high standard maintained in this series of cartoons. Tom Cat, in prison, escapes and befriends a rabbit; in return he is offered shelter, but the law catches up with him and he is forced to flee. He takes refuge in a coal truck, but when the contents is unloaded Tom finds himself back in jail.

That's the story, but it's the gags and business that produce the mirth.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

Quarantined Rivals

California Liked This One

(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

HERALDED by Gotham's publicity department as having received favorable comment from everyone who had seen it in California, this picturization of George Randolph Chester's story recently arrived in New York for a well attended Wurlitzer Hall showing. Now, taking everything into consideration and making the proper allowances, it looks as though the Californians sized things up pretty well. True, there are no prominent names to shout about—and so many characters are involved during the first half that the action suffers somewhat—but on the whole Director Archie Mayo and staff have turned out a very creditable piece of work. The final reels are quite snappy. The subtitles are not.

It's all about a couple of young fellows in love with the same girl. They, along with the girl's family, a jealous barber, his manicurist-fiancee and a burly plumber are the not too clubby inmates of the quarantined home of the girl's mother. Complications introduced during the start of the story become more and more involved and finally come to a head during the several days' quarantine. Credit would seem to be due Robert Agnew, John Miljan and "Big Boy" Williams; the latter's work standing out as well as any.

The Cast: Robert Agnew, Kathleen Collins, John Miljan, Veora Daniels, Ray Haller, "Big Boy" Williams, Clarissa Selwynne, George Pierce, Josephine Borio and Wm. A. O'Connor. Director, Archie Mayo.

THEME: Comedy drama dealing with the complications which befall numerous occupants of a quarantined home.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Good story by well-known author. Fast comedy action in last half.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Play up strong the author's name and comedy angle.

DRAWING POWER: Suitable for better class of neighborhood trade, and others.

Length, 6,806 feet. Released March 25, 1927.
Produced by Gotham and distributed by Lumas Film Corp.

The Broken Gate

Small Town Scandal Story Very Well Done

(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

A VERY human story of small-town life, good screen treatment, well directed, and enacted by an unusually capable cast is this picturization of the Emerson Hough novel of the same name. Performances not achieved by many of our present day stars are given by Dorothy Phillips, who has been in retirement for a long time; Florence Turner, one of the first screen stars; Phillips Smalley, another well-known trouper—in fact, Tiffany has gathered together a cast of players than whom there is no better. The continuity and direction is first-rate—the story moves along logically and swiftly, no jumps or cut-backs.

Despite pregnant condition of Aurora Lane, Lucius Henderson will not marry her for fear of disinheritance. Town gossips note condition of Aurora but she does not name man. Boy is born but sent away, Aurora pretending he died. Boy grows up and Julia, friend of Aurora, watches him, pretending she is his aunt. He goes through college, meets and falls in love with girl from his mother's town. He graduates, secures position, but stops over to see aunt. Aunt brings him to mother, leaves them alone, and scandal-mongers spread story. Mother is driven out of town by constable but son brings her back. He is arrested for constable's murder, is about to be lynched by town mob but half-wit confesses.

The Cast: Dorothy Phillips, William Collier, Jr., Jean Arthur, Phillips Smalley, Florence Turner, Gibson Gowland, Charles A. Post, Caroline "Spike" Rankin, Vera Lewis, Jack McDonald, Charles Thurston, Adele Watson. Directed by James C. McKay.

THEME: Melodrama showing the havoc small-town scandal-mongers can create in lives of utterly respectable people.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Human story, splendid performances of cast and able direction.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Dorothy Phillips, Florence Turner. Use press book suggestions, cuts and lobby displays.

DRAWING POWER: Excellent draw for any house though it lacks production values.

Length, 5,440 feet. Released March 15, 1927.
Produced and distributed by Tiffany Productions.

Cabaret

Interesting Melodrama of Broadway Night Life

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

IT'S quite a jump from the south seas to Broadway, but Gilda Gray has negotiated it easily. Emerging from a romantic background of sunlight and moonlight and sheltering palms to take in the artificial atmosphere of a night club the star has occasion to be emotional in as crisp a melodrama as has come along in some time. "Cabaret" is just what its title indicates. If one guesses that it will concern the plottings of the underworld one will not guess wrong. But instead of involving one of our biggest industries—bootlegging—it caters to the less complicated occupation of murder.

Our only criticism is its length. It runs a trifle too long and loses some of its compactness. And, come to think of it, the casting is none too good, aside from Miss Gray and Tom Moore (the latter appearing as the detective). It features some first-rate atmosphere and the star certainly demonstrates that she is in a class by herself in her particular style of dancing. She also shows ability to emotionalize her role.

The Cast: Gilda Gray, Tom Moore, Chester Conklin, Wm. Harrington, Jack Egan, Anna Lavsa, Charles Beyers. Director, Robert Vignola.

THEME: Melodrama involving a murder—with dancer saving her brother from being framed.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The cabaret scenes. Gilda Gray's dance. The murder. The acting by star and Tom Moore. Chester Conklin's comedy. The subtitles.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Bill the title and feature as picturization of New York night life. Stage prologue of dancer doing Charleston and Black Bottom. Play up star.

DRAWING POWER: Title and star will draw them. For any house.

Produced and distributed by Famous Players. Length, eight reels. Released April, 1927.

Madame Wants No Children

Nevertheless, the Stork Arrived

(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

BILLED as an hilarious comedy but somewhat overshadowed in that respect by its serious theme, William Fox's first German-made feature for American consumption has come to our shores. Now, in the opinion of this writer, some more importations of this calibre won't do a bit of harm; for outside of a few crudities here and there such as occasional bad lighting, at times a too speedy action and one awkward melodramatic situation, it's a darn good picture and worthy of favorable comment.

Some fine directorial touches have been injected by Alexander Korda in a story which deals with a man's attempt to escape his humdrum bachelor life. The attractive Maria Corda plays the role of the jazz-crazed woman he marries, and does it in a most praiseworthy manner. Harry Liedtke, well-known European actor, has the role of husband. These, and the rest of a well-balanced cast, combine to make what we believe to be a first rate general audience picture. We might also add that the director and feminine lead of this picture have been signed by one of our largest National distributors.

The Cast: Maria Corda, Harry Liedtke, Maria Paudler, Trude Hesterberg, Dina Gralla, Herrmann Vallentin, Camilla V. Hollay, Olga Mannel and Ellen Muller. Directed by Alexander Korda. Cameras, Theodor Sparkuhl and Robert Baberske.

THEME: Sophisticated comedy drama dealing with home-yearning bachelor who picks a jazz crazed mate. Has happy ending.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Clever directorial touches and camera work. Acting of the principals.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Of course, you'll say: Whoozinit? But forget this and play it up as a darn good "Imported Production." Also, don't forget the comedy and "baby" angles.

DRAWING POWER: Appeal for sophisticates stands out but also as general audience on account of theme and comedy relief.

Length, 5,415 feet. Released April 3, 1927. Produced and distributed by Fox Films.

The Outlaw Dog

Compact Comedy-Melo; Middle Class Draw

(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

THE intelligent performance of Ranger, the dog-star of the production, a well-balanced blending of comedy and melo-dramatic incidents and the pleasing personality of the male and female leads combine to make of this railroad story a pleasant hour's entertainment. The story teaches no great moral lesson, it isn't filled with motives, humanities, tempo, rhythm, production values or anything of that sort—just a picture produced for entertainment purposes and it achieves the purpose for which it was created. The only criticism has to do with casting—two of the most kindly-visaged, engaging chaps were selected as the villains.

Ranger, accused of biting his master, runs away and is pursued by detectives and posters offering a reward for his death or capture. He rides a freight train, gets off at a small station where he is befriended by station-master. Two hoboes attempt theft of station-master's payroll and Ranger succors new-found friend. Hoboes later plan hold-up of Limited, which they intend to blow up, but again Ranger saves the day and the train. There is a romance between the station-master and a girl occupying a similar position at the next railroad stop. It transpires that dog was wrongfully accused by master.

Cast: Ranger (dog-star), Helen Foster, Rex Lease, Alfred Allen, Harry TenBrook, Bruce Gordon, Spencer Bell, Vic Allen. Directed by J. P. McGowan and photographed by Joe Walker.

THEME: Railroad melodrama. Outlaw dog, befriended by railroad station-master, shows his gratitude by fighting off hoboes who would rob payroll and derail train.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Performance of Ranger, the direction of the story and the capable human cast.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Everybody likes dog pictures—play up the star of this one.

DRAWING POWER: Good attraction for whole family. Middle-class houses.

Length, 4,721 feet. Released April, 1927.

Produced and distributed by Film Booking Offices.

Long Pants

Langdon Has a Rollicking Number Here

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

AS droll and hilarious a comedy as has been captured in a season or two is brought to light in "Long Pants." Here is a typical Langdon title adorning a typical Langdon film—which means that it's full-grown, charged with bright and effervescent gags and humor and continuously funny. It may be a little lengthy and repetitious, but there's no denying its appeal as a rib-tickler. The comedian dons his baggy costume to bat around on a bicycle—and certainly plays his trumps. Which is another way of saying that he doesn't forget to apply his pathos to temper the comedy. His is an individual art—and he has certainly capitalized it to a fare-you-well.

He jogs along on his "bike" and is captured by the beauty of a girl seated in the tonneau of a dashing car (yes, the Rolls-Royce is all of that). As he spies her he forgets all about the village belle. He even goes so far as to forget his impending marriage to rescue the vamp from jail, for, to be truthful, the girl is something of a bandit. When he discovers what a jam he is in he returns to the sweetheart—and is forgiven.

In telling this one cannot account for all the play of comic incident. Let it be said that it packs one hilarious episode after another—and the entire series of gags are well timed.

The Cast: Harry Langdon, Gladys Brockwell, Al Roscoe, Alma Bennett, Frankie Darro, Priscilla Bonner. Director, Harry Edwards.

THEME: Comedy of rustic youth who falls hard for a vamp and forgets his village sweetheart. He returns to her when he learns a thing or two.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The bicycle gags. The episode with the dummy policeman. The gag showing effort to shoot the belle. The titles.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Bill as Langdon's best. Feature the gags. Play up the pathos which always marks star's comedies.

DRAWING POWER: Should break records. For any type of house.

Produced and distributed by First National.

Length, six reels. Released March, 1927.

Evening Clothes

Misses the Vital Spark

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

ONE of the requisites of bright comedy is an effervescence which can keep it moving even when its spark of plot has burned itself out. This is what prevents "Evening Clothes" from hitting the bull's-eye. The latest Menjou film might have been a hum-dinger had it been handled in a jaunty manner. But it is taken too seriously. Of course, with such a title the selection of the artful Adolphe was inevitable. He has the gift for looking quite toppy in his sartorial splendor.

Aside from registering what the well-dressed man will wear, the star hasn't much opportunity. Here's an actor whose art, from all appearances, is being overlooked in order to dress him up and send him into drawing rooms. We see him as the elegant fellow of the boulevards who, when his creditors permit him to wear only one suit from his mortgaged wardrobe, selects the w. k. "soup and fish." His idea is that it would be easier to recoup his fortune in the attire of a gentleman of the evening. And so he goes through some mildly amusing adventures—none of which are calculated to arouse more than a faint chuckle.

The Cast: Adolphe Menjou, Virginia Valli, Noah Beery, Louise Brooks, Lido Manetti, Andre Cheron. Director, Luther Reed.

THEME: Light comedy of a gay bounder who finds adventure and romance in evening clothes, his creditors having taken his other togs away from him.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The restaurant scene. The wedding sequence. The comedy of Menjou in his evening togs and in nondescript apparel. The subtitles by George Marion, Jr.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Tie up with clothing stores, etc. Bill Menjou as particularly adept in wearing evening clothes, etc. Play up Virginia Valli and Louise Brooks.

DRAWING POWER: O. K. for average houses, downtown and neighborhood.

Produced and distributed by Famous Players. Length, six reels. Released March, 1927.

M-G-M's Western Star Comes Over With a Dandy

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

PROBABLY all the essentials that go to make an entertainment pleasing, commanding and outstanding are incorporated in this historical romance which serves as Tim McCoy's second contribution to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's catalogue of releases. The Irish star has a fine production here, as the picture boasts an interesting theme, a well-rounded list of performers, a certain amount of lavishness in its production. It's the kind of picture that will go over well, providing as it does a creditable period of diversion during its little more than six reels of length. McCoy has undeniably advanced.

The story concerns the pre-Revolutionary war between the French and Indians and the English and Americans. The costumes of the period offer a pleasing contrast to the interesting sequences of the film in which are seen such historical figures as Washington and Braddock. The latter's disastrous defeat is the film's highlight and it is carried out with realism. The acting of all hands is competent.

The Cast: Tim McCoy, Joan Crawford, Edward Connelly, Frank Currier, Roy D'Arcy, Louise Lorraine, Edward Hearn, Will R. Walling, Tom O'Brien, Chief Big Tree, Lionel Belmore. Directed by W. S. Van Dyke.

THEME: American officer foils the French in the French and Indian wars and wins a French bride.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Theft of the document. Wrestling match in the woods. Braddock's defeat. McCoy's escape from the stake. The color scene at the end of the film.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Capitalize on Indian and Colonial atmosphere; historical figures; rapid-fire action. Try tie-up with schools.

DRAWING POWER: Good.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Released January, 1927. Footage, 6,343 feet.

Regional News from Correspondents

N. Y. & N. J.

LAST Saturday's meeting of The Motion Picture Salesmen, Inc., was largely attended at the Hotel Manger, Seventh Avenue and 50th Street, New York City. Samuel Eckman, Jr., eastern district sales manager for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, was speaker for this occasion and many interesting subjects were brought up, among them being: "The Value of Salesmen to an Organization"; "Business Ethics," i.e., based on the last clause in the uniform contract; "How Salesmen Can Improve Distribution" and "Opportunities of Salesmen for Advancement."

Salesmen of the above named organization will hold a luncheon at the Hotel Astor April 9th. President G. W. Wolf has extended invitations to the various local exchange and sales managers, and trade paper editors, requesting their attendance. It is also thought that Mayor Walker will be there.

Although we believe the sale of the Terminal Theatre, Dean Street and Fourth Avenue, Brooklyn, to Brandt Brothers, was reported in these columns a couple of weeks ago, we are in receipt of an official communication from Brandt's Theatre Enterprises confirming that report. The purchase price is said to have been in excess of $500,000 and the deal brings to the Brandts a fine new theatre with a seating capacity of over 2,000. The Terminal boosts the total for this circuit up to ten houses, all in Brooklyn.

Prominent members of the film trade, city officials and other guests attended the formal opening of the El Mora Theatre, Elmora Avenue between Jersey Avenue and Pennington Street, El Mora, N.J., on Thursday evening, March 31st.

The El Mora is modern in every respect, the owners having spared no expense in making it one of the most attractive in that section of northern Jersey. It seats 1,800 and is of concrete and steel construction. There is no balcony.

The theatre proper is decorated in blue, old gold and rose. The side walls are paneled. In the ceiling there is a fifty-foot dome, also done in the same color scheme. A large candelabra hangs in the centre.

The main lobby is very attractive. Rest rooms are on either side and in the centre a drinking fountain has been placed. It is the owners' intentions to make the theatre a gathering place for the community, a place where the younger set and others can take advantage of the dancing facilities offered.

The new house is operated by the El Mora Amusement Company, of which Stanley Sobelson is president; Louis Heiman, vice-president; Frederick Unger, secretary, and James J. Thompson, treasurer. These men also own and operate the West End and Lincoln theatres, Newark, and the Empire in Bayonne. Another house in this chain will be located on Elizabeth Avenue, near Fifth Street. Ground has just been broken for this project.

M. S. Marks and L. L. Marks, owners of the Marks Bros. Circuit, Chicago, signing contract with Frank Marshall, Rudolph Wurlitzer representative, for the five manual organ to be installed in the new Marbro Theatre

Another fine and modern neighborhood theatre was recently added to the Consolidated Amusement Company's circuit when the Mt. Eden, Jerome and Mr. Eden avenues, opened its doors. It is of the single floor design and seats about 1,700. The Mt. Eden will follow a policy of pictures with presentations. In addition to the installation of a Wurlitzer organ, an eleven-piece orchestra will furnish music. Other equipment includes seats by the American Seating Company, Simplex projectors with Hall & Conolly High Intensity arcs and a Balluna spot. Willy Pogany arranged the settings and drapes.

Lawrence Bolongino is the general manager for the Consolidated Amusement Company.

Louis Gianazza, at present manager of the Forum Theatre, will manage the Fleetwood Theatre, another new Consolidated house, when that theatre opens.

An appointment of rare importance was announced by General Manager John Zanft of the William Fox Circuit of Theatres, recently, when he designated Louis Pincus of 615 West 158th Street managing director of the William Fox Audubon Theatre, Broadway at 165th Street.

Manager Pincus will be remembered by those in every branch of the amusement world as one of the pioneer vaudeville bookers, having held the post of chief booker for the William Morris Circuit and later inaugurated the booking system for the mid-western Pantages circuit.

Pincus is considered one of the best authorities on vaudeville and was instrumental in its rapid growth and development since the early days of variety.

During the past year Pincus has been guiding the destiny of the Fox Theatre in Detroit and was only recently replaced there by Charles Cohen of the publicity forces, so as to enable Pincus to assume charge of the activities at the Audubon.

The Grand Theatre, Grand and Christie streets, will in the future abandon its policy of burlesque and pictures and merely offer a picture program, according to report. A reason which may be advanced in explanation of this move is that of the alleged overseating of this section of the East Side. Burlesque frequently costs more money than film. The Grand is a link in the Blinderman and Steiner circuit of theatres on the East Side and in the Harlem section of New York City.

A small fire occurred at the Lyric Theatre, 180th Street and Third Avenue, recently. However National Supply immediately installed new apparatus and the house is functioning as usual.

West Side theatre owners and others are wondering just how deeply the Garden will cut into profits when that house starts showing pictures about May 15th. National Supply has the contract for furnishing the projection equipment.

Morris Fleischman, part owner of the Manor Theatre, Brooklyn, is building a 2,000-seat house at East 18th Street and Kings Highway. It will probably be completed for a fall opening.

Matthew Chrystmos, owner of a chain of motion picture theatres in Westchester, has started on his latest project at Castle Hill. Completion is looked for during the early part of September.

Exhibitor Grobe, of the firm of Grobe and Knoble, has recently returned from a two weeks' vaca-

[illegible] houses, is reported as about to place his order for a new Kilgen organ to be placed in the Webster Theatre, 183d Street and Webster Avenue.

Other equipment orders recently reported by the National Theatre Supply Co., include the following: Bergen Theatre, Tenafly, N.J.; Endicott Theatre, Brooklyn; Morris Schoen's Lyric, Bronx; William Salkin's Eagle, Harlem; Palace Theatre, Lakewood, and both the new Keith-Albee and Loew theatres in New Rochelle.

New theatres scheduled for premieres in the near future are as follows: The Endicott, Brooklyn, seating about 1,700; the New Stanley, So. Orange Avenue, Newark, a 2,500-seat house, and Harry Harris' remodeled Washington Theatre are all due on April 1st or thereabouts.

The first week in April will usher in Loew's New Rochelle, a new playhouse seating 2,500. A. H. Schartz's Huntington Theatre, Huntington, L.I., will also open about that time.

Keith-Albee's New Rochelle house will get under way about the middle of April; also David Snapper's new theatre at Tottenville, S.I. Up at Harrison, N.Y., Chas. Goldblatt's new theatre will open Decoration Day. Later on, about the first week in June, Grossman and Ginsberg's South Norwalk Theatre is expected to be ready for its first night.

The Bergen Theatre, a 1,20[illegible] seat house at Tenafly, opened to a successful first night's performance March 31st.

Joe Hornstein, eastern zone manager for National Theatre Supply, visited Washington, Philadelphia and Baltimore on a recent business trip. Lou Brown, salesman with National Supply, has returned from a flying trip to Chicago.

David J. Lustig, with the Blinderman and Steiner Theatre Circuit, is back again at the Apollo

David J. Brill, recently appointed New York sales manager for Tiffany Productions, Inc.

H. O. Halstead, of the Cozy Theatre, at Duchesne, Utah, recently had a film fire.

Albany

THERE may be a new motion picture theatre in Troy, N.Y., for plans already drawn for the new Masonic Temple in that city, to replace the one burned recently, include a theatre with a seating capacity of several thousand. It is said that the Proctor interests will seek a long-term lease of the new theatre, owing to the fact that the Griswold, now being operated by Mr. Proctor, has been purchased by a business concern. The new theatre will be located almost directly across the street from the Griswold, and will be a part of the ground floor of the Temple.

The past week brought further changes along Albany's Film Row with Fenton Lawlor resigning as salesman for the First National Exchange, to assume a similar position with the Fox branch. Clayton Eastman, who has been doing the booking at the Paramount Exchange, has been promoted and is now covering the territory.

Uly S. Hill, managing director of the Stanley houses in Albany and Troy, was so infatuated last week with the Vitaphone, as it started at the Mark Strand, that he spent nearly all of his time listening to it.

James Rose is planning to reopen his theatre at Queechy Lake about July 1. He reports business as being about normal at his Troy theatres.

William Smalley, of Cooperstown, has recovered from his recent illness, and was in Albany during the week. Mr. Smalley will erect a new house in Stamford this summer, with a seating capacity of 860, which may be increased, however, by a 200-seat balcony. A new electric sign has been placed in front of his Johnstown house.

Nate Robbins, of Utica, who recently sold out his holdings in that city, Syracuse and Watertown, to the Schine Brothers, has just broken ground for a new theatre in the residential section of Utica.

Fred Maussert, of Glens Falls, reports having rented all stores in the business block he has built in front of his theatre and through which an arcade runs to the theatre itself.

Richard Bolton is now getting in readiness to open his theatre at Hague-on-Lake George, and will follow the same practice of a year ago of giving one show a night and then removing the chairs and holding a dance.

Bob Pierce, of Ilion, is nursing a sore thumb these days as the result of having thrown it out of joint while engaging in his favorite pastime of bowling. Mr. Pierce ranks as one of the best bowlers in the Mohawk Valley.

Admission prices at the Avon, in Utica, have been reduced from 50 to 40 cents by the Schine Bros., and there is a stiff fight for business between this house and the Olympic, which is run by W. H. Linton.

Louis Buettner, of Cohoes, returned home this past week from a trip to California.

Leon Herman and C. R. Halligan, of the Universal Exchange, journeyed out to Jefferson, last week, to call on C. G. Danforth, an exhibitor there, and found their man in the sugar bush, gathering sap.

Leon Medem, former manager of the Pathe Exchange in Albany, who resigned to go to New York, is now engaged in newspaper work in that city, representing one of the Chicago publications.

Julius Byck was in town during the week and with pad and pencil, and stated that he would reopen his house in Tannersville at once.

Harry Seed, local manager for Warner Brothers, was in Utica during the week, calling on exhibitors, while Julius Singer, Universal manager, took a week's swing through Northern New York.

The Casino at Fleischmanns is to be sold on April 7, according to a report that has reached Albany.

Alec Papayanakos, of Canton, has announced during the past week that he has bought the Vitaphone for his theatre and will have it installed at once.

Frank Lapine has been made manager of the Strand in Ogdensburg, as Lawrence J. Carkey, of that city, district manager for the Schines, has moved to Watertown.

Ivan Baumgartel has been named as manager of the Strand in Carthage, and has made a number of changes bettering conditions. A new lighting effect is being used in the theatre and a fashion show will be staged early in April.

Former Mayor Robert E. Cahill, of Watertown, was present last week at the reopening of the Olympic Theatre in that city. Later there was a dinner at the Black River Valley Club, given in honor of the Schine Bros. and other officers of the company.

The Schine Bros. are said to be negotiating for the purchase of the Garland City Park in Watertown, for the purpose of turning it into a children's playground and sport park.

Baltimore

RUMORS have it that the Garden Theatre, Lexington Street at Park Avenue, one of the Whitehurst theatres here, may be sold or the stock may be taken over by another company in the near future. A request has been sent to preferred and common stockholders that they deposit with the Mercantile Trust and Deposit Company their stock.

A luncheon was given at the opening of the new Universal Exchange Building, Washington, D.C., by Ted Schlanger, manager, and his office force. Exhibitors from nearby and members of other exchanges in Washington were the guests.

Ben Guterson, one time assistant manager of the Embassy Theatre here, and later associated with theatres in Pennsylvania, was the first person to enlist in the Marine Service for immediate service in China from Baltimore. He is the nephew of Mischa Guterson, conductor of the orchestra at Loew's Valencia here.

Fred Robbins, conductor of the orchestra at the Garden Roof here, atop the Garden Theatre, a Whitehurst enterprise, will go to Carlin's Amusement Park this summer to conduct the orchestra there for the dance pavilion.

Sydney Machat, member of Eva Le Gallienne's Civic Repertory Company in New York, who died in that city recently, was the son of Nathan Machat, film exhibitor of Washington, D.C., who founded the motion picture guild in that city.

Harriet Hawley Locher, who was taken from her work as director of the educational department of the Stanley-Crandell Company, Washington, D.C., by an attack of grippe, has recovered.

Brodie's Majestic Theatre in South Baltimore was scheduled to reopen to the public Saturday, April 2nd. It is operated now by Ruben Saltz. The structure was damaged by fire recently.

Mrs. Hazel Paresky, wife of Harold Paresky, formerly leader of the orchestra at the Embassy Theatre, has returned to work at the Loew's Valencia Theatre as a cashier.

Anne Sweeney, formerly a cashier at the Century Theatre, has left her work due to illness.

A benefit performance was given at the Embassy Theatre Sunday, March 27th, by the Orinin Relief Association for the benefit of sufferers in Orinin, Russia, through the courtesy of Harry Berman, manager.

The opening of the new Avalon Theatre, Park Heights Avenue and Howard Place, under the management of Arthur B. Price, who manages several other theatres in Baltimore, has been postponed until April 16th.

Minneapolis

THE New State Theatre in St. Paul, owned by Oliver Rowe and William Mustard, exhibitors of that city, was robbed last week by a bandit who held up Miss Ann Anderson, the cashier, and escaped with $475 in cash. At the exact time the holdup was taking place, the audience was rocking with laughter over a stage holdup, in which a slapstick bandit was relieving a slapstick victim of his valuables. Mr. Rowe had just returned from Los Angeles, where he had been arranging for bookings for the $750,000 vaudeville and motion picture theatre which he and Mr. Mustard will build in St. Paul.

DR. J. B. JOHNSTON of Rock Hill, S.C., announces he has plans for a new theatre being drafted by A. D. Gilchrist, a local architect. The News Dispatch states that Dr. Johnston has made agreement with a unit of First National Pictures for operating the theatre at a recent conference.

Dr. H. H. Hutchinson, owner of the Lyric Theatre, Bladenboro, N.C., spent a day along Film Row the past week.

M. E. Wieman, manager of the local branch of Liberty Specialty Film Corporation, has recovered from an attack of "flu."

George Logan, owner of the Globe Theatre, Newbern, N.C., was a visitor along Film Row Monday.

E. D. Turner, president of the Carolina Theatres, Inc., who returned from Pittsburgh to attend the opening of the new theatre at Statesville, has returned to that city with his brother, Stanley Turner, for a brief stay.

Mr. and Mrs. Abe Rosen, of New York, are spending several weeks at the Charlotte Hotel. Mr. Rosen is president of the U. S. Film Transport Corporation with headquarters in Charlotte, and also president of the Rosen Transport [illegible]

A. J. Cook, owner of the Amuzu, Maiden, was along Film Row the past week.

William E. Drumbar, district manager of all Publix theatres in North and South Carolina, now has permanent offices in Charlotte, which will naturally make this city the center of Publix activities in these two states.

The Charlotte Film Board of Trade, at its semi-annual meeting, Monday, for the election of officers, chose the following: H. H. Everett, of Arthur C. Bromberg Attractions, president; John Fuller, of Fox Film Company, vice-president, and Merritt Davis, of Warner Brothers, secretary and treasurer. Appointments of standing committees have not yet been announced.

M. E. Warner, formerly owner of the Vamp Theatre, Barnwell, S.C., announces that he has sold this house to M. C. Diamond and Thomas K. Bolen.

H. R. Berry, owner of the Temple Theatre, Hartsville, S.C., was a visitor on Film Row during the week.

R. W. Early, of the Strand Theatre, Trion, N.C., spent Sunday and Monday in Charlotte.

[illegible] of Stevenson's Theatres, Inc., states that he has purchased two new Simplex projectors, two Cinephor [illegible] and other equipment from the local office of National Theatre Supply Company for his new theatre, at Hendersonville, N.C., which is scheduled to open Monday, March 28.

J. P. Gibson, owner of the Scotland Theatre, Laurinburg, N.C., paid Film Row a visit during the week.

George F. Lenehan, district manager for P.D.C., Southern Division, was in Charlotte during the week, together with L. J. Hackin, district manager for Producers' New England Division.

Gus Mitchell, of the Imperial Theatre, Newton, N.C., visited Film Row this week.

W. F. Lenehan, manager of P.D.C. exchange, is covering the territory in a brand new red roadster.

Wm. Sussman, representative of the booking department of Famous Players-Lasky, New York office, spent Monday and Tuesday in the Charlotte branch.

C. C. Stough, of the Davidson Theatre, Davidson, N.C., was in Charlotte during the week.

[illegible] in North Carolina for Famous Players-Lasky, left Sunday for Atlanta, from where he will be transferred [illegible] the company as salesman.

R. B. Wilbanks, manager of Famous Players-Lasky's Charlotte branch, left Friday for Atlanta, where he will spend several days, returning Monday with his family, who have been visiting in Atlanta for several weeks.

C. J. Brennan, publicity director of the new Carolina Theatre, and E. E. Whittaker, manager of the Imperial Theatre, addressed the Better Films Committee Monday night at the monthly meeting at the Public Library.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Arkansas will hold their convention in Little Rock on April 3rd and 4th. Headquarters will be established at the Lafayette Hotel.

Paul E. Krieger, manager of First National's Louisville exchange, has been given the management of the Cincinnati branch of First National. This is a well merited promotion for Mr. Krieger, who, during his six years as head of the Louisville office, has made a remarkable showing.

Portland, Ore.,

JOHN HAMRICK, owner of the Blue Mouse chain of theatres in the Pacific Northwest, has been in Portland to personally supervise the opening of "Don Juan" and the Vitaphone, now being installed in his local Blue Mouse Theatre. The opening took place on March 25.

Vic Gauntlett, director of exploitation for the Hamrick Theatres, is also on the job to see that the people of Portland are properly informed regarding the new marvel. H. G. Tasker, engineer for the Vitaphone Corporation of Los Angeles, is superintending the installation, and E. J. Cooper, instructor from the New York factory, is here to train the Blue Mouse operators in the handling of the machine.

Ivan MacLean, house manager of the Majestic Theatre, left last week for a four months' tour of the Orient. The Majestic recently closed for extensive alterations, involving an expenditure of $150,000 and approximately five months' time. When it re-opens the interior will have been completely rebuilt, with new equipment throughout. The Majestic was recently added to the chain operating under the United Artists banner.

Fred J. Lucas resigned his position as manager of the Peoples Theatre to assume similar duties for George Guthrie's Salem Theatres. Lucas is an accomplished artist as well as theatre manager and his drawings for newspaper advertisements have attracted widespread attention.

A rumor is current that the Multnomah Theatres Corporation, a ramification of Carl Laemmle's theatrical interests, operating a chain of suburban theatres in Portland, are seeking an East Side location on which to build a 2,000-seat house. The largest theatre they now operate is the Bagdad, which was opened January 14. The Lincoln, a 750-seat house, is the most recent addition to their chain, having been in operation since March 9.

The Peoples Theatre, formerly a thirty-five and fifty cent house, followed its road show run of "Beau Geste" with a policy of straight twenty-five-cent admission, using principally program first-runs, with an occasional second-run of an outstanding hit. With the installation of Vitaphone, the Blue Mouse, which has been the twenty-five-cent downtown theatre for several years, goes to fifty cents. It is likely that many of the former Blue Mouse customers will find a new home for entertainment at the Peoples.

Ground was broken Monday, March 21, for the new office and theatre building which the Weatherly Company will erect at the intersection of Grand Avenue and East Morrison streets. The office building will be twelve stories high and the theatre building five, with a 2,000 seating capacity. W. E. Tebbetts, formerly manager of the Highway and Hollywood (East Side) theatres, will operate the new house.

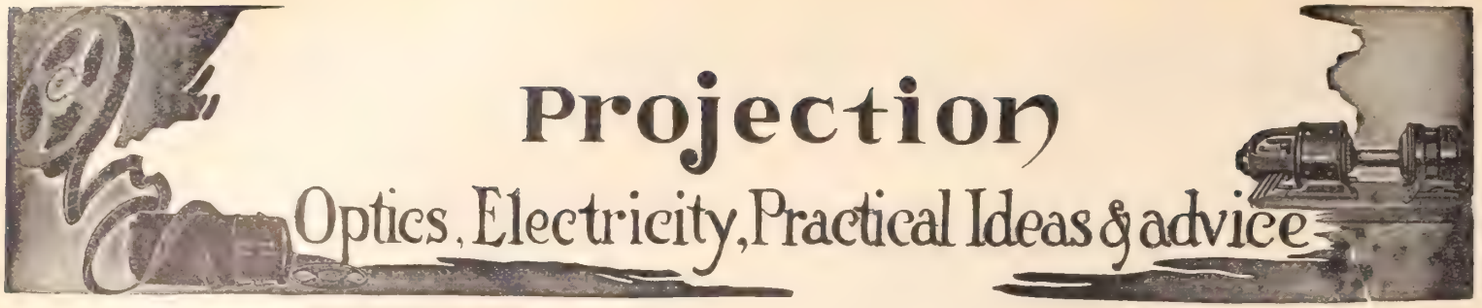
Plans are being completed by B. Marcus Priteca, Seattle architect, for a new 1,800-seat house for Pantages on the East Side in Portland. The building will be built under the supervision of Earl Newcomb, who served in a similar capacity during the construction of their recently opened West Side house.

Oklahoma

A PREVIEW last Tuesday evening was held in the Pathe screening room to an audience of thirty or more made up of the school board, members of the Izaak Walton League, and newspaper folks.

Roy McGaughey has sold his Liberty Theatre at Foss, Okla., to John Lawrance and O. B. England, of Carter, Okla. Mr. McGaughey is now operating the New Theatre, which he is leasing from S. H. James. Previous to the leasing by McGaughey, the New was under lease by Lisle Boggs.

W. C. Taylor, former exploitation man for Paramount, and "Spot" Dunbar, former exhibitor at Drumright, have joined the Arctic-Nu-Air Controlled Air Systems.



We understand that the old Rex Theatre at Tulsa, which has been closed for a couple of years or so, is being reopened by Willard and Son.

E. V. Weaver was in town this week and closed the deal with the Griffith Amusement Co. for the purchase of their Rex Theatre at Yale, Okla. Mr. Weaver already owns the Yale Theatre there, and now has the entire theatre line-up in Yale.

According to reports this week, the new theatre to be erected in Shawnee, Okla., by the Griffith Amusement Company will be ready for occupancy by June 15th instead of in the fall as first intended. This theatre will seat somewhere between 1,500 and 2,000.

Another theatre for Shawnee is already being prepared for by Jake Jones, the former owner of the Cozy there. This theatre will be opened July 1st.

C. E. Wagner, manager of the Griffith theatres in Elk City, Okla., is starting out on a newly created position of special exploitation man for the Griffith Amusement Company. Mr. Wagner will visit the forty-odd theatres owned by this company in Oklahoma and Texas.

Inquiries and Comments

Effect of Aperture Size on Screen Illumination

PART IV

IN this section of the discussion between Arthur Gray of Boston and the Editor, concerning the possible effect which an increase in the size of the aperture in a motion picture projector would have upon screen intensity, we will give the results of some simple photometric tests which were conducted to check the statements made in the first part of our answer to Gray's arguments. (See preceding issue.)

As will be recalled from a reading of the projection department in last week's issue of the NEWS we claimed that the reason Gray observed an appreciable increase in screen intensity when he opened the iris shutter (in front of the condenser lenses on his Brenkert Effect Projector, on which he conducted the test), and then increased the focal length of the projector lens to keep the size of the projected "spot" the same as it was in the other, shorter, focal length projection lens system, with which the comparison was made, was because the effective, or working, diameter of the projection lens was increased, and hence, the screen intensity rose in direct proportion to the increase in effective area of the lens.

Used "Over-sized" Lens

Gray, in effect, used an "over-sized" projection lens, which, in both cases, was far larger than that required to pick up the entire light beam and consequently, while no change in the physical size of the projection lens was made, nevertheless a real change in effective size resulted, which was responsible for the increased screen intensity he observed.

The size of the aperture (iris opening) had nothing whatever to do with this increased screen intensity, and if he had used two lenses of, say, one-inch diameter in each case he would not have observed any change in screen intensity when switching from one system to the other.

The fact that Gray conducted his test with a stereopticon optic system was responsible for the natural error he made because it is seldom that the projection lens of such a system, when used with an arc source of light, is completely filled—or reaches the saturation point—with light. The lens is always larger than required, except when such diffusing objects as design slides, etc., are being projected.

If he had used a motion picture projection system, he would not have made this error, because it is seldom—except on very short focal length lenses—that the projection lens is not completely filled—or saturated—with light, so that with such a system, any widening of the angle of the light beam passing through the aperture will not result in increased screen intensity unless the physical diameter of the projection lens is also increased to pick up this extra light.

Results of Photometric Tests

In the photometric tests conducted, the results of which will now be given, a Macbeth illuminometer, which is generally considered to be the standard portable instrument for accurate results, was used.

No effort was made to achieve extreme accuracy, as it was felt that the nature of the test did not warrant such a procedure since the differences in screen intensity, if they existed at all, would be of a large order. The results of these tests, therefore, are accurate to within 10 per cent, which is satisfactory for our purposes.

Actually the percentage error is less than this, but the limit is 10 per cent.

The first test consisted of duplicating Gray's original test wherein a stereopticon system, as found in the Brenkert effect projector, with an iris shutter in front of the converging condenser lens, was used in combination with a short focal length projection lens of 3 inches diameter (the standard with this particular machine).

For the purpose of obtaining a steady source of light, a 1,000-watt incandescent lamp was used in each of the two systems under comparison. This iris shutter, of the short focal length system, was opened to the point where a "spot," 3 feet 6 inches in diameter was projected onto the screen at a distance of 27 feet.

The intensity of illumination on the screen was then measured and recorded.

The second "stereo" system was exactly the same as the first with the exception that a long focal length projection lens was used and the iris shutter opened to the point where a 3 "spot," 3 feet 6 inches in diameter was again formed on the screen at the same distance of 27 feet.

The intensity of illumination with this system was also measured and recorded in the same manner as the first.

We then had two separate stereopticon systems, the same in all respects, except that one used a short focal length projection lens and a small iris opening, whereas the other used a long focal length projection lens with a correspondingly larger iris opening in order to give the same size of projected "spot" at the same throw.

Here are the results of the above test.

System No. 1

Light source .....1,000 Watt, 120 Volt, incandescent lamp
Projection lens f ...11 inches
Projection distance...27 feet
Iris shutter opening..1 11/16 inches
Size of projected spot.3 feet 6 inches
Intensity of screen illumination .....12.8 foot-candles

System No. 2

Light source .....1,000 Watt, 120 Volt, incandescent lamp
Projection lens f ...17 inches
Projection distance...27 feet
Iris shutter opening..2½ inches
Size of projected spot.3 feet 6 inches
Intensity of screen illumination .....26.5 foot-candles

Immediately after making this test and recording the results, the editor started to look around for the reason for the difference in screen intensity. He had not far to look. One glance at the projection lenses told the story.

The size of the light source image as projected on the face of the 3-inch diameter projection lens in system No. 1 measured 1 x 1¼ inches.

The effective, or working, area of this lens was, therefore:

$$\text{Area}=1 \times 1\tfrac{1}{4}$$
$$=1/25 \text{ sq. inches}$$

The rest of the lens area of this 3-inch lens could be tossed out of the window for all the good it did in providing light to the screen.

The size of the light source image, as projected on the face of the 3-inch diameter projection lens in system No. 2, measured 1½ x 1¾ inches.

The effective area of this lens was, therefore,

$$\text{Area}=1\tfrac{1}{2} \times 1\tfrac{3}{4}$$
$$=2/625 \text{ sq. inches}$$

Illuminated Increase Due to Larger Effective Lens Area

Now let us compare the two screen intensities, as measured with the photometer with each other. We find that system No. 2 gives a little more than twice the intensity as does system No. 1, as follows:

$$\text{Ratio}=\frac{26.5}{12.8}$$
$$=2.07$$

Now let us compare the effective lens areas of both systems in order to find out whether this difference in screen intensity can be accounted for in this manner. We have, as follows:

System No. 1, lens area=1.25 sq. inches.
System No. 2, lens area=2.625 sq. inches.

$$=2.10$$

This agrees almost exactly with the ratio of the measured screen intensities and so proves that the larger effective lens area of system No. 2 is responsible for the increased screen intensity obtained with this system.

Total Lumen Comparison

Let us now go back to the iris openings and compare the total lumens passing through each opening with total lumens as measured on the screen.

System No. 1

Iris shutter opening=1-11/16 inches
Area of opening=3.14 x 0.85 x 0.85
=2.27 sq. inches

System No. 2

Iris shutter opening=2½ inches
Area of opening=3.14 x 1.25 x 1.25
=4.91 sq. inches

Ratio=
2.27
=2.16

The ratio of the respective screen lumens is as follows:

System No. 1

Area of projected 3 ft. 6 in. spot=3.14 x 1.75 x 1.75=9.6 sq. ft.
Measured intensity=12.8 foot-candles.

Lumens=Area x Intensity
=9.6 x 12.8
=123 lumens

System No. 2

Area of projected 3 ft. 6 in. spot=9.6 sq. ft.
Measured intensity=26.5 foot-candles
Lumens=9.6 x 26.5
=255 lumens

The ratio of the screen lumens is therefore:

Ratio=255
=2.07

This agrees almost exactly with the ratio of the iris openings, and thus shows that where the projection lens is large enough to accommodate the full beam in each case, the screen lumens (hence intensity) will be directly proportional to the size of the respective iris openings.

Phila. Local Encourages "Better Projection"

Operator's Local No. 307, I.A.T.S.E., of Philadelphia, Pa., have started a school in better projection for their members, the first session of which was held at midnight on Monday, March 7th.

Before a record attendance of almost two hundred members, Irving Samuels, president of the Automatic Devices Company, manufacturers of the Stabilarc motor-generators, addressed the school on the subject of "Current Requirements for Picture Arcs."

The relative advantages and disadvantages of the various forms of current supply for motion picture arcs were thoroughly covered and the popular interest in the subject was evidenced by the numerous questions asked at the conclusion of the talk.

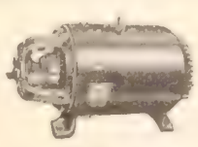
Colored District Grows

3 De Luxe Theatres Projected in Chicago's Fast Growing Negro Section

ANOTHER big motion picture theatre, the third projected within as many months, is planned for Chicago's rapidly growing colored district.

The latest project is in many ways a composite of the two previously announced and is unusual in some respects. Its roof garden, for instance, will be in the basement. It will be of Moorish architecture, reminiscent of the finest buildings of ancient African civilization, and will cost $1,140,000.

Two sites on South Parkway between 40th and 47th streets are under consideration. The structure is to be known as the Sylvia-Augustine Theatre and Commercial building. It will be five stories in height, topped by a tall tower. The theatre portion will contain at least 2,500 seats, according to promoters of the project.



There will be shops on the first and second floors, offices on the upper floors and a Moorish terrace garden inspired by the gardens of the Alhambra in the basement. John Eberson, who designed the Capitol and other theatres controlled by the National Theatres corporation, is the architect, and it is said that the National Theatre Corporation will lease the theatre portion for twenty years.

The building is to be built by the Commonwealth Theatre Corporation composed of Attorney Benjamin A. Browning, E. F. E. Williams, Leon d'Harcourt Cornick and W. F. Parker. Jefferson A. Williams & Co. represent the owners.

National Supply Carries Large Relief Stock

According to report, the National Theatre Supply Company has over $120,000.00 (actual replacement value) invested in such equipment as projectors, mechanisms, intermittent movements, lenses, motors, generators, etc., which are kept on hand in all of their 31 branch stores ready for relief and emergency cases that may develop in theatres which the company serves.

At first thought this seems to be an unwarranted investment; but according to an official of the National organization, "it is one of the necessities of the business and by reason of it we are able to render a service that is needed in the theatre industry and we feel that this investment in emergency apparatus is completely justified."

Wide Interest Shown in Equipment Drive

Wide interest is already being shown in the campaign now being launched by the Theatre Equipment Association.

Membership in this organization is composed of the leading manufacturers, distributors and dealers throughout the United States and Canada.

It is a thoroughly independent movement to offer to exhibitors the services of that Association and its members to improve business conditions in the Motion Picture Industry.

The Association has adopted the slogan: "Better Equipment Means Better Business." This slogan, says Mr. Hertner, was adopted as a result of considerable discussion and the unanimous opinion that larger patronage invariably follows better equipment in the theatre.

Exhibitors are invited to write to the offices of the Association. Questions or problems will be handled by the respective members as every member of this Association is in position and eager to give constructive help in this way to the thousands of exhibitors throughout the country.

The officers and directors of the Association are as follows: J. H. Hertner, president; S. A. Louis, vice-president; S. S. Behrends, treasurer; S. S. Behrends, J. C. Brown, Walter Green, John H. Hertner, S. A. Louis, J. E. McAuley, I. L. Nixon, Irving Samuels and C. D. Struble.

The manufacturer and dealer members of this Association have large trained forces who are experts in their respective lines. It is really astonishing the wealth of technical information that can be secured through this organization if the exhibitor will take advantage of this information.

The Association is desirous of adding to its membership, as it is open to reliable manufacturers and dealers who wish to join in this movement.

Correspondence should be addressed to the Theatre Equipment Association, Old Colony Building, Chicago, Ill.

S. M. P. E. Arranging Fine Norfolk Program

W. C. Kunzman, chairman of the Arrangements Committee of the spring meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers to be held at the Hotel Monticello, Norfolk, Va., April 25th to 28th, announces that a splendid social and business program is being arranged. In addition to a number of features specially prepared for the ladies, there will be a golf tournament and oyster roast at Virginia Beach.

Twenty-nine papers have already been sent in and a full list of these will be given out at a later date.

The industry in all its branches is beginning to come to a better realization of the importance of the conventions of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers and it is believed that there will be an exceptionally large attendance at the Norfolk meeting.

Heywood-Wakefield Issues New Catalogue

The Heywood-Wakefield Company, of Boston, Mass., has just published a very attractive catalogue on theatre seats.

This book contains illustrations of the complete line of theatre seats made by that company.

Copies of this catalogue may be had upon request from the Heywood-Wakefield Company, 209 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Prosperity Continues in Equipment Field

Further indication of prosperity among equipment manufacturers in the motion picture field is evidenced in a recent communication from the Kilgen Organ Company, reporting that during the past thirty days they have received several new orders, all well scattered throughout the country.

"The Show"—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Capitol Theatre, New York City

Sun: "'The Show's' the thing. Not since 'The Unholy Three' has Mr. Browning turned out such a melodramatic shocker. . . . Swift, thrilling cinema, excellently photographed, lighted and titled. Gilbert excellent and human; Miss Adoree charming and sympathetic."

American: "Tod Browning did excellent job of it. Settings picturesque and unique. Sideshow stuff is excellent and tempo and interest speedily increase as story reaches climax. Highly entertaining and gives John Gilbert another opportunity to prove that he is perhaps the cleverest actor on the screen today."

Post: "There's nothing quite like good hair-raising melodrama when it is well done, and melodrama screened by Tod Browning is apt to be very well done, indeed."

Mirror: "Snappy and unusual story. Miss Adoree one of the shining lights of modern filmdom. . . . So tonight, if you are searching for good picture, cast glance at 'The Show.'"

World: "Tod Browning has made most colorful plot and has swept it through its reels in series of beautifully composed and photographed scenes. He had, it is true, an excellent cast to work with."

Evening World: "John Gilbert, Renee Adoree and Lionel Barrymore in well constructed and excellently directed melodrama. Besides, picture contains thrills, situations and suspense that fairly made audience gasp. It is 'Liliom' of screen."

News: "Superb thriller. . . . Tod Browning's direction is all that can be asked. Photography on production especially lovely."

Journal: "Tod Browning has a flair for unusual and some of illusions are remarkable. . . . Gilbert does excellent work."

"Don Juan" and Vitaphone—Aldine Theatre, Philadelphia

Evening Ledger: "The Vitaphone reproductions were for the most part faultless. 'Don Juan' is really the high-water mark in the costume drama, lavish to a degree and splendidly appointed in the minor scenes."

Evening Bulletin: "Held in wonderment by its possibilities, audience was plainly moved and thrilled by the initial showing of the Vitaphone. 'Don Juan' is a thrilling melodrama, splendidly staged."

Daily News: "The most perfect synchronization of film and record thus far achieved by science. It's a great picture and John is the principal part of it."

Sun: "'Don Juan' is really a gorgeous and magnificent picture. And those who have not seen the Vitaphone should visit the Aldine."

Morning Ledger: "It is so well done and capably acted that 'Don Juan' becomes one of the most thrilling and compelling of feature pictures. The Vitaphone is a fascinating development in the art of motion pictures, a treat alike for the film fan and music lover. 'Don Juan' is a worthy photoplay to accompany it."

Record: "The combination program with 'Don Juan' as the screen play was ideal."

Gazette-Democrat: "John Barrymore and the Vitaphone are fortunate indeed in having so stirring a vehicle as 'Don Juan' to mark their joint entry at the Aldine. The Vitaphone accompaniment is likely to be the talk of all Philadelphia."

"Full of excitement. I'll bet you won't leave your op'ry chair until the picture is finished."

Grace Kingsley, Los Angeles Times

"Will go great with any audience. There is a storm at sea that is, if you will pardon the slang, a humdinger."

James De Tarr, Los Angeles Examiner

$1.65 Top

"A picture of much color, spirited melodrama, scenic beauty. Technical skill has seldom surpassed this depiction of nature's power. All the clash and romance that big drama needs are inherent in it."

Monroe Lathrop, Los Angeles Express

"American audiences are going to like it. It has the ingredients that spell box office. There is a refreshing difference about this production, and the ever stimulating magic of the sea goes a long way toward satisfying a taste for the unusual. Glamorous enough to lure almost anyone to the life of a sailor."

Guy Price, Los Angeles Herald

"All the glory of successful patriotic achievement permeates throughout a plot which gathers momentum and carries on to a climax as stirring as ever imagination conceived. It is impossible to comprehend how this picture can be anything but a success. The latest De Mille triumph must take a permanent place as one of the finest things ever accomplished in the interest of popularizing that luminous but brief period when American assiduity gained for the country complete mastery of the sea. Enthuses the spectator to unreserved heights. Unbounded credit is due William Boyd, a star indeed worthy of attention. Boyd's portrayal is minutely perfect."

What I Think of

by

ANTONIO G. QUATTRINI

Antonio G. Quattrini is one of the best known writers and journalists of Italy. He is the author of fifty-six novels of adventures which have all been translated into French and Spanish. He recently took part in the great flight of the "Norge" from Rome to Spitzenberg as correspondent. His interesting and glowing comments on "Fighting Love" are authoritative and convincing.

Antonio G. Quattrini, on right, with General Umberto Nobile, Commander of the "Norge", and his famous dog Titina, who accompanied General Nobile on his successful flight over the North Pole.

IT is always with an instinctive feeling of suspense that one attends the showing of a motion picture produced by artists unfamiliar with the surroundings which they are trying to portray. Even though the scenic effects reach a high artistic value, the reality of the background is not enough, especially where the drama is the result of a conflict of passions. And since each and every nation feels its own individual passions in its own individual manner and has its own way of displaying them, it is to be supposed that the perfect representation of such feelings may not be possible, except to those whose blood is fired with the fervor of those same passions.

Jetta Goudal

It is with this idea that I set myself to the task of viewing this drama of Italian locale, presented by artists who are not Italian. And now I must confess that had I not known previously that other than Italian artists would pass before me on the screen, if from their names I had not guessed their nationality, I could have very easily declared that "Fighting Love" was an Italian picture, executed by Italian artists

JETTA GOUDAL in "FIGHTING LOVE"

Henry B. Walthall

capable of feeling love and hate, those elemental human passions, in a thoroughly Italian way. Colonel Navarro has all the dash, the generosity the enthusiasm, the high sense of honor, the boundless patriotism of the Italian soldier. Mr. Walthall lives his part so realistically, represents it with such deep humanity that he stirs the emotions to their very depths, almost robs you of breath. The scene of his return to his home is so true and given in such a truly Italian way that all Italians, and not Italians only, but all those who have lived the alternate vicissitudes of life and war, feel themselves gripped by the magic power of his acting.

Miss Jetta Goudal, French and thus more akin in soul to the Italian Miss Torini, has executed her part with less effort, but not with less ability. This young artist, whom I see on the screen for the first time, seems to possess the artistic ability of rendering with the greatest simplicity, the most difficult expressions of soul feeling. Her feelings are never complicated by thought. She lives in so human away both her sorrows and her joys that these reflect themselves upon her face with so great a simplicity that the make-believe is utterly destroyed. Thus she does not "act her part" but "lives it", giving it reality and exceptional life. If the bad habit, now so common to many great motion picture actresses, to deform with foolish complications all human sentiment, in order to create more morbid effects, does not rob her of her natural instinct, this young artist is destined to give great things to the public.

Victor Varconi

"I leave my Bride in your care."

The two principal characters of this drama have been splendidly supported by the other members of the cast who work in complete harmony with them.

The drama, which has above all, the virtue of withdrawing from the usual conventional prattle and rising to great heights of reality of life and environment, seems a great promise of the motion picture art to once more look for its subjects in the human annals of every day life, with all the horrors of its defects, but also with the beauty and purity of its most noble passions.

"A BIG WESTERN that should bring home the bacon"

Albert Rogell

MEN of D

"MEN OF DARING"
Universal.
Produced by.....Albert Rogell
This is a big western that on its merits deserves special attention when run. With an historical background, it offered wide scope for thrilling scenes which was fully taken advantage of by Rogell.
The production is spectacular, has real thrills and plenty of western action.
The action takes place in the days of the pioneers in the west, and the conflict and fight for supremacy between the reds and the whites works up to a corking climax.
A crackerjack western that should bring home the bacon for exhibitors catering to western fans.

Knocking Them Dead Wherever

"Grossed Most" —at Anniston, Ala.

"Grossed more money at the box office than any other picture played without vaudeville since I have had the Lyric Theatre"—says E. R. Collins.

"Picked Up Each Day" —at Denver, Colo.

"Very good business for entire three days' run. Picture really picked up with each day's business. A real attraction"—says E. W. Nesbit, Alpine Theatre.

"Should Not be Missed!" —at Rochester, N.Y.

"'Michael Strogoff' is a film in the class of 'Ben-Hur,' 'Beau Geste,' and 'The Big Parade,' though it resembles none of them. It should not be missed by those who like good movie fare"—says Rochester Times Union.

"Held Over Extra Two Weeks!" —at Toronto, Can.

"Opened at the Regent Theatre. After the reviews the picture picked up splendidly and was held over another two weeks"—says Variety.

"Led the Town" —at Portland, Ore.

"'Michael Strogoff' went into the Columbia Theatre with a big bang! Led the town. Held over"—says Variety.

"Something Just As Good"

Try and Get the Public to Believe It!

You can't fool the public!

It has many times heard the words "Something Just As Good." It knows that it is the cloak used to hide an imitation,—that the imitation is the best evidence of the success of the original and its popularity.

Business on the Pathe News has never been better than right now.

Contracts are pouring in. The many warm exhibitor friends that Pathe News has made during the sixteen years in which it has created motion picture history, by signed contracts, word of mouth, by letter, are telling the story of a devotion and a loyalty such as the business has never seen. These exhibitors know, their public knows, that there can only be one best, and that is the first of all news reels, the one that today represents the accumulated experience of sixteen years, the expenditure of vast sums of money, the united labors of an incomparable staff that is intact, loyal and world wide in its scope.

Competition is nothing new to the Pathe News. It has met it again and again in the past, and is still the best. That others now seek to try their hand does not alter the situation. Pathe pledges that the Pathe News will continue to be the best.

Box office values, news reels and popularity with the public are not created over night. Just try and get the public to believe that something else is "just as good" as the Pathe News!

"The World," Omaha—Still Another York Cooled Playhouse

It won't be long now! The hot, sticky days are just around the corner. When they arrive, will you be prepared to dispense comfort as well as entertainment? The crowds go where they can obtain both. The "World" in Omaha knew this, two years ago. That's why they installed a York.

Write for a list of York cooled and conditioned theatres—it is imposing.

This is the York carbon dioxide unit, direct connected to synchronous motor. The "World" uses two of them.

Rex, Toppler of Records, Now Tops His Own

For three successive years Rex has been among the greatest money-getting stars of the business. Exhibitors' ratings in the trade papers prove it.

In 1924 "The King of Wild Horses," one of the ten best.

1926 "The Devil Horse," one of the best money pictures of the year.

Now comes "No Man's Law," easily his best.

---Proven Value

You are thinking pretty hard right now about what pictures you are going to buy for next season. It won't be long now till the salesmen are asking you to put your name on the dotted line. And there is one big thought that I believe you will have in mind the same as I have it in mind. When you come to signing on that dotted line you will want to be buying product of proven value. No guess work. You want proof!

Among all the big companies that will be selling short subjects for next season. Educational is the only true specialist, the only one whose sole interest is in giving you the best in one and two-reel pictures, and in backing them up with service that makes them of the greatest value to your box-office.

For seven years this has been our only aim. Seven years of specialized experience. And every year a bigger number of exhibitors have played Educational Pictures. Why? For only one reason. Because they have made money for these showmen. There is no guess work about Educational Pictures. They are the product of specialists—a product of proven value.

New Era at Hollywood

Second of a Series of Articles on the Production Centre

By William A. Johnston

¶ Europe has come to Hollywood.
¶ A new woman director and the passing of the old idea that there were only few megaphone-wielders and they with God-given genius.
¶ As the younger talent comes along, the opportunity for bunkum and bluff decreases.
¶ Some of the actual "shots" from "Wings" show that here's a picture likely to be rated with the greatest.
¶ Hollywood likes Jannings and Jannings likes Hollywood.
¶ Menjou makes an observation on the foreign invasion.
¶ Cecil De Mille as a creator of new talent for the screen.
¶ Many roadshow and long-run pictures in sight foreshadow widening audiences in America.
¶ Types of pictures changing and theatres changing in their turn.

IN my last article I spoke of two important, even revolutionary, changes in the Hollywood studios, destined to have much to do with the future of American pictures.

(1) The very evident leaning toward foreign types, themes, atmosphere,—the actual making of the international picture, in other words.

(2) The passing of the old order of directors, players, production methods and vogues; and the new era, gathering fast increasing strength of new film folks and new production policies of every kind.

* * * *

Let us take a quick trip over the always interesting Paramount lot and see if our suppositions apply here.

These are the former United Studios, but greatly improved. The Administration Building is of the same compact type as the former one on the old Famous-Lasky lot, which is now a realty subdivision. Between the Administration Building and the stages are sightly lawns flanked on one side by a novel departure in the way of dressing rooms—a block long row of several story buildings, each on a different type of city architecture and constantly useful for exterior shots.

A New Woman Director

As I drove up to the Administration Building with B. P. Schulberg, production head, he touched his hat, in business-like fashion, to a young woman leaving the lot. This was Dorothy Arzner, who was recently taken from the cutting room and made a full-fledged director. Her first picture, now well along, is "Fashions for Women." I am to see shots of it in a few days. It is already designated sure-fire box-office. Raymond Hatton is in it and trouping along as merrily as though he had had no bitter breach with his splendid team mate, Wallace Beery. (This breach, I believe, is already healed, and happily so. To separate these two, each feeding the other's business so successfully, would be as senseless as unfortunate.)

So now we have a second woman director, in addition to Lois Weber, who for years has held this lone place in production ranks. And we shall have more, just as fast as more ability steps forth from the various departments of the now highly organized production business.

That is the important thing—that well-grounded experience makes real talent and that such talent is now being recognized.

William A. Johnston's Survey

It is a revealing thing to one who remembers the days when the business only boasted less than half a dozen directors, at the most; and thereafter the years of the producers' helpless dependence upon a slowly increasing number, most of whom were recklessly and foolishly believed to have dropped straight from Heaven with God-given genius.

If our production regime is now a large departmental laboratory, able to graduate workers with minds well trained in picture values and picture construction, we shall have able chiefs come to the top just as they do in the newspaper world and other fields of creative work.

We have been looking for ability a good deal from the top down.

It is significant, I think, that a woman should come forth and fill a directorship, for there are those who do not believe a woman can wield a megaphone. It indicates, at least, a genuine hunt for trained ability and a real opportunity for writers, cameramen, technicians in general.

At any rate, it would seem that those who are leading directors today will have to look sharp if they are to retain their leadership. There is going to be a lot of real competition. There will be less opportunity for bunkum and bluff. Production is moving fast these days. That is apparent enough to one who comes here but once a year.

"Wings" Looks Big

The two next individuals I met on the Paramount lot were William Wellman and Richard Arlen. Wellman is directing "Wings," and Arlen and Charles Rogers play the male leads. Clara Bow and Jobyna Ralston are the other topliners.

Here's a crowd of youngsters—Wellman, an assistant director but a short time ago—and yet, unless the picture suffers mercilessly in its editing, "Wings" will be acclaimed one of the greatest of all pictures.

That which I saw of it, and it was a good deal of film, had mostly to do with Arlen and Rogers and their thrilling airplane battles in the sky. It was marvelous. Such realism as this has never before appeared in motion pictures. "Wings" will be acclaimed more than a picture. It will set new standards of endeavor.

These winged combatants fight to the death above the clouds, twelve thousand feet over the earth. It is breath taking, brutally realistic, incomprehensibly vivid. Aviators get their death wounds; planes are crippled and with a spurt of black smoke and flame go hurtling down to the floor of rolling clouds, and through them, dimly go crashing to the earth.

Here are some of the bits:

A plunge, by Rod Rogers, of six thousand feet with no controls, and the camera taking it all in a close up.

A running fight between a German Gotha with two supporting Fokkers and two American Spads over miles of sky, with close-ups and long shots, correct in manoeuvres, desperate and daring at every point, a veritable reproduction of the world sky battles we have read of and so far only seen with the mind's eye.

Arlen's crash behind the German lines and his thrilling escape in a captured plane only to be shot down by his own "buddy" and his plane sent hurtling through the wall of a church.

Rogers' strafing flight over the enemy lines, —raining his machine gun fire on transport trains, marching troops, an officer's automobile, etc. I could write at length about the details of this remarkable production. The camera pictures are superb. Its scope may be had from the fact that several regiments of artillery and infantry, a fleet of tanks, a machine gun corps—some 6,000 men in all,—took part. There were over 100 aviators, many of them daredevils, and 12 camera planes. Its love story is tense and strong.

A New Hollywood

From the Folies Bergere set in "Wings"—a large and imposing one, in which there were quite as many foreigners as though the production had taken place in a French studio—I went to another stage where Adolphe Menjou was producing.

Lawrence Grant was rehearsing a scene in which he played the part of a Central European King, dining incognito. To the rear sat the members of the cast.

of the Production Situation

"Foreign actors," said Menjou. "Look at them. There's a Swiss, and next a Belgian; there's a Hungarian, a Russian—well, they are all from the other side. And trained actors, too."

"Is this deliberate?" I asked—"This very evident leaning, in the big studios, toward cosmopolitan casts, old world settings and atmosphere? Are the producers acting with excellent foresight—and with the realization that American pictures must expand in appeal?"

"Well," said he, "whether they are or not, there's a foreign invasion here. A new Hollywood has arisen. It is getting more cosmopolitan day by day. There seems no end to it. Every day the trains bring in new people from the theatres and studios of the old world."

Jannings' Work

On another stage I found Emil Jannings in a close-up scene, one of the finishing ones in his first American picture, "The Way of All Flesh," directed by Victor Fleming. It was a real privilege to see this finished actor at work. His make-up had required more than two hours of painstaking effort.

Jannings is evidently a fixture here. The studio finds him a fine, conscientious artist, wholly absorbed in his work, affable, free from all affectation. And Jannings likes Hollywood and his studio facilities. He is pleased with his picture. It could not have come forth, he says, from the Ufa studios. He is enthusiastic about his next picture, a Salvation Army and underworld theme from an original by Von Sternberg.

Just a word here about Victor Fleming,—illustrative of the way directors work these days.

"What do you do after this picture?" I asked.

"Rest," he said. "I haven't had a day off in ten months. And recently I've been working day and night—doing night sequence on 'The Rough Riders' while I was directing 'The Way of All Flesh' by day."

So here's a bird's-eye view of one day on the Paramount lot; and I trust I have given the reader the impression I received; a double one.

The up-and-coming youth of the screen—lot of impetuous and ambitious striving. A lot of hard work.

The widening of picture color and appeal—from Hollywood to foreign shores.

And the double regime is in force everywhere.

Over at the De Mille studios I found the entire organization elated over the discovery of a new personality—a young and beautiful actress from the German vaudeville ranks, who had applied modestly for a place as an "extra"; more elated in fact than over the ready success of "The Yankee Clipper" as a sound and healthy box-office picture. Cecil De Mille, by the way, deserves general thanks for his continued and keen striving to create new talent for the screen.

And over on the Fox lot I found Murnau delighted with his "Sunrise," and happy in this, the first year of his five-year American contract, more than satisfied with the resources and cooperation given him; and, on the other hand, the Fox organization glad to have not only Murnau's ability, but the pace he sets in sincere and effective production work.

And so it goes. Europe has come to Hollywood—whether or not Hollywood reached out for Europe. Europe, and a good deal of the best of Europe, is here today. And so, by design or accident, or more probably some measure of each, the international type of picture is being already made; and, undoubtedly, this same type of picture will continue to be made, still more generally and still more distinctively. For the box-office returns will, I believe, greatly encourage it.

American Audiences Increasing

We must make pictures today not only for the world wide audience, but also for the ever widening audiences of our own United States. The American movie patronage has been vastly increased the past two years by our better pictures. But 1927 will, by all signs, set a new mark in this respect. There will be many roadshow and long-run pictures. And these pictures, by virtue of their themes, treatment and settings, will appeal to a good many millions beyond the regular day by day theatre patronage.

There is, as I have said, a decided breaking away from the former cycle of movie fare—the sexy picture, the flapper vogue, the tried and true types of South Sea Island, horse race, fireman, automobile, north woods, etc., etc., drama.

All of which opens up a new and interesting situation with respect to theatres—the changing type of theatre to house the changing type of picture.

More of this interesting subject later.

The Week in Review

Comment on Passing Affairs

WHEN some future historian pens a sequel to "The Million and One Nights" we doubt if anything which he chronicles concerning the year 1927 will stand above the fact that on that date the motion picture was given official recognition as a business and as an art by the oldest university in America—and we hope that that historian does not fail to give a proper share of credit to Joseph P. Kennedy, president of Film Booking Offices.

Mr. Kennedy, fully aware of the importance to the industry of this recognition, gave up several weeks of his time almost exclusively to working with Harvard, remaining away from his desk. The plan for a series of lectures by leaders in the motion picture industry before the students of the Harvard School of Business Administration originated in a talk between Mr. Kennedy and the dean of the school, and the former volunteered to obtain the speakers.

He found them, as he puts it, "unwillingly willing" —appreciative of the honor accorded them but reluctant to pose as authorities before a class of students. They consented, however, and starting with Will H. Hays, such leaders as Adolph Zukor, William Fox, Marcus Loew, Jesse L. Lasky, Harry M. Warner, Sidney R. Kent, R. H. Cochrane, Sam Katz and Dr. A. H. Giannini gave the students the benefit of their experience and knowledge, with Cecil B. De Mille and Milton Sills still to appear.

The students, more than three hundred and fifty of them, received the lectures with avid interest and enthusiasm. Some thirty of them have already expressed an interest in entering the business side of pictures. They studied motion pictures in exactly the same way they would approach the automobile industry, the textile industry, or any other—a recognition which will have important consequences abroad as well as here.

OUT of this has come another important result—a plan by which Fogg Museum, of the Department of Fine Arts at Harvard, will select and preserve the most artistic pictures of each year in a special vault. The best pictures of the past 15 years are now being assembled by a committee headed by Prof. Chandler R. Post.

Thus, in one year, is the motion picture industry recognized by an outstanding educational institution as a business and an art worthy of a ranking with trades and arts which are thousands of years old and have a broad background of tradition.

LAST Saturday night at the Hotel Astor was held the Seventh Annual A. M. P. A. Dinner, which was also the First International Dinner—made so by the presence of 15 ambassadors from South and Central American countries. The affair was crowded to capacity.

Will H. Hays, acting as toastmaster, revealed a strong gift for humor, and read highly amusing telegrams from Will Rogers, Ralph Spence and Ring Lardner. The speakers included Ambassador Pueyrredon of Argentine, Ambassador Tocornal of Chile, Secretary of Commerce Herbert Hoover, Mayor James J. Walker of New York, A. M. Botsford and Walter F. Eberhardt. The annual burlesque newsreel, another by Rose Pelswick and a splendid musical program by members of the Capitol Family, plus a number from Chaplin, made up the bill.

Short Subject Service Guide

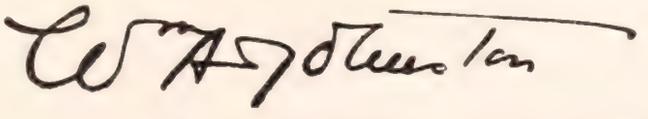
AT the outset, let's get this straight: the Short Subject Service Guide is not a "publicity section." It is a sincere effort to create a department just as distinctive and individual in its way as "The Showman" is in the theatre field.

The editorial material in the following pages, we believe, is constructive and means something to the exhibitor.

We believe, further, that the Short Subject deserves a specialized and dignified form of service which it has not hitherto received.

That's what we are trying to put into concrete form in our Service Guide—it will appear monthly within the covers of the News.

Can anybody, at this late day, doubt the importance of the Short Subject? If so, let him read this expression by Will H. Hays in presenting the Riesenfeld Medal:



"The motion picture industry started as an industry of short subjects. The first films were one- and two-reelers.

"The short subject has always been an essential part of the motion picture program. Its place was never more assured than it is today. Its future was never more bright.

"The public wants and demands diversity in its amusement. As important as the feature picture is, the exhibitor who overlooks the fullest opportunities and advantages of the short subject on his surrounding program is keeping money out of his pocket. He is overlooking a tremendous asset."

The coming season will see the largest volume of short subjects in the industry's history. Volume and diversity for the diversified program.

Our Short Subject Service Guide is in the interest of the diversified program, for that is the life-blood of the successful theatre today.

Double Feature Evil Growing

Survey of Exchange Centres Shows Practice on Increase in Many Territories Throughout U. S.

Compiled By E. G. Johnston

DECIDED increase in the double feature evil is revealed through a survey just completed by MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

First-hand reports from twenty-six exchange centers show that the double feature is used in seventeen of these territories. In nine it is virtually non-existent. But the striking fact is that in fourteen territories it is rapidly growing.

It is also apparent that where the increased use of the double feature prevails, it does so with a pronounced lack of goodwill on the part of a great many exhibitors, the New England zone being the one exception to the rule. In that territory the double feature has been more or less of a general policy for years.

The seriousness of the situation is shown by the action taken in Minneapolis and St. Paul, where the exhibitor organizations and exchangemen have taken what amounts to joint action to abolish the double bill.

Further analysis indicates that the growing use of added feature attractions has resulted from at least three conditions:

(1) Over-buying, with the result that superfluous bookings must be played off.

(2) Highly competitive situations.

(3) Attempts by neighborhood houses to compete with elaborate presentations offered by the larger theatres.

In common with the prevailing exhibitor opinion, MOTION PICTURE NEWS regards the playing of double features as an evil. In some cases, it has evidently been brought about by a few exhibitors in given sections, with others following, largely against their will, but because competitive situations are brought about.

It is obvious, also, that the playing of double features, in the vast majority of cases, does not make for diversified programs, which are the life of the picture theatres today. And the diversified program means, unquestionably, that short subjects must be taken into the reckoning.

Minneapolis

Construing the practice of the double feature as a great evil, which if allowed to pursue its course, would seriously menace their future business, the Exhibitors' Association of the Twin Cities in cooperation with the Film Board of Trade recently launched a campaign against its use, with the result that every exhibitor, with the exception of one, in these cities, entered into an agreement to refrain from using the double bill, providing, of course, that the various exchanges refuse to serve the necessary attractions.

In this case, the added feature secured its foothold in the ten-cent houses of the Gateway district and through competitive measures was well on its way toward being adopted by the majority of the suburban theatres until the time when the two above-named organizations decided to combat the movement.

As a further result of the outcome of this successful campaign, steps will be taken at the annual convention of the Northwest exhibitor association to be held at St. Paul, May 2, 3 and 4, to abolish the use of double feature programs in the entire Minneapolis territory and the association would further seek to make the ban embrace Minnesota and North and South Dakota.

New York City

Highly competitive conditions in certain neighborhoods, shortage of good, strong feature pictures that can be played alone, and over-buying due to selling methods of some of the branch exchanges are some of the reasons advanced as to why territory embraced by the Metropolitan district and northern New Jersey has shown a pronounced trend toward the use of the double feature program during the past twelve months. This condition of course exists in the numerous neighborhood sections of New York City, Brooklyn and the larger cities of New Jersey and the suburban sections of the latter. That the use of the double bill has grown to considerable proportions is evidenced by interviews with several connected with the local film trade, they claiming that at least seventy-five per cent of the neighborhood theatres use the added feature, with changes from two to three times a week.

As an instance of the strong hold gained by the double-feature program in this zone a condition existing in New Jersey may be cited: Out of a program analysis of eight circuit owned theatres of the better type and ten other houses which may be classed as a miscellaneous group, independently operated, the net result is that eighty-eight per cent of these theatres are using the added feature.

Fifty per cent of the eight circuit-owned houses feature a double bill to the extent of one hundred per cent while the balance of this group inclines toward the added attraction by eighty per cent. The average is ninety per cent.

In the group of the ten houses classed as miscellaneous and independently operated, six of these houses show double bills a full one hundred per cent, three, eighty per cent and one twenty per cent. This average is eighty-six per cent.

Thus, it will be seen that the average for the entire eighteen houses is eighty-eight per cent, as given above.

Quoting a remark made within the last few weeks by a prominent circuit theatre owner in New York City, "I've gotten into this double feature business for the usual reasons, competition and over-buying. It's not sound, but I can't let go. I'd like to."

Chicago

No decrease in the use of the double feature is in sight for Chicago exhibitors at the present time, according to the report from that city. Twenty-five per cent. of the theatres in that zone are said to be using the double bill, with others being added from week to week. Reasons advanced for the adoption of the practice are, keen competition in certain districts, and that exhibitors are over-bought. The latter means that they must provide an outlet for superfluous bookings; hence, the double feature days. A few claim that the double feature helps build up business for the "bad days," but on the whole the practice is looked upon as one that will prove a menace to Chicago's motion picture trade unless eradicated.

Los Angeles

In Los Angeles, the double bill is also on the increase and the consensus of opinion among exhibitors is that while they are fully aware of its evils, present conditions are such that they will go ahead with the presentation of double feature programs until some remedy suggests itself. In this zone the movement started with one lone theatre showing two features on the same bill. Other houses followed until practically every section in and around this territory has been affected to a marked degree.

Philadelphia

Generally disapproved of by Philadelphia exhibitors, the practice of using an added feature attraction has never gained headway of any concern in that city and surrounding territory and at present is confined to a very few of the small daily change neighborhood theatres in Philadelphia proper. Neither Philadelphia first-run houses or first-run key-city theatres have found it necessary to subscribe to the use of the double bill.

Cleveland

There has been no increase in the use of the double bill in the city of Cleveland owing to the fact that the use of them has been tried in the past and found wanting. In other words, the increase in revenue did not warrant the additional expense incurred by exhibitors to secure the added feature. The report adds that outside of the city of Cleveland, the problem has never been one to contend with.

Pittsburgh

Overbuying and the use of the double bill to clean up old product are the reasons advanced for the increase of the added feature in Pittsburgh territory, the movement having recently extended itself to the secondary key-towns and the smaller communities. The report states that the practice is decidedly on the increase.

Detroit

According to the Detroit Film Board figures for last year, the use of the double bill in that city has increased fully twenty per cent. during that period and is steadily growing. The reasons given for the increase are, overbuying, a general slump in trade and the doubling up on the weaker feature pictures.

Canada

Getting its foothold in the city of Montreal, where it has been more or less isolated until this season, the use of the double feature bill has spread to considerable extent in other sections of the Dominion. In Toronto, for instance, the added feature attraction has been adopted by practically all of the suburban houses.

Charlotte

The report from Charlotte indicates that in only one or two instances is the double feature bill being used, and even then, only at intervals. There is no increase forecasted for the double bill in this zone.

San Francisco

Double feature bills are on the increase in the city of San Francisco and its territory, according to report. Residential theatres and also houses throughout the entire zone are practically all using the added feature attraction, making changes in their programs at least twice weekly. A further statement as to reasons for the increase of the double feature points out that its use enables exhibitors to buy features in block series at much cheaper prices.

Oklahoma

While there has been no increase generally in Oklahoma territory, the movement has recently made headway in the city of Tulsa, although at present that city is said to be the only one practicing its use. In the Tulsa case, the double bill was first started by a second-run theatre and has since that time spread to other second- and third-run houses until practically all of them followed suit.

Short Subjects Bring New Talent, New Faces, New Methods, New Ideas to the Screen

By L. C. Moen

DOES an actor put over a particularly good bit of pantomime, well-timed and clearly registered? He probably learned it on the comedy lots. Does a cameraman offer an especially clever bit of trick photography in a feature? Probably a graduate of the slam-bang comedy school. Is a feminine star particularly beautiful and photogenic (as our French cousins say)? Does a feature contain a thrillingly fine bit of hair-raising melodrama? Trace back its director's professional pedigree, and you are likely to find a serial or two. Does a piece of "comedy construction" in a feature bring roars of laughter that enliven an otherwise dull work? Track down its parentage, and you will probably find that both gag and gag-man came from the short-subject fun factories.

Gloria Swanson

United Artists star, who began in Sennett comedies before De Mille discovered her

James Cruze

Paramount director, when a serial player with Thanhouser

Betty Compson

Universal star, at the time she joined Nestor Comedies

Louise Fazenda

Warner Bros. star, back when she clowned for Mack Sennett

For if there is anything new under the sun-arcs, it is pretty sure to have originated in the short subject field, whether it be a person, a process or an idea.

Consider, if you will, the much vaunted "camera angles" of the past year—the virus with which "Variety" inoculated American cameramen. Did it ever occur to you that years and years ago the lowly news cameramen were shooting down on parades from roofs and windows, shooting up at buildings, shooting from moving trains—doing everything but shooting around the corner?

Harold Lloyd

Paramount star, who began as Lonesome Luke in one-reelers

The same is true of trick photography in general. Nearly all of it had its origin on the comedy lot.

For that reason alone, if no other, short subjects would deserve to be loyally supported by the industry. Even though they were not good business in themselves, it would pay exhibitors to encourage the short subject producers and thereby keep alive the nearest approach to a training school which this business-art-industry boasts.

The Closed Door

PERHAPS no profession in the world maintains such a closed door against new faces, new talent, new ideas—despite loud and incessant cries for these items from executive headquarters. Certainly they want new faces—after someone else has discovered and developed them; they want fresh talent—after someone else has trained it; they must have new ideas, and take them—after someone else has tested them out and proved that they work. And that "someone else" is usually the short-subject producer.

Reginald Denny

Universal star, who was "made" by the "Leather Pushers" series

Feature producers can hire talent away from each other and from the short-subject companies, but the featurette producers must find and train their own. For that reason, their doors are more open to the promising beginner than are those elsewhere. If he or she shows promise, bits, small parts and leads may follow in more rapid sequence than takes place under the big tops of the feature studios.

A player with genuine latent ability may go from extra work to leads in a year or so on the comedy lot—three or four did this at Christie last year—after which a feature unit which didn't even afford extra work to the budding novice will bid for his or her services in a full-sized role.

The same is true of ideas. If they are so radical that their originator must promote his own production to demonstrate them, he is much more likely to be able to finance a short subject than a feature—and Ambitious talent of every description finds its first and best opportunity in the domain of the less-than-feature-length. But let's take a few specific cases, and see for ourselves how this has worked out.

Irving Cummings

Last thrilling, when he was playing in "The Diamond from the Sky"

NOT so much more than a decade ago a Nebraska youth with a quietly-engaging personality was haunting the studios for extra work, and finding it now and then at Universal and Keystone. The chance to create a comedy character came, and Lonesome Luke was the result. Later the trick make-up was discarded, to be replaced by a simple pair of shell-rimmed spectacles. Fifty-two one-reelers for Pathe, then a series of two-reel subjects, a three-reel—and so on, until full-length feature comedies were the order of the day, and the picture-going public the world over paid tribute to one of the most consistently successful screen artists—Harold Lloyd.

Fred Newmeyer

Feature comedy director, who rose to fame with Lloyd

A quiet little Englishman came to America with a vaudeville turn. His style of comedy and his character seemed promising for screen purposes, and for comedy he was signed. There followed a long series of single-reel films, some of which are still playing, and still doing business. The critics began to discover him—the highbrows discovered the movies, and hailed him as its first and only genius—his comedies increased in length—his contracts in size—and today the premiere of a Charles Spencer Chaplin comedy is a national, and even international, event.

A little girl in Chicago tramped around to the studios seeking extra work. Off to the Coast she went, finally, and there followed days as a Mack Sennett bathing beauty in the good old pie-throwing era. Cecil B. DeMille saw in one of her scenes what he felt to be a flash of dramatic genius, and he signed up the little girl who one day was to be known as the Marquise de la Falaise de la Coudray.

Then he bobbed up on the Coast, this time as a director—and one day "The Covered Wagon" came along and the public woke up to the fact that here was a directorial personality to be reckoned with. A few years later, and "Old Ironsides" added further lustre to the megaphone-wielding laurels of James Cruze.

FRED C. QUIMBY, [illegible] of M-G-M

M-G-M News to Be Made Like a Feature

Says Fred C. Quimby

AN earnest and definite effort to lift quality of news reel production to the highest point possible will be made by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer under its new Short Subjects Program, according to Fred C. Quimby, recently appointed to handle sales for the M-G-M Short Subject Department.

In a special interview for the NEWS, Mr. Quimby outlined the key policies which Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer plan to carry through in the line of production standards and sales distribution, placing special emphasis on the News Reel which will be issued twice weekly, beginning August 17 of this year.

Asserting that the new M-G-M News Reel would be "The Big Parade" of its class, Mr. Quimby declared:

"Is Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer likely to invest several hundred thousand dollars in a new product and commit itself to years of heavy expense to enter a highly competitive, restricted price market unless it has been assured of merchandise which will properly back up expensive sales effort?"

The immense resources and comprehensive news gathering facilities of the Hearst organization were suggested as an ample guarantee of the quality and service of the News Reel. Twenty-seven newspapers throughout the country, with a combined circulation of more than 10,000,000, are now operated by Mr. Hearst. More exclusive features are printed by these papers than in all their direct competitors. In addition, the number of Hearst-owned magazines greatly exceeds that of any other one publisher. These include such nationally famous publications as the American Weekly, which alone has a circulation of more than 6,000,000; Cosmopolitan, Good Housekeeping, Harper's Bazar, McClure's, Motor and Motor Boating, Smart Set, Town & Country and The International Studio.

World-Wide Service

Hearst maintains his own world-wide news gathering service; he is a direct competitor of the Associated Press and the United Press, and his telegraph service is used by several hundred influential newspapers, Mr. Quimby pointed out. The newspaper feature service of this big organization comprises a vast staff of special writers and cameramen in every corner of the globe. Furthermore, Hearst owns the largest news reel laboratory in the world—a plant (completed only last January) which is equipped with every modern device and improvement for producing superior work quickly. News reels are assembled and printed here, and mechanical delay has been reduced to an absolute minimum.

"The institution back of M-G-M News production is a highly organized news specialist," declared Mr. Quimby. "In equipment, personnel, judgment of news values, it is preeminent in its field.

"But make no mistake about the fact that the M-G-M News Reel will be produced by its own staff. It will be in just as direct competition with International News as the New York American is with the New York Journal, or with the Mirror, all of which are published by Hearst. We will have our own editors just as the American and Journal and Mirror do; our separate mechanical staffs, just as competing newspapers have; our own cameramen, technicians and cutters—in fact, a completely independent organization, always stepping out to beat competition.

"Mechanically, the M-G-M will receive the same careful laboratory treatment as that of our finest features. Toning and tinting will be employed extensively to enhance the artistic value of our product and fortify its wearing qualities—even the type used in titling has been specially selected to obviate monotony and provide flexibility.

Distinctive Arrangement

"A wholly distinctive arrangement of titles and subjects will give our News Reel a pronounced and pleasing individuality. It will differ as greatly from any other reel as one newspaper from another.

"The editorial policy of the News Reel is very definite," added Mr. Quimby. "It will be as carefully and conscientiously edited as the best newspaper and will contain no objectionable or offensive material. The editorial policy will place first importance on news interest. The News Reel will be exactly what we have termed it—'a newspaper of the screen.' Every attempt will be made to provide material of human interest, amusement interest, and so on, from a unique and novel angle."

Paramount Short Subjects to Be Widely Advertised

Says Emanuel Cohen

GOOD product and advertising are the two fundamentals of successful business. So well known is this statement of truth that it should be unnecessary to reiterate it; yet the fact remains that in our own field, ample consideration never has been accorded the short feature product in theatre advertising.

Conditions have improved, and the results have been encouraging. The producers have reciprocated in supplying the exhibitor with a finer short feature product with which he might build a complete program of excellence for his patrons.

Perhaps no industry in the world has developed with such rapid strides as the motion picture, and no industry has had within its ranks such keen showmen. Only within recent years, however, have these showmen given more than superficial consideration to the extremely valuable short feature.

The short feature audience is too important to theatre prosperity to be discounted. I venture to say that almost 25 per cent. of those attending the motion picture theatre are guided to the box office by the short feature—the news reel, the comedy and the novelty.

How many times have you heard men say: "I go to the theatre because my wife wants me to go, but all I get is a kick out of are the news reels and the comedies."

Potential Patrons

THERE must be then hundreds of thousands of potential short feature patrons, and there is but one way of getting the admission price from these people. Advertise! Not superficially with slighting mention in the feature advertising, but by according the news reel and the comedy the showmanship which they merit.

Paramount is to co-operate with the exhibitor in this respect. Our short feature product will be given the consideration it merits in our national advertising. Our news reel and our comedies will become household words, just as Paramount Pictures now are. The name Paramount for years has stood for the best in motion picture entertainment. What it has stood for in feature attractions it will stand for in the short feature.

The exhibitor who will capitalize on this national advertising will find that in the future he will have two box office attractions instead of one. To gain that end, however, he must tie in on the national advertising of short features as he has on the feature length productions.

Some say that advertising and publicity are intangible. Packed houses as a result of showmanship are the best refutation of that statement. Naturally, the value of promotion cannot be measured with a yardstick, but neither can a man's bank account.

Short Subjects Proved Vital

WITHOUT showmanship the motion picture today would still be in its early formative stage. Likewise, the short feature will advance immeasurably and in proportion to the increasing consideration given to this type of motion picture entertainment. That the short feature was able for years to stand upon its own legs without advertising support, is evidence that it is a brand of entertainment that is vital to the theatre program.

Even as a stepchild the short feature developed. Vision what the short feature of the future will be when every exhibitor and every producer realizes that, properly exploited, the short feature, too, will be a coiner of money.

I have in mind a product which for years was known and used in every household. The company making this product virtually stopped advertising under the assumption that the product's popularity precluded promotion. In a comparatively few months other brand names had become widely known and the prestige which years had built for the company which had ceased advertising had been lost. The company, after losing hundreds of thousands of dollars, was forced to resume its advertising to regain that most valuable asset, goodwill.

The wise and enterprising exhibitor will take cognizance of the experiences of others. He will say of the short feature as he has of the long feature: "That is part of my bread and butter. I will advertise it."

More and More Short Subjects Will Be Done in

COLOR

By Larry Davis

COLOR! What would the world around us be if color were taken away from everything? Imagine your home—your office—the street—the countryside—all in black and white and various tones of drab gray. How lifeless and uninteresting it would all be—like going around wearing smoked glasses. Yet that is pretty much what the black and white picture means—and how can we expect to present life on the screen without color, the very essence of realism?

Particularly in the short subject field is color of value, though I personally feel that all subjects should and will eventually be done in color. Since the short subject is the portion of the bill which is chosen to give it variety and novelty and spice, color is ideal, since nothing contrasts more strikingly with the ordinary black-and-white feature than an excellent short subject done in the colors that make up life as we know it.

It is worth noting that for two consecutive years the Riesenfeld Gold Medal for the best short subject of the year has gone to a subject in color, first to "The Voice of the Nightingale," made in France by Starevich and hand colored, and now to "The Vision," done in our own technicolor process. These selections were made, not by art critics nor professors, but by a jury of outstanding successful exhibitors—men who know a real attraction when they see one.

The value of color on an exhibitor's program is many-sided. It adds beauty to his program, variety, novelty—and most of all, realism. The novelty angle, of course, is one that will disappear with the passing years as the use of color grows more nearly universal—but the elements of beauty and realism will increase.

Featured by Showmen

WISE exhibitors today are giving outstanding prominence to color subjects on their program. Color lends itself unusually well to striking advertising and exploitation. Colored lights in the marquee—drawing and coloring contests for children—tie-ups with art departments in the schools—colored lobby displays—a thousand and one ways suggest themselves of capitalizing the presence of color on the bill. The small house which must compete with large theatres and their more elaborate programs will find color subjects excellent, since they require no special equipment or outlay.

An outstanding achievement is the series of Educational Romance Productions made by Eugene H. Roth. Written and directed by Arthur Maude, these were suggested by famous paintings—a particularly appropriate subject for color. The series included "The Vision," which won the Riesenfeld medal, and was based on Sir John Millais' painting, "Speak, Speak;" "The Blue Boy," after the noted and well-nigh priceless Gainsborough canvas of the same title; and "The Mona Lisa," after the Leonardo da Vinci painting with the immortal, enigmatic smile.

The reception given these subjects by the press and the public was amazing. Wherever they were shown they scored strongly—so much so that Mr. Hammons, the president of Educational, has a standing wager with any exhibitor that if he will play "The Vision" without any mention whatever in his advertising and publicity, it will obtain more than half of all the press notice and comment.

Art supervisors in the schools showed a particular interest in these pictures, and many valuable exploitation tie-ups were made possible through that fact.

For instance, a production man and Howard Green, technicolor cameraman, returned two weeks ago from a tour of South America and the West Indies, filming travel scenes in technicolor, and departed almost immediately for the Mediterranean on the Carinthia, where they will photograph in color such spots as Gibraltar, Cadiz, Algiers, the Holy Land, Tunis, Constantinople, Athens, Palermo, Naples, Nice and Paris.

"The Vision"

THE best short subject of 1926 (comedies excluded) in the judgment of a committee of representative nationally known exhibitors, was "The Vision," released on May 2, 1926, by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc. It was a Romance Production, made by Eugene H. Roth in the technicolor process throughout, and written and directed by Arthur Maude.

Voted an exceptional photoplay by the Better Films Committee of the National Board of Review, "The Vision" was greeted with unusually favorable comment from critics and public alike. Its pictorial loveliness, its strongly dramatic story and general production merit made it a genuine "short feature," and as such it dominated many a program. Its selection for the Riesenfeld medal was therefore a most logical move.

Will H. Hays, in presenting this medal at a recent luncheon in New York, spoke highly of "The Vision" and of the part which such high grade subjects play in building prestige for individual theatres and for the industry. This is an important item, and when prestige value can be combined with entertainment and beauty a very desirable subject is the result.

The answer, probably, is the unusually careful preparation by Mr. Roth and Mr. Maude prior to the making of "The Vision" and the other subjects in the Romance series. They were gone about with the same scrupulous care and thought for detail that precedes the making of a feature production, and virtually the only difference in the production method was in the length of the completed film.

It Pays to Advertise Short Subjects, Too

Says W. A. V. Mack

YES, it most certainly pays to exploit Short Subjects. The MOTION PICTURE NEWS knows it or this article would never have been written.

During the writer's sixteen years' service in the sales end of this business he has learned that exhibitors are always willing to lend an attentive ear to any practical suggestion having a direct bearing on net profits. In fact there is an unwritten law in the Pathe Sales Organization which obligates the salesman to "Sell his merchandise in such a manner that it will stay sold." The salesman is made to understand that "No sale is complete until he has demonstrated the means provided for properly advertising and exploiting the product."

This all boils down, in the final analysis, to the question of just how the Exploitation and Publicity Departments function as the right arm of the Short Subject sales force. It also provides an opportunity to elaborate on the practical application by exhibitors of Short Subject exploitation ammunition.

Two years ago this summer the advertising representatives of distributors of Short Subjects met and organized the Short Subjects Advertising Association. Joint conferences with trade paper editors followed immediately with the result that a nation-wide campaign was inaugurated in behalf of Exploitation of Short Features.

Laugh Month Contest

The trade papers continued to drive home to the exhibitor the fact that exploitation of Short Subjects was practically a virgin field for the cultivation of greater profits. Special sections devoted to this department soon appeared in the trade magazines and the manner in which theatre owners responded is common knowledge.

The results of the Laugh Month Campaign contest in January clearly indicates the exploitation possibilities in the Pathe idea of the "All Comedy Circus." It is interesting to note that three of the four prize winners in that contest based their entire campaign along All Comedy Circus lines.

Exploiting the News Reel

It is sheer fallacy to assume that a news reel cannot be exploited as a direct box-office attraction. Notable examples of concrete results should convince the exhibitor that exceptional opportunities are frequently offered for capitalizing on unusual news events.

Lem Stewart, now advertising manager of The Publix Theatre Department was, prior to his present connection, manager of the Publix class A house at Asheville, N.C. He says that:

"There were occasions when, by making special announcements in the lobby, or publishing special notifications in the newspapers, with respect to some scene in the current Pathe News reel, we not only increased receipts, but enhanced the institutional value of the Pathe News as a distinct service in our theatre."

Mack, exploitation head of Pathe; marquee of the Chicago Theatre, Chicago, showing short subject prominence in marquee signs; a clever display easel by Manager Bob Hutchinson of the Liberty Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma U. S. army tie-up on "On Guard" in the Des Moines territory.

Peter D. Beckero of the City Theatre at Highland Falls, N.Y., has long shown Pathe News. What exploitation of a news reel has meant to him can be best exemplified by his recent statement to the effect that "at least 50 of his patrons come especially to see Pathe News regularly. Eight officers from West Point are weekly customers, arriving as the News Reel is about to be shown and leaving immediately following its screening."

Oftentimes our men make a direct tie-up on a news reel item which brings in extra dollars at the box-office. Just recently our Philadelphia assistant manager, C. J. Martin, advised the General Manager of the local electric light company of the picturization of a mammoth turbine in the News. After inquiring where the reel could be seen he advised our Mr. Martin that every technical man on the payroll would be given tickets to view the picture that same day. And some theatre profited as a result.

Pathe maintains close contact with headquarters of Playground Associations, the Izaak Walton League, Women's Clubs and other organizations which may be interested in supporting the various types of motion pictures which are included from time to time in our many Short Features.

A countless number of valuable tie-ups have been effected in New York direct with these bodies, resulting in local groups attending showings in large numbers.

Valuable Sportlight Tie-Up

Out in Omaha recently before the Grantland Rice Sportlight "Weather Proof" was shown first run, our manager made a valuable tie-up with all bowling alleys. Mort Lindsley, one of the world's greatest bowlers, appears in the film showing the correct way to bowl. Owners of all alleys were glad to follow through on the suggestion of mailing a notice to every bowler on their list, notifying them of the showing of the reel. Posters were displayed in the alleys and exhibitors reported a direct reaction from this stunt.

Will Rogers' telegraphic squibs appear daily on the front page of every newspaper in the United States using the McNaught Syndicate Service. Arthur Kelley, Publicity Director of the Eastman Theatre, located at Rochester, N.Y., turned this knowledge into cash. In a five-minute interview he sold the Rochester Democrat & Chronicle the idea of displaying in a box under the Rogers squib: "See Will Rogers, Our Unofficial Ambassador Abroad, at the Eastman Theatre all this week." In return for that publicity, he prepared for the newspaper, a trailer reading: "Read Will Rogers' Daily Squib in the Rochester Democrat & Chronicle." This trailer was shown on the screen of all of the Eastman theatres the week prior to the engagement and during the run of the picture. The same tie-up will follow with the showing of each Rogers subject.

Eddie Zorn, Manager of the Stratford Theatre, a Publix theatre located at Poughkeepsie, N.Y., sold local merchants a full page of advertising to accompany his ad copy on Rogers. The newspaper offered 25 pairs of tickets to the persons making the most words out of the combined word Will Rogers. Just ask Eddie if the effort was worth while, and incidentally, do you ever recall having seen a similar tie-up on a one-reel subject?

Three-Minute Men

When we released "The Fighting Marine," the U.S. Marine Corps furnished three-minute speakers to talk on the life of Tunney. They also provided wherever available, a squad of marines, guns and other material for lobby display.

With our last serial, "On Guard," we made arrangements with the U.S. Army Headquarters direct at Washington, whereby they bought and posted 20,000 special one-sheets on "A" boards in principal cities throughout the country.

Army equipment such as machine guns, lorries, troops, etc., are available to our customers for the mere asking. As an example of what they have done, we cite the recent campaign in the Des Moines territory when one Fort Commander furnished a complete army band and a squad of soldiers in full field regalia. A parade preceded the opening of episode number one of the serial, also a concert in front of the theatre.

Nearly the whole town turned out. This outfit toured eight nearby towns, assisting our customers to get off with a good start on episode number one.

During the filming of our new serial, "Melting Millions," we posed the star, Allene Ray, in various pictures showing her using nationally advertised products, such as tooth paste, soap, waffle irons, furniture, radio, flour, kitchen cleansers, etc. These photos we sent to the advertising departments of the respective manufacturers, many of whom have already agreed to arrange excellent window displays for local dealers in cooperation with our customers.

Special Timely Releases

Special releases and topical short subjects which measure up to the Pathe standard are acquired for our program from time to time. In nearly every instance such product has several unique exploitation slants none of which are overlooked in our efforts.

It is unfortunate that circumstances will not permit us at this time to incorporate in our article full details of what we believe is the greatest Short Subject exploitation tie-up in the history of the motion picture business. Maybe a brief outline will suffice.

Special Campaign

Within the next two weeks one of the biggest food product concerns in the world will inaugurate a nation-wide billboard advertising and publicity campaign costing close to a million dollars. A Pathe Short Subject will dominate all copy. Billboards will be placed where theatres may derive the greatest benefit. Handsome prizes awarded through theatres cooperating with local dealers is only a small part of the plan.

This has been a good year for color in the short subject field, and there are even more startling developments now on foot of which I am not free to speak at the moment, but which will be revolutionary and far-reaching in their effect.

An important result of all this will be a growing knowledge of how to use color rightly on the screen. It is not enough to make motion pictures which happen to have the added element of color. That color must be used properly and harmoniously—its possibilities must be explored—to obtain the full advantages.

The Color Staff

THE development that is certainly coming, and which will do much to stimulate the employment of color, will be the trained technical and art staff working solely in color. It would be trite to say that the possibilities of color have barely been touched, but it would be very true.

The objection sometimes raised that present methods are only in two colors, and therefore cannot give a full and adequate color rendering, are beside the point. They are much more desirable from a practical point of view, as present methods stand—and two colors are so much better than none that there would seem little room for argument. When we have gone as far as we can go in two-color rendering it will be time enough to worry about the full spectrum.

The improvement in color pictures has been steady and constant. Technicolor maintains an experimental staff, working year in and year out to find ways of bettering the method. This was responsible for the recent new process by which both colors are now placed on the same side of the film, doing away with the old double-coated stock. The means that when the film is scratched there will be no "color flashes" on the screen, as in the old days, because the scratch will remove both colors and not merely one. The cost, too, is being lowered and will be still lower when the use of color is more extensive—a time not far off, from all present indications.

This is but an instance of the progress being made in every branch of the art of motion pictures in color, technically and artistically. The method is there—all that remains is to learn to use it rightly, and short subjects, because of their diversity and compactness, will be a leading factor in teaching us how to use the magic touch that transforms the screen into a mirror of life—color.

Double Feature Evil

Indianapolis

Poor business tactics on the part of some branch exchange managers and competitive situations which have arisen from time to time are given as reasons for a marked increase in the use of the double feature bill in Indianapolis. The report indicates that subsequent-run houses are not the only ones affected, downtown theatres having also come under the spell of the double bill.

Cincinnati

According to the report from Cincinnati, there is no occasion for any alarm among exhibitors in that city and its surrounding territory, which could be attributed to the use of the double feature program. While the situation exists in a small way, it appears to be confined to few exhibitors, well scattered through the zone. The report further states that the use of the double bill has not shown an increase.

Seattle

Reports from Seattle territory indicate that with the exception of the very small, so-called shooting-galleries where the practice of showing double feature programs has existed for quite a long time, the condition is not one to cause any great alarm among exhibitors of the Northwest. Even in these small houses, it is claimed that the short subject exchanges get a very fair representation. In those sections of the Seattle zone where the double feature bill does exist, it is claimed that the condition has been brought about by over-buying and that the terms of the contract between the exchangeman and exhibitor force the latter to "clean up." There have also been a few instances where a competitive situation has been in evidence; where the matter has come under the control of one exhibitor whose runs in one house have been cut down —or one house closed altogether. Then, of course, it becomes necessary for the exhibitor to double up on his runs for a period so as to terminate the existing contract.

New Orleans

Instances of the double feature bill in New Orleans and its territory are apparently so few and scattered that they are not causing any concern to exchangemen or exhibitors. Even in the few places where they exist, there has been no increase reported.

Albany

Although the practice of using the double bill is frowned upon by exhibitors in the Albany, N.Y., zone, an increase in its use is reported. It has not been a great one, nevertheless in recent months there has been a growth which would apear to be a steady one. The report further goes on to state that exhibitors in this territory are forced into double-featuring in order to play off the weak features which could not possibly stand up alone.

Boston

New England may almost be called "the cradle" of the double feature, this practice having existed in all of these states for a long period and has come to be regarded as a general policy of distribution. There has been no decrease; on the other hand, reports have it that there is a steady increase year by year. Outside of the fact that the condition in this territory may have had its inception at the hands of thrifty New England audiences demanding bargain programs, exhibitors as a rule claim that they can build to better business and larger profits when using double feature and that usually the added feature is much less expensive than other attractions.

New Haven

Conditions in New Haven are apparently similar to those in Boston except that over-buying is given as a contributing reason for the several years' existence of the double feature program. As in other instances, in order to book certain product, exhibitors report that exchanges load them up with pictures they must play off. Connecticut theatre men also report that on account of the public's education to the double bill, a single feature program invariably results in poor business. The percentage of increase recently in the use of the double feature for this territory is given as ten per cent.

Denver

Several years ago in Denver territory, the use of the double feature bill was practically negligible but the movement has been slowly spreading until at present fully twenty per cent. of the houses are consistently exploiting the added picture. Reasons given for the recent increase in its use are, that there is a general tendency on the part of the smaller theatre owners to increase their offering to the public in order to combat opposition of prologues, vaudeville and other attractions added to the programs of the larger houses.

Des Moines

No increase in the use of the double feature program is reported from the Des Moines zone, the movement having apparently never reached a point where it gave exhibitors of this territory any great concern. To the best of our knowledge, there is but one theatre in the entire state of Iowa subscribing to the use of the double bill.

Washington, D.C.

With the exception of a few small theatres in the city of Baltimore, the Washington zone reports no increase in the use of the double bill. Washington proper does not seem to be suffering at all. The few theatres in Baltimore at present showing the added feature picture, according to report have done so for several years.

Buffalo

While the majority of Buffalo exhibitors do not by any means favor the use of the double feature program, reports indicate that the practice has increased to a large extent, the movement getting under way in the neighborhood theatres to check trade being drawn to the elaborate presentation bills offered by the big downtown houses. Once the bargain bills started, the natural course of events followed. Each neighborhood theatre, feeling the effects of competition, followed suit, with the result that most of them are at present running the double feature and other added attractions such as the cheaper grade of novelty acts in order to held their trade. The downtown theatres are apparently not seriously affected in a competitive way but the neighborhood situation is evidently considerable cause for alarm among the owners of those houses.

Dallas

Reports from Dallas, the exchange centre of the Southwest, apparently class its territory as one of the most peaceful zones, with one exception. In Dallas proper and its environs there has been no increase in the use of the double bill, but at Fort Worth the practice has grown to the point where opinion describes it as a menace to the motion picture trade of that city. The report does not state whether the movement received its impetus from exhibitor competition or over-buying. Judging from a consensus of reports, it is undoubtedly one or the other.

Kansas City

Outside of the fact that a few suburban houses resort to the use of the double bill, reports from Kansas City show that this practice has not been of any great concern to exhibitors of this territory for the past three or four years, it being evident that the double bill had been given a fair trial at that time and found wanting for the reason usually advanced—i. e. over-buying and keen competition in certain sections where circuits were at war with each other.

In the case of the neighborhood houses in the Kansas City zone where the use of the double bill still exists, it seems to be confined to a few theatre owners who use the extra feature in order to boost Saturday trade.

Reels of Progress

serial actor destined to become a shining light of the directorial profession—Irving Cummings.

With Harold Lloyd for years was a black-haired young beauty for whom brilliant things were predicted. Her chance in feature pictures came with DeMille—eventually she found her real forte in light comedy—and today the name of Bebe Daniels is an outstanding one on the Paramount program.

Also with Lloyd was a young ex-baseball player, who became actor, scenario writer and director in turn and later left for feature fields—Fred Newmeyer. Another who rose with Lloyd has found success elsewhere—Sam Taylor.

The list might be expanded and continued indefinitely: Mal St. Clair, who rose from comedy directing at Sennett to his present position; Johnny Hines, who started in the "Torchy" comedies and climbed to his present comedy feature eminence; Wallace Beery, who went from comedy roles and heavies, and is now finding fame and fortune in heavies with a comedy angle; Marie Prevost, another bathing beauty, who made the grade in dramatic roles; Fred Jackman, for years the head cameraman at Sennett's and more recently a feature director; Chester Conklin, one of the original Keystone Cops, who now lends relief to features which frequently need it; Louise Fazenda, whose work in features constantly demonstrates the soundness of comedy training; Betty Compson, who faced the camera in comedies and serials before the feature producers discovered her and "The Miracle Man" made her famous; Agnes Ayres, who started as the feminine lead in the O. Henry two-reelers and climbed to feature eminence; Dale Fuller, a strong character type who built her foundation in comedy; Vera Reynolds, Phyllis Haver, Dorothy Devore, Mae Busch, Harry Myers and Kate Price, to mention just a few more; Lloyd Bacon, Clarence Badger, William Beaudine and John Francis Dillon, to name some of the directors; Bert Glennon, to name but one of the multitude of cameramen who have found their training in the difficult school of comedy photography; Anthony Coldewey and Paul Sloane among those who have travelled the scenario route, the latter now a director as well; and Katharine Hilliker and John W. Krafft among the title writers.

Where Ideas Come From

THERE are other angles to the matter as well. Not alone talent but ideas come to the feature fold from the realm of featurettes.

Take, for instance, the lowly "gag." Originally the sole property of the comedy companies, someone discovered that a feature whose interest lagged at points might have it bolstered by the injection of such business, and things began to look up for the gag-smiths of Hollywood. "Gag-man" was too vulgar a term for the more effete feature units, however, so the "comedy constructor" came into being. This melancholy gentleman sits on the set during the filming of a feature and from time to time suggests comedy bits to be inserted.

Closely related to this is the comedy subtitle—another favorite device for putting entertainment into the feature which has gone sour somewhere in the filming.

The part which the serial has played in developing the technique of melodrama is important, too. Many indeed are the players who found their training in the "continued in our next" shops, and more than one director owes his mastery of melodrama to the serial.

Novelties of every description—the animated prehistoric monsters later seen in "The Lost World," color processes, talking pictures, undersea films—nearly all such devices find their first and most enthusiastic reception in the short-subject field.

If it is true, as appears almost obvious, that 1927 is going to be a year of strenuous short subject competition, then it is fairly certain that it will be a year of great general advancement in the art and technique of motion picture making, for we must look for most of our advancement in production to the makers of short subjects—the Reels of Progress.

PICTURES & PEOPLE

Canada Turns 'Em Out

CANADIAN picture men have been pointing to the number of exchange officials of Canada, who have assumed important executive posts in the United States and Europe, this discussion having arisen through the recent promotion of two Toronto men to outstanding places in film distribution in Great Britain and Central Europe. These were William Bach, of First National, who was made general manager for First National in Great Britain with headquarters in London, and Phil. Kaufman, former

These are only two of the trade graduations from Canada, and it is not unlikely that the Dominion has supplied more big men to the industry in the United States and other countries than any other regional territory.

Walter J. Hutchinson, who is now general manager for Fox in Great Britain, learned film salesmanship in Toronto under the direction of Leo J. Devaney, who directed Fox activities in Canada for a number of years. Mr. Devaney is now in charge of the Cleveland, Ohio, office of Universal, which is considered one of the largest and most important. Leo Devaney is known by all exhibitors from coast to coast in Canada.

For many years Canadian general manager for Vitagraph, W. F. Barrett, formerly of Toronto, is now with the Lee-Bradford Company in the United States.

George Weeks, of New York, was Canadian general manager of Famous-Lasky Film Service, Limited, Toronto, before he became sales manager of Famous in the States.

Earl Kramer, sales director for Universal in the United States, was manager of the Select Pictures Corporation office at Montreal.

Vincent McCabe, formerly of Toronto, was Canadian general manager for First National before occupying several important posts with film companies in the States.

Films Aid Rio Situation

ONCE more the motion picture film has smoothed relations abroad for Uncle Sam. The Casino Theatre, Rio de Janeiro, recently built and now operated by a Brazilian subsidiary of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, was about to be opened as Brazil's most impressive first-run motion picture theatre. Running day and date with news of this opening—to use motion picture parlance—were stories of estranged relations between the United States and Mexico.

To relieve anti-American feeling in Rio de Janeiro, Louis Brock, general South American executive for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, invited the Mexican Ambassador to give a series of moving picture performances consisting of subjects especially favorable to Mexico. The offer was accepted, and in no small sense assured the people of the city that troops were not crossing the Mexican border.

"The general value of the motion picture as an agent of international good-will and a medium to create a better understanding of America by foreign people long has been recognized," declared Arthur Loew, head of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer foreign department, commenting on this episode. "Since the war, foreign governments continue or fall in proportion to the confidence displayed in them by their citizens. The motion picture has an important bearing on this situation in that it is the one universal form of entertainment, and speaks a universal language."

Vitaphone Complexities

INTERESTING as it may be to watch motion pictures in the making, we doubt if it can have quite the fascination of seeing and hearing Vitaphone subjects filmed and recorded. The other afternoon, through the courtesy of Herman Heller, the Vitaphone maestro, we were led through a maze of passageways and doors backstage at the old Manhattan Opera House to watch Marion Talley and Gigli, of the Metropolitan, do a scene from "Lucia di Lammermoor."

The technical problems of the combined recording are enormous. When we arrived the orchestra was being "balanced," so that it would record properly. The violins were moved further away from the microphone, the brasses were told to play more softly, notes were filled in in certain chords, passages were gone through again and again until they were judged right for recording. Then Mr. Heller repaired to the recording room upstairs, where he listened to it over the wire, telephoning instructions and corrections down every few moments.

Meanwhile, at intervals, the electricians were lighting the set, the cameramen were making their set-up and the set dressers changing things here and there on the woodland scene.

Then Miss Talley and Gigli appeared, and the balancing was gone through again, this time with the voices, first near the orchestra, then on the set. More telephoning. More changes.

It was intricate and involved beyond words, and we marveled at the patience necessary for one short Vitaphone subject.

A Fitting Dedication

PARAMOUNT'S epic of the air, "Wings," is to be dedicated to those fliers who lost their lives in the World War, according to an announcement from Jesse L. Lasky.

"We have put every human effort forth to make 'Wings' the one real, vital story of the American ace and his exploits in France during the War," said Mr. Lasky, "and we hope it will live forever as a tribute to those heroes of the air who never are to fly again."

John Monk Saunders, the author of the story, has written the simple but sincere dedication: "To the young warriors of the sky—whose wings are folded about them forever, this picture is reverently dedicated."

From Ad Men to Playwrights

EDGAR M. SCHOENBERG and Milton Silver, both of the Universal home office advertising department, are the co-authors of the latest mystery melodrama on the boards of Broadway. It is "The Mystery Ship," a three act play launched this week at the Garrick Theatre. Late reports of its first week's run indicate that it is being well received by New York playgoers and that it is due for a run.

This is the first play by these two young men to attain Broadway production. Silver is assistant advertising manager for Universal under Robert E. Welsh. The play was produced by Gustav Blum.

Captain Keaton

BUSTER KEATON, who was a private in 1917 in France and ultimately "The General" in his latest film, became an actual captain of the Oregon National Guard recently, according to advices received from Los Angeles by United Artists' New York office. Keaton was formally commissioned a Captain on the authorization of Governor Patterson of Oregon, as a gesture of gratitude on the part of the State for the enlistments in the Oregon National Guard which resulted from the engagement of five hundred guardsmen as extras in "The General," made near Cottage Grove, Ore.

Captain Keaton did not crack a smile.

New British Camera Effect

ACCORDING to announcement in Kinematograph Weekly of London, W. C. Jeapes, of British Screen Classics, has developed a small camera attachment by which it is possible to change the focal length of the lens without the loss of a frame and with stopping the action. Reduced to less technical terms, this means that the cameraman may switch from a long-shot to a close-up and back to the long shot during the progress of a scene, without interrupting the action. The value to the news weekly man is apparent.

Back to His First Studio

DOUGLAS MacLEAN has completed a cycle, incidentally reproducing in real life the story, often told in celluloid, of the youthful employe who climbs to the presidency of the company by hard work and merit.

In transferring his production headquarters a few days ago to the Fine Arts Studio, MacLean returned as head of his own organization to the studio where he made his Los Angeles screen debut as a very young and comparatively unknown actor a decade ago.

Ten years ago Douglas MacLean was the leading man of the Morosco Theatre Stock Company in Los Angeles. D. W. Griffith, then producing at the old Triangle studio, offered MacLean his first chance before a Hollywood camera in Griffith's production, "The Hun Within."

ADOLPHE MENJOU has been granted a two months' leave of absence from Paramount studios for a trip to Europe, it was announced this week. Menjou's leave will start as soon as he completes his present picture, as yet untitled. The picture will be finished in a few weeks and Menjou is to be back at the studio in time to start another picture by May 23.

More Film than Money

Realart Studio As "Lab"

THE old Realart studio in Hollywood, where a host of stars including Bebe Daniels, Mary Miles Minter, Constance Binney and May McAvoy first applied makeup, reopened this week under the supervision of Lorenzo Del Riccio, the young cinematographer, whose invention, the magnascope, or enlarged screen, is now being used at the Rivoli Theatre presentation of "Old Ironsides" in New York City.

Del Riccio is working not with stars, but with light. He is under contract to Paramount and is perfecting other inventions of his own which are said to be even more revolutionary than the magnascope. The public is promised the first view of the devices and effects at the world premiere of "Wings," Paramount's spectacular production of the American aviators in France during the World War.

Talking Film Pool Nears Agreement

William Fox Predicts a Materialization of Device in Five Years

THE five companies comprising the pool which is negotiating jointly for talking pictures is making very satisfactory progress with General Electric and the Radio Corporation of America, who control Photophone, the device expected to be used, it is understood. The ideal is close to final consummation, it is rumored, and strength is added to the advanced state of negotiations by the statement accredited to Adolph Zukor, who, before leaving for Europe, stated deliberations should be concluded in the near future. First National, Paramount, Universal, P.D.C. and M-G-M are the companies interested.

According to William Fox in five years no producer will think of making anything but talking pictures; he confidently forecasts revolutionary changes brought about through talking devices. In connection with Movietone, he states in a Times interview: "It will take five years to permit us to perfect the sound and screen devices, to achieve the required results in recording the sound without any flaws. We want this time just as we took time to get where we are today.

"Many of the present players who may still be popular then will have to take courses in elocution, and we will then be able to look at and listen to a motion picture without a subtitle or a spoken tile. The news reels will undergo a drastic change, for instead of seeing a statesman opening and shutting his mouth and a brief caption explaining what he is saying, news reels of the future will show the distinguished person and his speech as he made it, and his voice will be recognizable. The showing of a present day news reel in five years' time will seem just as absurd as would the screening of stereopticon slides in this day."

Railroad Rates Set for M.P.T.O.A. Meeting

THE fare and one-half fare concession to all attending the Eighth Annual Convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in Columbus, O., June 7th, 8th and 9th, has been confirmed by the Passenger Department of the Trunk Association in a letter to Business Manager M. J. O'Toole.

This fits in very well with the Summer Excursion rates granted to tourists from the Pacific Coast.

Arrangements for the Convention in Columbus are being pressed forward with considerable vigor by General Chairman J. J. Harwood, assisted by Business Manager P. J. Wood of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio. Special moves are being made to provide for the entertainment of those attending the Convention.

From all sections of the country the names of delegates are being sent in to National Headquarters.

Stanley and Fox Circuits in Battle Over Freihofer Philadelphia Houses

THERE seems to be considerable controversy in the Stanley Company anent the acquisition of the Freihofer Circuit of theatres, owned by William Freihofer, head of the Freihofer Baking Company, whose holdings in this enterprise are valued at $15,000,000. Prior to the trip of John J. McGuirk, president of the Stanley Company, to the West Coast, it was understood that Mr. Freihofer had closed a deal whereby the Freihofer interests were to be taken over by the Stanley Company on an appraised basis of $2,000,000, but this deal is now declared off and Mr. Freihofer is himself leaving for the West Coast.

The competition and feeling between the Stanley and Freihofer interests has been very keen and the Sixty-ninth Street section was a very active battle ground, inasmuch as both companies started building theatres on opposite corners of the same street.

A new angle to the situation has developed through the report that William Fox has opened negotiations for the acquisition of the Freihofer houses in order to strengthen his position in Philadelphia. Fox now has the house which he built some three years ago, at Sixteenth and Market streets, and recently took over a ten-year lease on the Fox Locust Theatre, where "What Price Glory" is now playing.

Schenck Now President of United Artists

Elected at Stockholders' Meeting; Lichtman Made a Vice-President, Others Returned to Office

Joseph M. Schenck

BY unanimous vote of the stockholders, Joseph M. Schenck was elected president of United Artists Corporation on Tuesday of this week at the regular annual meeting. Mr. Schenck was also re-elected chairman of the board of directors.

Following the annual meeting of the stockholders of United Artists Corporation (who are Mary Pickford, Gloria Swanson, Charles Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, D. W. Griffith and Joseph M. Schenck—Mr. Chaplin and Mr. Schenck were present personally), the Board of Directors, consisting of Mr. Schenck, chairman, and Harry D. Buckley, Dennis F. O'Brien, Albert H. T. Banzhaf, Thomas Moore and Nathan Burkan, elected the officers of the corporation.

Alexander Lichtman, general manager of distribution in the United States and Canada, was elected a vice-president. Harry D. Buckley and Arthur W. Kelly, the other members of the executive committee of three, are also vice-presidents, as is Dennis F. O'Brien, the attorney. Albert H. T. Banzhaf was elected secretary, and Arthur W. Kelly re-elected treasurer.

Miss Mary Rusk, who was executive assistant to Hiram Abrams during the seven years of his presidency, was elected assistant treasurer, an advancement which Mr. Schenck declared just and fit recognition of Miss Rusk's services to United Artists Corporation since its inception. F. A. Beach was elected assistant secretary.

After the election of officers, Mr. Schenck outlined production and distribution plans for the fiscal year 1927. Then the new President of United Artists Corporation, who is also Chairman of the Board of Directors of United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., discussed the progress of the Circuit to date.

"Quota Puts Cart Before the Horse"

English Writer, In Slashing Attack, Declares Only Open Matter Showmanship Competition

(Editor' Note.—Following is an article by John Grierson, well-known English writer, who contributed a notable series to The News last winter. Mr. Grierson, now in England, writes a severe condemnation of the proposed British quota as "putting the cart before the horse." His remarks do not necessarily represent the views of the Editor of Motion Picture News.)

By John Grierson

THE discussion on the Quota or Compulsory Films Bill in England grows "Furiouser and furiouser," and all the usual arguments are being presented against it. These will be familiar to every one in the business. It is represented as harming the exhibitor and taking away from him his chief asset in business: free choice of screen material. It is represented as taking away from the public its right to the best there is, whatever the country of origin. It is represented as giving a small body of English producers a virtual monopoly of a certain portion of English screen time; and it is duly explained that a 7½ per cent quota with its compulsory showing of sixty films is out with the normal capacity of English production at the present time and encourages anyhow production. Some of the wiser people see how the quota may be used to foist bad English films on the American market.

The Times sums up its attitude in these words: "The quota system is full of drawbacks—commercial drawbacks because it takes no account of, and may even engender hostility in the foreign market, and at home is unjust to exhibitors; artistic drawbacks because, by treating all films as so many feet of material, it has a tendency to encourage what is bad and to submerge what is good; social drawbacks because, instead of regarding the films as an influence upon the public which, in so far as it is a dangerous influence, should be reformed, it approaches the production of moving pictures as if nothing more vital to the national well-being were involved in it than the profits of manufacturers."

What About Showmanship?

But in the general melee one argument is forgotten entirely. The forgotten point is that it is only competition in the open that makes for progressive cinema showmanship. I sat through the debate in the House of Commons and it seemed to be assumed that the cinema business was like any other entertainment business. No one seemed to realize that it is a deeper and wider thing altogether in its effects, and that the main problem is not to protect producers, but to build up a sense of international showmanship in them so that the product will speak for itself.

That cannot be done by starting things off to an over-patriotic tune, or by harnessing production to national propoganda. It cannot be done without sending the producers to a grim study of the public and the wants of the public. The only thing too that will force the producers to make this study is competition and a flopping box office. The 2½ per cent margin between renter and exhibitor allows for a certain amount of competition as between one English producer and another, but, of course, the only standard of competition is the American standard and this the new pictures are not asked to face.

I am not talking as one with a belief in the divine origin of American showmanship. The spirit of American production wasn't a gift from the gods but the result of a cut-throat struggle for popular favor around the box-office machines. When Lasky discovered that the mere entertainment or popular picture "was gone forever" and that big pictures "should have basic themes," he wasn't being sentimental nor was he speaking for the highbrows. The deeper reaches of showmanship in which the greater producers in America have begun to manoeuver were got to by experience! Lasky was saying that by all the laws of showmanship and box office, big time stuff pays better than small time stuff, and epic stuff that grips people better than chit-chat hokum that dosen't get under the skin. But behind that advance in understanding lay all the box-office agonies since "The Covered Wagon."

The English producers haven't arrived at that point and I fear they won't so long as they are shut up in the hot-house of protection. They will improve their organization without a doubt and learn to produce fast, but I suspect they will not develop anything like that continuous feeling for the public pulse which exists in the center of an organization like Famous Players, and which is the secret of all success and progress in the cinema business.

Christmas Tree Audiences

I have talked to some of the men in the industry here and told them of the complex records that are kept of audience reactions and of the very marvelous sense of cinema's relation to the publics which must result from the American producers' constant study of them. But I feel that cinema showmanship as something to study and lose sleep over, doesn't enter their calculations. Why should it, when audiences are being handed down to the producers from the governmental Christmas tree?

I remember sitting once with one of the Paramount scenario men. We were discussing possibilities for a picture of New York. Right at the start—naturally, as though it were an axiom—the scenario man put himself at the point of view of the millions. What are they most interested in? What are they presently interested in? What theme will get under their sidewalk masks and touch them most intimately? These were the presuppositions on which his tale began to take form. That attitude has become so engrained in American production that thinking popularly is likely to become one of the greatest of the arts with it.

Here in England it would be highly unorthodox and in all critical circles would be discountenanced as plainly vulgar. The difficulty of production in England is evident in nothing so much as in the fact that talk is all away from the public. There is much about propaganding British industry, much about propaganding the Empire, and about educating and uplifting people to the English point of view: but nothing about giving the public their heart's desire. They put their cart before the horse, and the horse that pulls everything is showmanship, inspired showmanship, the spirit in production which begins with the public and thinks of what it wants most.

There is a present case which demonstrates how the difference works, and how it is going to work for England in dollars and cents. "Hindle Wakes" is proclaimed as a great English picture, and not an anti-American newspaper but says it's better than any of the Americans. But the box offices will not say so and, though the picture is good cinematically, there's a reason for it. "Hindle Wakes" is English proletarian stuff with the proletarian element never rising to any heights of ambition. The picture never quite rises out of the atmosphere of dismal inevitable inferiority, and who wants that? It doesn't make the public feel any good, and if cinema has a destiny at all, it is to give people encouragement. This cinema business is an encouragement business in its upper regions, and that's why the happy ending means something, and the psychological nit-hunting of German inadequates means nothing. An ounce of getting somewhere in a tenth rate American picture is worth a ton of drabness and failure in a European masterpiece.

This secret of showmanship, which has so much to do with a feeling for the function of cinema, has up till now only been revealed to American production. It was arrived at partly because America feels that way to begin with, but more because the laws of box office forced the showman to understand it. England, I believe, is starting wrong by isolating itself from the source of wisdom, and as an Englishman who wants to see England give something in return, I feel pessimistic. Right at a time when showmanship is so necessary, we have the House of Lords talking contemptuously of C. B. Cochran as "only a showman." It doesn't sound as if the oracles were working right.

Pacific N.W. House Using W.C.T. Monogram

RELATIVE to the rumored combine of the West Coast, North American and Pacific Northwest theatres, as announced recently, here is an interesting fact: The Fifth Avenue Theatre, Seattle, key house of the Pacific Northwest chain, for the last two weeks has been using a screen trailer on its coming shows that is headed by a very lifelike and noticeable monogram with the initials "W.C.T." The significance of this West Coast monogram on a trailer in a Seattle theatre is being widely commented upon in local film and theatre circles.

Lieber May Head First National Board

Chairmanship Urged Pending Resignation as Company President

IF, and when, Robert Lieber resigns as president of First National Pictures, which is a possibility at the annual meeting at Atlantic City, April fifteenth, he will be urged to accept the chairmanship of the board of directors. This statement was given out at Hollywood by Richard A. Rowland, general manager of the company, on the report that John J. McGuirk, president of the Stanley Company, is to succeed Mr. Lieber as head of First National.

"It is quite possible that Mr. Lieber may resign as president of First National," Rowland said, "and if he does he will probably do so at the organization's annual convention at Atlantic City on the 15th inst.

"It is widely known that now that he has brought the organization from a co-operative concern to its present position as a result of the merger which changed its entire make-up, he feels he has done his duty by it, and he has expressed a wish to be relieved from the activities that the office of chief executive carries with it.

"The other executives are extremely anxious for him to continue as president, but if he does decide to resign it is very probable that Mr. McGuirk will be offered the post."

Albany Film Board of Trade Elects Officers

As the result of considerable political maneuvering during the past week, Howard Morgan, local representative for Educational, was elected on Monday of this week as president of the Albany Film Board of Trade, Albany, N.Y. Harry Weinberg, local representative for F.B.O., was chosen vice-president, and John Bulwinkel, manager of the First National for Albany, was named as treasurer. The board of directors elected consists of H. O. Worden, Albany manager for Metro-Goldwyn; Jack Krause, manager of the Tiffany exchange, and Edward Hayes, manager of the Pathe exchange.

Film Exports for January Reach High Total

JANUARY exports of motion picture films, totaling 27,434,397 feet, valued at $882,434, reached the highest total for any month since September, 1926, it is shown by figures just compiled by the Department of Commerce, Washington, D.C.

Exports by classes during the month were: Raw stock, 3,371,864 feet, worth $98,540; negatives, 952,645 feet, valued at $153,564; positives, 21,412,477 feet, with a value of $603,816, and shipments to non-contiguous territories, 1,697,411 feet, valued at $26,514.

The United Kingdom took a large part of the negative exports and nearly a million feet of positives; our total trade with that country for the month being valued at $176,534; Argentine was second with positive imports valued at $65,485, and Australia third with imports of $74,187.

M-G-M Officials Forced to Close Culver City Studios to Visitors

OWING to the fact that artists find they cannot work when onlookers are standing about and the resultant loss of thousands of dollars weekly, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer officials have closed the studios in Culver City to all visitors, it was announced this week. During the past season M.-G.-M. executives have attempted to allow out-of-towners to view the inside of the studio, but a survey of the costs concerned as a result, has compelled the withdrawal of this courtesy.

When visitors appear on a "set," few artists can give the best there is in them, with the result that they "go through the motions" until the visitors leave, it is said. Then the scene is taken as it should be done. This involves holding up an entire company, and in the instance of one player alone, it was estimated that more than $2,500 was lost in one day.

Fred Thomson Now With Famous Players-Lasky

Long-Term Contract for Productions With Historic Background; "Jesse James" First Story

Fred Thomson

FRED THOMSON has signed a long term contract with Famous Players-Lasky to release his future productions through Paramount, it was announced this week by S. R. Kent. For the past several years Thomson has starred in pictures released through Film Booking Offices, latterly with his own producing company, the members of which go over to Famous with him.

Thomson will make a series of productions of a special type with an historic background. His first will be "Jesse James," the true story of the colorful figure of the past century. Frank Emmett Clifton, who has written and scenarized Thomson's past pictures, is now preparing the "Jesse James" story, and Lloyd Ingraham, director of Thomson's past screen efforts, will continue in that capacity on the newest production which is scheduled to begin about July first with the film complete by October first according to contract.

Thomson is a native of California. He attended Occidental College and made a name for himself as an all-round athlete. Leaving Occidental he went to Princeton where he became "all-round athlete of the world." He served with the A.E.F. during the War and participated in the Inter-Allied games in Paris in 1918, again winning new laurels.

Thomson began his motion picture career by playing opposite Mary Pickford in "The Love Light." His next venture was as a serial star, and in this episodic production, he realized that his desires and his forte were for roles of the Western new type.

Thomson planned his rise in Westerns deliberately. He felt that he must have a horse capable of sharing honors with him. After months of searching he discovered Silver King—on which he was to ride to stardom—in a New York riding academy. He trained the magnificent grey horse and brought him West, ready at last to start his Western career. The two have been together in every Fred Thomson picture since.

Thomson's first Western's were made for a small independent company, but a year later he was signed by F.B.O. Two years ago he organized his own unit and with its formation came the crystallization of Thomson's policy, faithfully maintained, of portraying only such vigorous types of American manhood as any American boy could idolize.

Le Baron Appointed Vice-President of F. B. O. in Charge of Production

William Le Baron

WILLIAM Le BARON, for the past three years production manager and associate producer at the Long Island studios of Famous Players-Lasky, was this week appointed vice-president of Film Booking Offices in charge of production. The announcement was made by Joseph P. Kennedy, president of F.B.O., who stated that Mr. Le Baron's headquarters will be in Hollywood. The new production head leaves for the West Coast the end of April, with Edwin C. King, vice-president in charge of the studio, with whom he was associated at Famous.

Before his entry into the picture business Mr. Le Baron was editor of "Colliers Magazine" for three years, also the author of a number of plays. His affiliation with the picture industry started when he was identified with Cosmopolitan Productions as production manager and director general for four years. He then joined Famous Players.

Thirty-Three And Third Years, Theatre Life

Tax Appeal Board Ruling in B. & K. Case; Three Percent a Year Wear and Tear Allowance

Washington, D.C.—A modern motion picture theatre in a large city has an expectancy of 33 1/3 years of useful life, it is estimated by the United States Board of Tax Appeals in a decision rendered last week on the appeals of the Balaban & Katz Corporation and the Tivoli Theatre Company of Chicago.

The decision of the board disagrees with the findings of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who declared the theatres had an expectancy of 40 years, but finds that the owners' estimate of 25 years is too short. The theatres involved are the Chicago and the Tivoli, both of which were built in 1921.

At the time the houses were built they were the largest and most modern in Chicago, but since that time there have been developments which affect them both as to seating capacity and facilities. New houses are now being constructed which contain improvements which cannot be installed in these theatres.

Because of the great importance of this decision, which provides for an allowance of three per cent per year for the exhaustion, wear and tear, and obsolescence of a modern moving picture theatre in Chicago —and which would be applicable to any other similar theatre in any large city—the opinion of the Board of Tax Appeals is quoted in full:

"The determination of a reasonable allowance of obsolescence to be included within the depreciation deduction necessarily involves an attempt to prophesy the future. This precludes any certainty, and the degree of soundness or accuracy with which the prophecy can be made depends upon whether the property and the business in which it is used has had sufficient past experience to form the basis of an estimate for the future. In the present case the problem is applied to two modern theatre buildings for the display of moving pictures. They were constructed in 1921 and are still generally regarded as up to date and attractive to the public as modern places of amusement. The petitioners, however, have introduced evidence substantial both in quantity and quality for the purpose of showing that, by reason of rapid and material changes in the construction of such theatres brought about by new mechanical devices and new demands of the public for comforts and conveniences, a look into the future can be made with reasonable assurance that these theatre buildings will be obsolete in 25 years at the latest. The respondent has measured the period at 40 years. The evidence leaves no doubt that the period of physical exhaustion and wear and tear is substantially longer than either of these periods, and therefore the sole question involved is the period of obsolescence.

"The difficulty in this problem is to steer a safe course between a period which sensible people would regard as unreasonably long, on the one hand, and on the other a period which represents a pessimistic guess. In the present instance it may fairly be said that the period estimated by each party can find some support in the evidence. The burden is upon the petitioners, and we are of opinion from the evidence that the period of 25 years for which they contend is shorter than is justified. After careful consideration we have concluded that a fair estimate of the probable life of these buildings before they become obsolete is 33 1/3 years from their construction, and that three per cent is an ample allowance annually to achieve the complete recovery of their capital cost."

Gortatowsky Brothers' Ritz Valdosta, Georgia, Opened

With an audience that filled the house, the Gortatowsky Brothers' new Ritz Theatre, in Valdosta, Ga., was auspiciously opened last Monday evening. Addresses were delivered by Robert Dasher, president of the Valdosta Chamber of Commerce, and R. P. Copland, prominent Valdosta attorney. The Rev. Loy Warwick, pastor of First Methodist Church, pronounced the benediction. Frank Sands, at one time manager of the Grand in Atlanta, is managing the Ritz. The opening programme featured "Tell It to the Marines." The Ritz, owned by William West and Claude Taylor, Valdosta business men, was constructed at a cost of $215,000, it is claimed. The structure housing the theatre is two stories in height. The main auditorium seats 1,101.

Close Deal for Junior Orpheum Milwaukee House

The deal for the theatre-store-office building on the corner of West Water and Wisconsin, Milwaukee, was closed this week. The building will include the new 3,500-seat Junior Orpheum Circuit house. The rest of the building will be devoted to stores and offices. The theatre part of the building will be six stories high.

The lease at the Majestic will run out in several months, and it is believed the new theatre will be ready by the time the Majestic is vacated. The Majestic, it is generally believed, will continue as a motion picture theatre and vaudeville house.

Miners' Strike May Hurt Theatres in Coal Belts

The coal strike of bituminous miners which went into effect at midnight, last Thursday, is expected to hit the box offices of theatres located in the fields embraced by the general walkout. Past observations of coal strikes show that the theatres in the territory covered by the strike do business for the first few weeks and then slump heavily as the strike lags on. Patronage in Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and Pennsylvania theatres will probably decrease as there are about 200,000 miners in those states.

U. S. Aid in Merger Sought by British

WITH the formation of the Gaumont British Company, a $12,500,000 concern of which Colonel A. C. Bromhead is chairman, the initial step to line up the British motion picture industry with the American in a combination of production, exhibition and distribution has been attempted. The new company is a combination of three important renting firms, including the W. and F. Film Service. C. and M. Films, Ltd., and Ideal Films, Ltd., with the Gaumont Company, the latter one of the leaders in the British motion picture industry.

The new unit has already taken over four large theatres in London. A chain of fifty theatres is planned. Eighteen suburban houses have been acquired as well as the Davis group and Shepherd's Bush Pavillion.

Publix Takes 25 percent Interest in Saxe

Protective Measure in Theatre War Now Raging in Wisconsin

ONLY formalities to be ironed out now remain in the long discussed Saxe-Publix deal which, according to report, was settled this week, Publix securing a twenty-five percent interest in the Saxe circuit approximating forty-five theatres in and around Milwaukee. This move is seen as a preparation for the theatre competition looming in the Wisconsin territory.

By the terms of the transaction operation of the Milwaukee Saxe houses is provided for, and Saxe continues to manage its out-of-town theatres. Mr. Saxe being a leader of First National, it was expected that his company would cast its lot with the Stanley-West Coast group, strength being lent to this belief when Saxe was negotiating with Finklestein and Ruben for a pooling of interests.

An unique situation presents itself at present in the Wisconsin territory with interest centered principally on three large circuits, the Universal chain, known here as the Milwaukee Theatre Circuit, Inc., the Saxe Enterprises, and the Fischer Theatre Circuit. In addition to these there are minor circuits springing up and individual exhibitors increasing the number of their houses until they become of appreciable power. Competition grows more and more pronounced throughout the state, the announcement by one chain of a new house bringing forth, like an echo, the announcement of another new house by the competing circuit.

Belsize, Famous Canadian House in Toronto, Opened

With the opening of the Belsize Theatre on Mount Pleasant Road, Toronto, Famous Players Canadian Corp., Toronto, now has no less than fifteen substantial neighborhood houses in the City of Toronto. The company also operates the Uptown, Tivoli, Regent and other large central theatres. The Belsize cost $160,000 and seats 1,200 persons.

6,878 Complaints Handled During 1926

THE Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce of New York, handled 6,878 complaints involving $786,829 during 1926. Sol Raives, trade vice-president of the American Arbitration Association, who released the information, announced that 1,748 claims involving $126 430 were settled in anticipation of arbitration before the date of hearing. The cases were between members of the Chamber on one side and motion picture producers and distributors on the other.

The Board considered 3,103 claims involving $405,477, and 1 670 awards were made involving $217 535. Other claims were withdrawn, dismissed or are pending. Only one claim was taken to a court after it had been submitted to the Board. In only two cases out of 3 103 considered was a seventh arbitrator necessary.

Paramount's "Chang" for Rivoli, New York, April 29; Story of Jungle

MERIAN COOPER and Ernest Schoedsack, the two adventurers who filmed "Grass" several years ago, are now in New York with a new production, "Chang," a picture revealing the hazardous life of the jungle; a year and nine months were spent in the remote interior of Siam making the production, sponsored by Famous Players-Lasky. The picture will be presented at the Rivoli Theatre, New York City, Friday, April 29.

"Chang" is said to be different than any other photoplay ever made in that jungle animals are the principal actors; the picture contains a basic plot, with the conventional forms of comedy, tragedy, etc., furnished by a white gibbon. As the protagonists of man in his eternal fight to wrest a living from the wild, Cooper and Schoedsack chose a heroic Siamese family, a man and his wife, and their three children, with their household pets, and Bimbo, the white gibbon.

Fox Erecting Theatres in Washington, New York

New Five Thousand-Seat House in Bronx; Capital Structure Under Management of Roxy

FOX THEATRES CORPORATION this week announced plans for the creation of a 5,000-seat house and business building covering the entire block bounded by Tremont, Webster, Carter and 176th Street, Bronx, N. Y. City. The new project will involve an expenditure of about $4,000,000 and C. Howard Crane, the architect, will plan a structure of six stories. Construction will start within the next few months.

A statement issued by both the Roxy offices in the Roxy Theatre, New York, and the Fox headquarters declares that the new Fox Theatre now being built in the National Press Club, Washington, D.C., will be placed under the supervision of Roxy. This is the first of the new theatres being built by William Fox, which has been placed under the management of Roxy as a result of the recent affiliation of Fox with the Roxy Theatre interest.

The name of the Washington house will be the Fox-Roxy Theatre.

Kodak's Big Wage Dividend

Payment of Three Million and Issuance of Fifty-One Hundred Stock Shares Awaits Board's Approval

AT the annual meetings of the stockholders of the Eastman Kodak Company at Jersey City, N.J., this week, approval was applied for the payment of $3,000,000 in wage dividends on July 1, 1927, and the issuance of 5,100 shares of stock sold to employees at ten dollars a share. This represents the largest wage dividend ever paid by the company and is the 17 consecutive annual payment. Including this dividend total payments since the inauguration of this policy are $20,696,118.

If the stockholders authorize the issuance of the additional stock, this will make the total 175,078 shares, including 80,248 shares originally donated by Eastman, owned or have been subscribed for by a total of 16,452 employees. At present market prices the stock distributed to employees since July 1, 1919, is valued at approximately $24,500,000.

In issuing the above statement, F. W. Lovejoy, vice-president and general manager, states that the year 1926 was not only the most successful from the standpoint of manufacturing and world-wide distribution of the company's products, but it recorded many significant developments in the progress of photography. Two important developments affect the industry. First, the improved quality of pictures on the screen due to the extensive use of panchromatic film, which is sensitive to red, yellow and green, as well as to violet and blue. A large part of all pictures released during 1926 were made on this film. Secondly, the development of a new duplicating film as an insurance against possible permanent loss of valuable negatives and for the shipment of duplicate negatives abroad.

Paramount Will Present Premiere of "Wings" at San Antonio, Texas

"WINGS," Paramount's roadshow of the airmen, will have its world premiere at San Antonio, Texas, instead of New York City, as originally announced. Its date of showing has not been decided upon as yet, however.

The reason for the change is due to Paramount's desire to assist in the raising of the subscription fund of $100,000 for the erection of a memorial monument to the famous Second Division in Washington. It has been deemed proper to present the production for the first time in San Antonio, as that is virtually the stamping ground of the Second Division, and because most of the picture's exteriors were made at that place.

One performance, to be held in May and which will take on the aspect of a benefit, is scheduled. All the receipts are to be turned over to the memorial subscription fund.

Woodhull Praises Co-operation

Points to Defeat of Adverse Measures in Two States As An Illustration

THAT centralized, efficient service can be made of substantial value to Theatre Owners is evidenced in the defeat of measures directed against the Motion Picture industry in Wisconsin and Missouri recently, said President R. F. Woodhull of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

"When tax, censorship and other adversely drawn bills were presented to the Legislative bodies of these states our National office at once got on the job, joining forces with the very efficient State organizations, and other friendly agencies within the industry. From our very extensive files we compiled arguments to be made before the Legislative Committees and articles for the press and made these as definite and convincing as the situation warranted. We laid special stress on the fact that the Motion Picture Theatre Screen was a medium of expression and entitled to the same official consideration as the newspapers.

"Another point we made very clear to the Legislators through the Theatre Owner representatives at the capitals in question, was that millions of dollars worth of real service is now being given the States and Communities through the Screen and that this is growing so as to comprehend many pressing public needs. By showing the mutual relationship between the Theatre and the State many misunderstandings were wiped away and the defeat of the adverse measures rendered easier.

"In this relation, we must give due credit to our sterling Legislative associates, Senator Joseph P. Mogler of St. Louis, and Assemblyman Henry A. Staab of Milwaukee, together with President E. W. Van Norman of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin, National Director Fred Seegert, President Wehrenberg of the Missouri organization, National Director I. W. Rodgers, and other leaders who are ever on the job to carry on for Exhibitors. We also acknowledge the helpful action of those interested in other divisions of the industry. It shows what can be done when the forces co-operate and how real service depends more on its being given at the critical moment than on any other element."

Laemmle Issues Defi on Reissue Threats

CARL LAEMMLE, President of Universal, in a statement issued this week defied persons who, he said, were threatening to reissue old versions of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" unless he bought them up.

Declaring that he had seen some of these pictures, the Universal head declared that they would be a disgrace even to the lowest and cheapest theatre in the world. He predicted that exhibitors would refuse to play the old versions if they are re-issued.

Sanitorium Will Observe Mastbaum Day May 1

Eagleville Sanitorium, near Norristown, Pa., one of the charities fostered by the two deceased Mastbaum brothers, Stanley V. and Jules E., will observe Mastbaum Day on May 1. An elaborate entertainment is to be given at the Sanitorium for the benefit of the tubercular inmates and the friends and relatives of the Mastbaum Brothers and the public generally. Guests of honor will be Mrs. Fannie E. Mastbaum, mother of Jules and Stanley Mastbaum, and Mrs. Jules E. Mastbaum. The details for the observance of the day are in the hands of a committee of which John J. McGuirk, president of the Stanley Company of America, is chairman. Irving D. Rossheim is treasurer, and the secretary is Abe L. Einstein.

De Mille Signs Ramon Romeo as Scenarist

Cecil B. De Mille has placed under contract Ramon Romeo, youthful contributor to various motion picture publications. He will write scenarios and original screen stories for De Mille.

Daylight Saving Up Before St. Louis, November, 1928

Daylight Saving for St. Louis, Mo., is not in prospect for another two summers, as proponents of the plan have decided not to submit the question to the voters of the city until the general elections of November, 1928.

A bill had been drawn up for submission to the Board of Aldermen on April 19 to turn back the clock this year on the first Sunday of June and on the last Sunday of April, in future years.

Former Mayor Henry W. Kiel, opposed to the plan, said that the Aldermen could not possibly decide on the bill in time to put it into effect this summer. He suggested that it be submitted to a direct vote by the people, and the first available election would be in November of next year. Twice before in 1921 and 1923 the plan was defeated.

Gotham Will Complete Many Productions This Month

Gotham's busiest month of the year will be April and all during that period the Gotham West Coast Studio will be the scene of much production activity as work on the series of twelve Gothams is scheduled to be completed by May 1. Included in the finishing up processes are "The Mountains of Manhattan," now ready for early April release; "Sinews of Steel," to be ready for release by the end of the present month; "The Woman Who Did Not Care," actual shooting on which will start on April 4; "The Silent Avenger," final editing and titling now under way. Also in work is "Catch As Catch Can," which will be followed by "The Down Grade" and "When Danger Calls."

Wife of Tom D. Cochrane of Paramount, Dead

Niblo Returns to M.-G.-M. to Direct "The Enemy"

After an absence of several months Fred Niblo will return to the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio to direct "The Enemy," which is planned as a Lillian Gish vehicle to follow the completion of that star's present picture, "The Wind." June Mathis has prepared the adaptation of "The Enemy."

First "Dynamite" Universal Feature "Fangs of Destiny"

Dynamite, Universal's new German police dog for whom is planned a series of canine pictures to be produced for Universal by Stuart Paton, has started working in "Fangs of Destiny." Edmund Cobb has the leading male role in the picture. Basil Dickey is writing the series especially for Dynamite. Each picture will be five reels in length.

James R. Grainger

Fox Meet at Atlantic City, May 11, Says Grainger

Returning this week from his third trans-Continental trip since last April, during which time he has spent forty-six weeks on the road, James R. Grainger, Fox Films' sales manager, announced that plans have been completed for the staging of the annual Fox Films convention of salesmen at the Ambassador Hotel, Atlantic City, beginning May 11. A series of regional conventions throughout the country will follow the Atlantic City meet, Mr. Grainger said.

While returning from California, the Fox sales head conferred with his staff and exhibitors in Atlanta, New Orleans, and Dallas.

Appells Acquire Half-Interest in York House

Nathan and Louis Appell, theatre owners in York, Pennsylvania, announced on March 28 their acquisition of one-half interest in the new Lion Theatre, opened a few weeks ago in Red Lion, York County. The interest was purchased from Walter J. Rothensies, who retains half ownership in the Lion. "The Red Lion Theatre Company" will be organized by Rothensies and the Appells and they will control and operate the theatre. The Appells recently purchased the motion picture house at Dallastown, York County, owned by the Wagman Bros. Mr. Rothensies will have a half-interest in this theatre, also.

N. Y. Governor Against New M. P. Bureau

STATING his disapproval of a bill passed by the New York State Legislature which called for the creation of a new bureau in the New York State Motion Picture Commission, a bureau of the State Department of Education, Governor Alfred E. Smith vetoed the measure last Saturday. The passing of the bill by the legislature had not resulted in much publicity. It called for an item of $6,000 to meet the annual salary of a deputy director of the bureau, which position was to have been created.

In killing the proposed ordinance the Governor said: "There is no need for additional employes in this division of the Department of Education, in view of the fact that other employes, trained in the service, were discharged, apparently through lack of work."

E. M. Asher Producer for First National Pictures

E. M. ASHER, of the firm of Asher, Small and Rogers, has been retained as one of the associate producers for First National Pictures. His company has produced a number of successful films for First National. His first production will be a Charlie Murray-George Sidney feature comedy which will be started within a month. No title has been announced for it, nor has the director been selected, to date.

E. M. Asher

During his many years' connection with the motion picture industry, Asher has accumulated a vast experience, especially in the field of comedy production. He was associated with the Mack Sennett producing organization for many years. Through his practical experience in the exploitation and showman activities, Asher has become an expert in those respective fields.

Theatre Bandit Active in Detroit Last Week

There seems to be an epidemic of theatre robberies in Detroit, O., as no less than five theatres were robbed of box-office receipts in one week. Last Wednesday a bandit robbed the Strand cashier in Pontiac of $300; he was pursued by a policeman and shot through the head, later dying in a hospital. On Thursday the Woodward-Grand cashier was surprised while entering the office and was compelled to part with the previous day's receipts. Three theatres were robbed on Friday, the first being the Iris on Grand Boulevard. The thieves got $226 from this house; the cashier of the Roosevelt was robbed of $60, while the wife of the owner of the Palace, who was acting as cashier for her husband, was held up by two youths who escaped with $75.

Bing Bill Shelved by Ohio Judiciary, Is Report

It is reported authoritatively that the Bing Bill, opposing block booking and abolishing arbitration, has been shelved by the Judiciary Committee of the Ohio State Senate. The bill was introduced by Representative Bing of Sandusky, Ohio. Fred Desberg, General Manager of Loew's Ohio Theatres, spoke against it when the bill was up for a hearing last week in Columbus.

N'west M.P.T.O. to Discuss Double Programs

When the Northwest M. P. T. O. meets at its annual convention in St. Paul in May it will have to consider, as one of the important matters of business, the question of double programs. For some time the executive board has been endeavoring to prevent the spread of this practice in the Twin Cities and recently asked the Film Board of Trade for its help. The Film Board is willing to help, but wants the movement to include the entire Northwest.

Effinger Pools Interests With Stanley Company

Herbert Effinger, operating the Strand, Sixty-ninth Street, Glenside and Embassy theatres, Jenkintown, Pa., has pooled his interests with the Stanley Company of America in the houses that are being built at Bala and Lansdowne, suburbs of Philadelphia. In the former community, P. J. Lawlor is erecting a 1,500-seat house, while Philip Harrison is constructing the theatre at Lansdowne, also a 1,500-seat house. The leases were originally acquired by Mr. Effinger and the theatres will now be operated jointly under the same agreement as other theatres in which the Stanley Company is interested.

F. B. O. Lists Seven Releases for May

Film Booking Offices has seven releases scheduled for May. May 1 is the date for the issuing of three productions: "The City of Shadows," "The Fighting Hombre," and "Yours To Command." May 22 sees the release of "The Outlaw Dog." Three releases are also programmed for May 29. They are "Silver Comes Through," "Splitting the Breeze" and "Follow Your Hunch."

Bela Sekely Supervisor at Universal City

Bela Sekely, Continental writer and critic who joined Universal several months ago as literary advisor, has been appointed supervisor for the production unit which will make "The Man Who Laughs," the Victor Hugo story which Universal plans as a super picture. Production will be started at an early date, it is asserted, with Conrad Veidt and Mary Philbin co-featured. J. Grubb Alexander is now working on the script.

Pathe's Langdon Feature Scheduled for May 7

"His First Flame," the Harry Langdon feature-length comedy which has lain on the Pathe shelves for some time, will be released by Pathe on May 7. This was the first feature comedy in which Langdon appeared and in it he executes the role of a fireman who is called to fight his first fire and meet his first sweetheart in doing so.

Defer "Marie Odile" For "The Passionate Island"

AS the result of a seven-hour conference between Gilda Gray, her husband, Gil Boag, and Arthur Hornblow, Jr., production assistant to Samuel Goldwyn, "Marie Odile," in which Miss Gray was to have made her first appearance under the Samuel Goldwyn banner, will be postponed until the actress has made "The Passionate Island," another story. Boag has renewed his option on "Marie Odile" for another year.

Hornblow is also arranging with playwrights and novelists for the next Banky-Colman vehicle which is to follow "The Magic Flame."

Columbia Lists "Perfect Thirty"

Production Schedule Enlarged for 1927-28 Season; Joe Brandt Tells of New Pictures

JOE BRANDT, President of Columbia Pictures, this week announced that his company will release a total of thirty productions for the 1927-28 season instead of twenty-four, as previously stated. No expense will be spared to have the quality and entertainment value of "The Perfect Thirty," as these productions will be known, of a high standard.

Harry Cohn, vice-president, in charge of production, has options and closed contracts on popular novels and plays, stated Mr. Brandt. Among them are "The Blood Ship," from the novel by Norman Springer, which will be directed by George Seitz, with Hobart Bosworth featured; another is "Alias the Lone Wolf," a Louis Joseph Vance novel; "A Woman's Way," by Thomas Buchanan; "San Francisco," which will be a story of society in conflict with the forces of the underworld; "The Tigress," adapted from another Alfred Henry Lewis story; "After the Storm," a surging drama, which will be given an elaborate production; "Say It with Sables," by Dorothy Howell; "So This Is Love," from the story by Gertrude Atherton; "Bridge," a story of the humor, tragedy, vices and virtues of the game that has taken the classes and the masses by storm; "Golf Widows," by Henry Clayton Cooper; "The Opening Night," from a story by Owen Davis; "My Wife's Relations," a comedy of marital complications, with an all-star cast; "The Adventuress," by Frances Marion; "Forgotten Women," by Louella Parsons; "The Siren," a story of the witcheries of a girl who never knew a real emotion until she met a man who despised her. "Modern Mothers," adapted from "Perils of Divorce," by Rachel Crothers, and "The Warning," adapted from a story by Edgar Rice Burroughs.

The remainder of "The Perfect Thirty" includes: "The College Hero," adapted from a story by Willard Mack; "By Whose Hand?", a powerful drama, by Channing Pollock; "Stage Kisses," a comedy, adapted from a story by George Bronson Howard; "Sally In Our Alley," a romantic comedy; "The Sporting Age," from a story by Charles K. Tennant.

Also "Beware of Blondes," an adaptation of Pierre Dumond's story, "Nothing To Wear," a story of crying women who keep their husbands busy buying clothes and yet have nothing to wear; "Lady Raffles," a drama of diplomatic intrigue and adventure, from a story by Alfred Henry Lewis; "The Way of the Strong," written by Octavus Roy Cohen; "That Certain Thing," a sex-appeal story, with a well-known star; "Virgin Lips," by Jack Lait; "Come Back To Aaron," and "Broadway Daddies," a surprisingly different story of present-day Cinderellas and fairy "godfathers," by Grace Atkinson.

Rudulph Leaves Fox; Editor M.P. Magazine

GERALD K. RUDULPH, former Buffalo newspaper editor and for the last five years identified with the Fox Film Corporation, has resigned his position with that company as manager of publicity to assume the editorship of "Motion Picture Magazine," a publication of Motion Picture Publications, Inc., publishers of Motion Picture Classic. His resignation becomes effective April 15.

Gerald K. Rudulph

Mr. Rudulph had ten years' experience as managing editor of one of Buffalo's leading newspapers. While with the Fox Films he served as salesman and branch manager in the Buffalo territory. When he came to New York two years ago he was attached for a time to the office of General Manager Winfield R. Sheehan. Then followed his appointment as publicity manager. Mr. Rudulph's wife and their son and daughter, who have been making their home in Buffalo, will shortly join him in New York, where they will make their future home.

F. P. Corporate Name Now Paramount Famous Lasky

A certificate has been filed in the office of the Secretary of State of New York changing the corporate name of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation.

Filing of the certificate followed ratification of the change in name by the stockholders, at the annual meeting on March 29, 1927.

Tiffany Sets Forth 1927-28 Plans

Organization Adds Three New Branches to Exchange System; Hoffman Announces Titles of New Product

IN announcing the fact that his company has added three new exchanges to its national distribution organization, M. H. Hoffman, vice-president of Tiffany Productions, Inc., points out that Tiffany now possesses an organization of world-wide proportions. In the key cities of the United States are no less than 26 exchanges; in addition to these Tiffany has four branch offices in Canada, seven in the United Kingdom and Berlin, France and Havana. Mr. Hoffman claims that every distributing centre is represented by a Tiffany exchange. The Tiffany vice-president is now in California where he is planning for the production and distributing of the Tiffany schedule for the new season. The titles of twenty Tiffany Gems have been announced and are as follows: "The Grain of Dust," Bachelor Apartments," "Grass Widows," "Their Hour," "Ladies of the Night Club," "Dixie," "Confessions of a Model," "Shanghai," "Beautiful But Dumb," "Pleasure," "Sex Appeal," "The Albany Night Boat," "The Scarlet Dove," "Lingerie," "Tia Juana Rose," "Night Life," "Women's Wares," "Scandal," "The Girl From Gay Paree" and "The Adventuress." In addition to the general releases Tiffany plans from three to six special productions for extended run showings in the larger cities of the United States and Europe. The production and scenario staffs are now busily engaged in Hollywood preparing the scripts for the forthcoming films.

Mr. Hoffman further states that Tiffany standard of production will be maintained for the coming year; the quality of the releases will be raised to a higher notch, it is said. No expense will be spared on the production of the Tiffany pictures in which will appear, it is promised, well known and capable screen personalities who will be directed by qualified men.

Within a short time the leading papers of the trade press and national magazines and newspapers will carry a national advertising and exploitation campaign, the announcement reads.

Capitol Theatre, Newton, Ia., Premiere, March 30

The Capitol Theatre, at Newton, Ia., one of the Blank-Publix chain, had its premiere March 30, following an all day gala parade and jubilee in which all of the city's merchants co-operated. The theatre's opening was heralded by an effective exploitation campaign made up of aeroplane stunts, street shows, show window displays, free attractions with prizes and a Y. M. C. A. roller skating contest.

The theatre at Newton is located in the new Hotel Maytag building. Henry Raeder is the architect for the structure, and he has identified with the Capitol many points obtained from theatres here and abroad.

Baum Now With Excellent

Becomes First Vice-President of Company; Zierler Lists Eighteen Features for New Season

LOUIS BAUM this week became first vice-president of Excellent Pictures, announces Samuel Zierler, president of the company, coincident with the statement that Excellent will produce eighteen features during the coming season. Mr. Zierler expressed his satisfaction at having secured the services of Mr. Baum and the latter declared his gratification at again becoming associated with Mr. Zierler.

Mr. Baum stated that while he has arranged to give his complete energy to his new executive duties with Excellent Pictures Corporation, there will be no interruption to any of the contracts now in force between Ellbee Pictures, of which he is the head, and other parties. These contracts will go forward, he stated.

Excellent now has in preparation a year book of detailed description on its entire product. It will be issued shortly, it was stated. The eighteen pictures are as follows:

"Confessions of a Wife," from the A. H. Woods' production by Owen Davis; "Satan and the Woman"; "Your Wife and Mine," comedy-drama with Phyllis Haver, Stuart Holmes, Wallace MacDonald and Barbara Tennant; "You're In The Army Now," rollocking tale of soldier-life; "Broadway Madness"; "The Speed Classic"; "Power of the Press"; "A Bit of Heaven"; "Life's Crossroads," Edgar Lewis' story with Mahlon Hamilton and William Conklin; "The Nest," from the stage success by Paul Geraldy. Directed by Will Nigh. With cast including Holmes Herbert, Jean Acker, Reginald Sheffield, Ruth Dwyer, Thomas Holding, Wilfred Lucas; "Women Who Dare," by Langdon McCormick; "Back to Liberty," by Arthur Hoerl. With George Walsh, Dorothy Hall, Edmund Breese, Gene del Val, De Sasia Moores; "Bowery Rose"; "The Stronger Will"; "The Dream Melody"; "Making the Varsity"; "Manhattan Knights," and "Inspiration."

Changes and Promotions in Kinogram Staffs

THE home office of Kinograms has had several important changes, promotions and additions. They were announced this week and are effective immediately. Fred Fordham, cameraman, James Lyons and Frank Dalrymple, operators, are the new faces at the home office. George Doran, veteran Kinogram operator, is promoted to head cameraman, Charles Sanwald has been named camera technician because of his photographic experiments and lighting designs. On the Pacific Coast, J. L. Herrman, operator, is placed in charge of the San Francisco territory. H. A. Butterfield, film editor in the editorial department, has been promoted to the assistant news desk now presided over by H. E. Hancock. Forrest Izard remains in his position of managing editor.

P.D.C. Releases are Rushed

De Mille and Metropolitan Studio Hurry Filming to Complete Current Schedule

WITH the rapid approach of the launching of the Producers' Distributing Corporation programme for the new season of 1927-28, the De Mille and Metropolitan studios, whose productions are distributed by Producers Distributing Corporation, are now engaged in the producing of the final pictures on the current D.D.C. line-up of releases. Actual work on the screen version of May Robson's stage success, "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary," has started at the Metropolitan studio under Erle Kenton's direction. Miss Robson is enacting before the cameras the same role she starred in on the stage. Kenton is directing from a script by Raymond Cannon. Surrounding the featured player are Harrison Ford, Phyllis Haver, Robert Edeson and Franklyn Pangborn.

Rupert Julian, directing "The Country Doctor" at the De Mille studio, has sent his assistant, Leigh Smith, and a technical staff to film blizzard scenes at White River Junction, Vt.—the same vicinity that D. W. Griffith used in filming "Way Down East." Rudolph Schildkraut interprets the title role in the screen transcription of the novel and play. Beulah Marie Dix prepared the screen adaptation from the play by Mann Page and Izola Forrester.

"Turkish Delight," Paul Sloane's directorial effort, has been completed and is now in the cutting room. Irvin S. Cobb wrote this—his first original screen story—and Julia Faye and Rudolph Schildkraut are the featured performer. Other De Mille productions in the hands of the cutters are "The Little Adventuress," directed by William De Mille and starring Vera Reynolds, and "Vanity," a Leatrice Joy vehicle which Donald Crisp directed.

M-G-M Salesmen to Convene at Los Angeles

A DEFINITE date has been set for the convention of M-G-M salesmen who this year will convene at the Hotel Biltmore in Los Angeles from May 19 to 24. The product and policy for the coming year will be outlined, and announcements relative to the new short subject department and news reel will be made at the get-together of the salesmen and executives. Some of the latter who will address the convention will be Marcus Loew, Nicholas M. Schenck, Louis B. Mayer and Felix Feist.

George Hill Begins Work on "Callahans and Murphys"

The child players in the screen version of Kathleen Norris' novel, "The Callahans and the Murphys," which George Hill will direct for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, will be Turner Savage, Monte O'Grady, Dawn O'Day and Jackie Coombs. Their canine companion will be "Rags."

Ira Morgan is chief cameraman on the new production, with which are connected Arthur Cohn as assistant director, Sidney Algier as production manager, Blanche Sewell as film editor, Harold Wilson as script secretary and Jack Miller in charge of properties.

United Color Ready to Operate New Plant

The United Color Pictures, Inc., with studios, offices and laboratories at Irvington-on-the-Hudson, N.Y., have completed their final arrangements and plans for the operation of their plant for the production of color motion pictures. Joseph Shaw, president of United Color and inventor of the United Color process, states that his company is now in readiness for the assumption of business and is prepared to submit plans and propositions to producers and distributors. Clarence Schottenfels is manager of sales for United Color Pictures.

Ben Piermont Theatrical Booker for Vitaphone

For many years associated with vaudeville and vaudeville booking offices, Ben Piermont is theatrical booker for the Vitaphone Corporation. He directly handles all bookings of theatres presenting the synchronization device, and aids the exhibitor in presenting his programmes. Co-operating with Mr. Piermont is Ralph Levy of the Theatrical Book Department, who in close contact with the Vitaphone installation forces works with the sales department on opening dates.

F. B. O. to Handle Series of One-Reel "Newslaffs"

A series of twenty-six one-reel "Newslaffs," travesties on news events of the day by Bill Nolan, has been added to the F. B. O. array of short subjects for the coming season. Nolan will produce the "Newslaffs" by a new cartoon photographic process on which he has been working for the past year, and which has now been perfected, it is said. A patent for the process has been applied for.

"Synthetic Sin" Purchased for Colleen Moore

"Synthetic Sin," Frederic and Fanny Hatton's comedy drama which was recently given its world premiere at Los Angeles, has been purchased by First National as a Colleen Moore story on the 1927-28 series of First National stellar releases.

"Body and Soul" Title of New Barker Picture

Reginald Barker's latest film for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, tentatively called "The Branding Iron," has been given the definite title of "Body and Soul."

Sam Sax's Exchange Policy for '27-28

UPON his return from the West Coast last week, Sam Sax made public the distribution policy to be pursued by his company during the ensuing season. Franchises for Gotham and other Lumas releases according to Mr. Sax, will be made without restriction clauses relating to any other pictures that the individual distributor may wish to handle. Any exchange handling Lumas releases is at liberty to handle the product of any other company. The only restriction that Mr. Sax mentions is that his product should stand on its own meri s and that no exhibitor account shall be compelled to purchase other than Sax product in order to secure Gotham productions, or that Lumas release shall be forced in on the exhibitor who desires to buy something else.

Rex Ingram Unit Sails for African Location

Director Rex Ingram and 29 persons comprised "The Garden of Allah" production unit that sailed last week from Marseilles for Algiers, where they will go to Biskra, the oasis on the border of the Sahara Desert, where exterior scenes will be shot. Ingram and others made a trip last December. They returned to the Nice studio to take interiors and now go back to Algiers to finish the picture. They expect to be gone several weeks. Photographers have been down there for some time getting local color and atmospheric shots. It is expected that the film will be cut and edited by the middle of May.

"Dearie," Next Irene Rich Vehicle for Warner Bros.

Irene Rich's next picture for Warner Bros. after "The Climbers" will be "Dearie," for which Anthony Coldeway is now writing the scenario. Archie Mayo, a new acquisition to the Warner directorial ranks, is scheduled to direct this one. Monte Blue's unit, "The Black Diamond Express," has departed from the Warner studio for an extended location trip in a remote part of Mexico. Dolores Costello's new picture is now in its third week of production. It bears no definite title as yet.

"Modern Madness" Title for Rork Production

"Modern Madness" supplants "His Son" as the title of the new Sam E. Rork production for First National release. In the cast are Lewis Stone, Ann Rork, Lilyan Tashman, Andre Beranger, E. J. Ratcliffe, Priscilla Bonner, Cleve Moore and Lincoln Stedman.

First National Buys Fanny Kilbourne's "Red Hair"

The world motion picture rights to Fanny Kilbourne's magazine story, "Red Hair," have been acquired by First National. When released the picture will bear the title of "Brick Top."

Fox Production Forces Busy

Half Dozen Features in Work at Fox Hills Plant; Dates Set for Spring and Summer Releases

THE West Coast studio of Fox Film is literally humming with activity. Approximately six directors are wielding the megaphones over as many production units engaged in the making of pictures intended for spring and early summer consumption.

In "Colleen," an early summer attraction which Frank O'Connor will direct, the title role will be portrayed by Madge Bellamy, whose choice for the part is a recent announcement. Miss Bellamy's cast will include Charles Morton, J. Farrell MacDonald, Sammy Cohen, Ted McNamara, Marjorie Beebe and Tom MacGuire.

Director Frank Brozage is nearing completion on "Seventh Heaven," a Fox Films special which is scheduled for release in the late summer. It will be given an extended run at the Carthay Circle in Los Angeles. "Is Zat So?", another stage play, will soon be finished by Alfred Green, who is directing George O'Brien, Kathryn Perry and Edmund Lowe in the leading roles. April 24th will see its release. An early summer release is "The Cradle Snatchers" which has already been finished by Howard Hawks. Featured are Louise Fazenda, J. Farrell MacDonald, Dorothy Phillips, and others. Having completed "Outlaws of Red River," Tom Mix has turned his attention to "The Circus Ace." The former picture is cheduled for May and the latter is also an early summer release.

Director Albert Ray has "Rich But Honest," a May release, in its fifth week of production. Nancy Nash and Clifford Holland are the featured players. "Slaves of Beauty," another May release, is being directed by J. G. Blystone, who is directing a cast in which appear Olive Tell, Holmes Herbert, Margaret Livingston, and others. "The Holy Terror" is another production finished and ready for release on May 1st. The picture has Buck Jones in the title role and he is now engaged in the filming of "Good As Gold" under the direction of Scott Dunlap.

Fox Films feature releases for April are mostly comedies. Outstanding among the product for the month are "Married Alive," April 17th, with the trio of principals portrayed by Matt Moore, Margaret Livingston and Lou Tellegan; "Madame Wants No Children," a foreign-made picture which presents Maria Corda.

Vitaphone Signs Additional Entertainers

NEW names appearing on the Vitaphone list of artists are the Happiness Boys, Billy Jones and Ernest Hare, Senator Ford, monologuist, California Collegians, entertainers, Irving and Jack Kaufman, composers and songsters, Aunt Jemima, black-face comedienne, the Hearst Radio Kiddies, Joe Brown, musical comedy comedian, Maxine and Virginia—the Loomis Twins, and Vivienne Segal, who sings a number from "Maytime" with John Charles Thomas.

Famous Puts Six Into Work

Equal Number Expected to Get Under Way Within Two Weeks; Ten Films Now in Simultaneous Production

FOLLOWING the lull in activities at the Paramount Hollywood studio last week, when only four pictures were in production due to the necessary adjustment of the Western studio, which now takes over the task of turning out over 70 productions yearly, now that the Eastern studio at Astoria, L.I., has been closed, six new pictures were placed into work this week, which added to four already under way put ten new pictures in actual work. Filming on six more features is scheduled to begin within the next two weeks. The immediate schedule of the Hollywood plant will keep it going at virtual capacity until well into the summer.

The four pictures in work, "Wings," "The Way of All Flesh," "The Woman on Trial" and Adolphe Menjou's new picture, was augmented with the addition of a sextet composed of "Underworld," Ben Hecht's story of gangsters; "The World at Her Feet," a Florence Vidor vehicle; "Time to Love," Raymond Griffith's new starring comedy; "The Drums of the Desert," a Zane Grey story with Warner Baxter and Marietta Millner in the leading parts; "Rolled Stockings," the Paramount Junior Stars' picture, and "Who's Your Friend," starring Richard Dix.

Work is scheduled to begin in two weeks' time on "Grounds for Marriage," Betty Bronson's next picture which Arthur Rosson is to make; "Fireman Save My Child," in which Raymond Hatton and Wallace Beery are to work under the direction of Edward Sutherland; "Ten Modern Commandments," to star Esther Ralston, who will work under the guidance of Dorothy Arzner, and "The Last Outlaw," a Paramount Western vehicle which will feature Gary Cooper.

Universal to Build Theatre Circuit in Indiana

WHERE Universal has had no theatre representation in Indiana, the establishment of a circuit of theatres in that State is now a probability. Universal but recently announced plans for a house at Marion. Now the company plans the erection of a theatre in Fountain Square, Indianapolis. The two houses have been announced as the beginning of Universal's projects in Indiana and it is said that negotiations are now in progress for additional theatres in other cities of the State.

Key City Reports

Brief Reviews of Box Office Conditions at Leading Theatres About the Country

New York City

BUSINESS was good but not spectacular last week along Broadway, with the Roxy opposition, Lent and uncertain weather to worry the managers.

The Roxy did very well on its first week in which Fox has a hand. "Wolf's Clothing" was somewhat discounted by the wise ones as an attraction for this house, but came through with a strong gross—and most of the other houses felt it. The picture held over.

The Paramount, with Sousa's band as an added attraction to "Fashions for Women," had a good week but broke no records. The Capitol did average business on "The Fire Brigade." The Strand was in good shape on "Long Pants," although it did not make the grade for a second week. The Rialto is holding up well with "Metropolis," and the run looks better than was predicted for this somewhat unusual picture.

None of the two-dollar attractions is breaking records at the moment. The Rivoli will drop this scale with the end of the run of "Old Ironsides."

Los Angeles

PROBABLY in no city in the United States are the people so picture wise as in Los Angeles. Being close to the heart of the industry, the lowdown on what's good and not so good soon becomes public property even before the picture reaches the screen. Pictures here are a general topic of conversation, so word of mouth advertising plays an important part in the theatre man's scheme of things.

Los Angelians shop for pictures—distance means nothing if the picture is a good one. The Carthay Circle Theatre proves it—in an out of the way location and hard to reach, yet doing excellent business over the past twenty weeks with "What Price Glory". The girl at the box office tells you over the 'Phone it's safer to order your tickets in advance than to take a chance at the box office.

The Forum is another one of those theatres that pull business on picture merit—difficult to reach from any section of the city—however, "Flesh and the Devil" carried heavy box-office receipts for eight weeks. Rupert Julian's production, "The Yankee Clipper," opened at this theatre about ten days ago. The management reports good business and building steadily at the box office. An interesting thing about "The Yankee Clipper" is the fact that it is drawing a high class type of patrons.

"White Gold" closed at the Figueroa Theatre after a two weeks' run. Business was reported as being satisfactory for the first week and fair for the second. "White Gold" did more in its second week than "Don Juan" did in its second week at this theatre.

John Barrymore in "The Beloved Rogue" at the Criterion, is playing to normal business with a slight falling off about the middle of its second week's run. Whether it will play for four weeks is questionable. Ronald Colman is very popular and pulls at the box office.

"Old Ironsides" at Grauman's Egyptian is now in its ninth week and doing well. Business is not reported as startling.

"Sorrows of Satan" has just opened at the Million Dollar following a five-week run of "Tell It to the Marines." Receipts on the marine picture are reported as above normal. "Sorrows of Satan" opened with a regular amount of business.

Eddie Peabody is back at the Metropolitan with his banjo and everything. He was away for five months playing at the Granada in San Francisco. His return engagement started with the opening of "Getting Gertie's Garter." All house records were broken on the opening day. The management credits the record breaking to Peabody, although they say at the same time that the picture is being heartily received. Marie Prevost, the star, is popular.

"The Taxi Dancer" at Loew's State played to normal business, enhanced through personal appearances of Joan Crawford, who danced the Black Bottom.

Chicago

THEATRE business throughout the city of Chicago was slightly below par last week, owing to the most strenuous mayoralty campaign waged in many years being in full blast.

However, many of the de luxe houses both in the loop and in residential neighborhoods, reported good business. This was the case at the Chicago Theatre, where "The Demi Bride," with a stage show which was considered slightly below the usual standard of this house, did a good business.

The Roosevelt inaugurated its return to a long-run policy with the showing of "Casey At The Bat," which opened big. On the other hand, McVickers with "Sorrows of Satan" in its last week, made a poor showing. At the Oriental, Paul Ash continued to pull them in with a good stage show, "The Telephone Girl" being the feature.

On the northside, "Orchids and Ermine," plus a typical good Bennie Kreuger stage show, resulted in Better than average business for the Uptown, while "The General" at the Granada did a fair business. Lubliner & Trinz Senate and Harding theatres both had "Tell It to the Marines" as their feature attraction, and both houses turned in big box-office reports. At the Sheridan Theatre, "What Every Girl Should Know" on the screen, and the singing comedian, Grace La Rue on the stage, proved good business getters and receipts were up to normal.

Southside theatres reporting good business include the Tivoli where "Tell It to the Marines" proved a strong drawing card, and The Piccadilly, which was showing "Love's Greatest Mistake," where business was about average. The Capitol did its normal business with "The General," Vitaphone and an elaborate stage show.

"Old Ironsides" on Tuesday, succeeded "Beau Geste" as the attraction at the Auditorium and did a very satisfactory business.

Boston

PLANS for the closing of two of the downtown Boston picture theatres for the purpose of redecorating, which were expected to go into effect during the Lenten season, have been postponed until midsummer.

Numerous outside attractions have served only to stimulate and maintain good houses throughout the week. Business is reported as far above average and well in excess of the same week a year ago.

Keith-Albee's Boston Theatre, which submitted, for the first time last week, a feature film, met with such success that it took similar action again this week and this will be the policy for the present. This week's offering "For Wives Only" and a Spring and Summer Fashion Show under the direction of Madame Jeffries drew capacity houses.

"What Price Glory" is well past the middle of its third month and going strong.

"Cabaret" at the Metropolitan Theatre proved a big attraction and played to the usual capacity houses which have marked this house since its opening. "Egypt," the stage number, was particularly beautiful and received much favorable press mention.

"The Night of Love" at Loew's State maintained good houses during the week, although slightly below the special program houses during anniversary week. The Commanders is the musical offering, consisting of an orchestra well above the average.

"Don't Tell the Wife" at the twin houses, the Modern and Beacon; "Paradise for Two" at the Fenway, "Flesh and the Devil" at the Bowdoin Square, and "Easy Pickings" at the Olympia played to better than average.

So much success attended the simultaneous presentation of the same feature at five theatres two weeks ago that next week the same stunt will be tried again, with the Fenway, Olympia, Capitol, Scollay Square Olympia and Central Square theatres presenting "Children of Divorce."

St. Louis

DESPITE several very rainy days and other adverse weather conditions, not to mention the advanced Lenten Season, the first run theatres of St. Louis enjoyed very good business under the circumstances the week ended on April 1. And at that Al Jolson, popular stage entertainer, playing at the Shubert-Rialto Theatre, is said to have grossed $48,000 or thereabouts for his week's run at a $4.40 top.

At the Ambassador Theatre, Seventh and Locust Street, Milton Sills in "The Sea Tiger" was the principal screen attraction, but frankly Gertrude Ederle was the big drawing card. The theatre had a good week 'tis said.

Loew's State also did very nicely with John Barrymore's "The Beloved Rogue."

At the Grand Central Theatre, Gene Rodemich, for about eight years the chief musical attraction at the house, was making his farewell appearance, as he goes to Boston under the Publix banner, so it is very hard to judge the drawing power of the film offerings "The Gorilla Hunt" and "Hills of Kentucky." The house played to good business throughout the week.

The Missouri had a fair week, everything considered. There Constance Talmadge in "Venus of Venice" was on the screen.

The St. Louis Theatre playing "Fighting Love" on the screen and five acts of vaudeville on the stage had a good week.

Atlanta

LOCAL box offices were undeniably affected this week by the exceedingly variable weather. The Metropolitan recorded an excellent week with "Forever After" and a sextette of girls on the stage as an added attraction. "New York" drew favorable comments at the Howard, where average good business obtained. "Johnnie Get Your Hair Cut," at Loew's Grand, had the children wild with delight. Keith's Georgia recorded another winning week with "Blind Alleys," voted good, and a pleasing vaudeville bill. "Nobody's Widow" sent very good crowds away from the Rialto in a satisfied mood. The smaller downtown houses fared varyingly. The New Alamo came out nicely on a repertoire program of re-issued favorites. "Rustling For Cupid" and "Stolen Ranch" did fair at the Tudor, while the Cameo struck a fair average on its two-day second runs for the week.

San Francisco

THE past week was another successful one for the motion pictures houses, partly due to the pictures and partly to acts. The Granada did exceptionally well with "Evening Clothes," although a great deal of the success is due to Jack Partington's presentation act. "The Red Kimona" did not draw at advanced prices at the Capitol Theatre, as was expected, and there was not enough advertising. "Casey At The Bat" proved as popular the second week at the St. Francis as the first, and for that reason is being held over a third week. No special acts are shown with this picture.

"The Flesh and The Devil" attracted, and Loew's Warfield is holding it for a second week, the first time this theatre has done that. Some claim Fanchon & Marco's presentation act, "In Dutch" was what really attracted the people. Thos. Meighan drew a crowd to the California in "Blind Alleys." The Golden Gate Theatre reported good business and interest in "Rubber Tires," although the vaudeville did the most attracting in this case. The Cameo Theatre reported good business with Tiffany's "The First Night," and the Union Square did a good business by showing the "Block Signal."

The residential theatres did well also, among them being the Levin Theatre, managed by Nat Holt, at the "Wigwam" and the L. R. Greenfield, with the "New Mission." At the Coliseum was "Faust," which for four days packed the theatre in the afternoons and evenings. "Private Izzy Murphy," for four days in the afternoons and evenings, packed Nat Holt's house, although part of the crowd came to see Jack Russell and his comic men.

Minneapolis

THE earliest spring that Minneapolis has had in years is serving to counteract the influence of Lent to some extent, and as a result, business at the motion picture theatres continues up to the average. The current week saw some keen competition from the legitimate houses, but the leading movie theatres recorded good audiences through the week. At the Garrick, Marion Davies in "The Red Mill" assured a patronage which was better than it has been at that house for some time. Lon Chaney held over for a second week at the Strand Theatre in "Tell It To The Marines," drew an excellent business, although it was not thought advisable to hold the picture over for a third week. "Venus of Venice" recorded only average business at the State, while "The Sea Tiger" was shown to good-sized audiences. The Grand, a second-run theatre in the Loop, offered Clara Bow in "It," and the film duplicated its recent success at the State. Counter-attractions for the week included Chrystal Herne in "Craig's Wife," at the Metropolitan, with the original New York cast, and Edith Taliaferro, playing with the Bainbridge stock company in "The Patsy," at the Shubert.

Kansas City

DESPITE a deluge of rain the entire week-end the attendance at most first-run houses was up to the average this week, there being an unusually strong line-up of pictures.

At the Royal "Casey At The Bat," held over a second week, continued to do a big business, while the same was true of Norma Shearer in "The Demi-Bride" at the Newman Theatre. At the Liberty, Conway Tearle in "My Official Wife" played to better than normal attendance. Lon Chaney in "Flesh and Blood" also attracted more than an average attendance at the Pantages, while "McFadden's Flats" at the Mainstreet, played to average crowds, as did "Hills of Kentucky," at the Globe.

No unusual effort at exploitation was made at any of the theatres, with the exception of the Royal.

Seattle

OPENING at a straight 50-and-75-cents admission policy, with five de luxe shows daily, Vitaphone and "Don Juan" established the greatest box office success of the past several seasons in the Pacific Northwest, and reached a mark that has hardly ever been surpassed by any motion picture house in this city. Although official figures have not been announced, it is estimated that the house did a gross business of between $15,000 and $20,000 the first week, topping by several thousand the largest gross of any other house in many seasons. The Blue Mouse, formerly a 25-cent-house, has a seating capacity of only 1,000. The present bill bids fair to run at least four weeks.

Second in box-office success was the Fifth Avenue Theatre with "The Demi-Bride" and a Fanchon-Marco stage revue. "McFadden's Flats" also did a good business, despite the fact that it opened its engagement "cold" when a previous attraction flopped. "Love's Greatest Mistake," at the Coliseum and "White Black Sheep," at the Columbia, did their share of business—about average for recent weeks. "The Auctioneer" did a fair business, in conjunction with a mediocre vaudeville program. A re-issue of "Abraham Lincoln" was used in an effort to bolster up matinee business.

Competition for the week was offered by "Earl Carroll Vanities," at the Metropolitan, a legitimate house. The show was "censored" by a civic censor board at the opening performance, and hence, did a very good business the rest of the week. The Orpheum, vaudeville house, was the only other competitor. Weather has been pleasant and business conditions in general, about average.

Cleveland

COLD, rainy weather, spring school vacation, and especially good screen attractions combined to pack all of the local downtown theatres. "Mr. Wu," at the Allen, attracted not only a full house for every performance, but also a full lobby and a long box-office line. An elaborate presentation gave the program added appeal. "Slide, Kelly, Slide" did more business during its second week at the Stillman than it did the first week. The matinees were the biggest surprise, as it was figured that this was a man's picture. The women crowded in for the afternoon performances, however. It is being held over a third week. Jackie Coogan's picture, "Johnny Get Your Hair Cut" kept the State Theatre filled during the entire week, both afternoons and evenings. "The Denver Dude" and "For Wives Only" divided honors evenly at Reade's Hippodrome, while "Fighting Love" was enthusiastically supported at Keith's Palace, where it was surrounded by a strong vaudeville bill. "Casey At The Bat" held up satisfactorily during its continued engagement at the Cameo and Keith's East 105th Street reports holiday business for the week with "For Wives Only." A second-run engagement of "The Kid Brother," at the Park, was nothing to brag about, and Buster Keaton in "The General," at the Circle, also a second-run, with Vitaphone specialty numbers, got by, but not with any special honors. Legitimate attraction competition was light. Neighborhood houses reported business variously good and bad, depending principally upon the attraction.

Milwaukee

AN unusually good week was enjoyed by downtown theatres despite the blizzard that came unexpectedly on the last day of the week. Good pictures, excellent weather conditions, and no counter-attractions were attributed as factors in making good business. "The General." at the Alhambra, had them crowding practically every performance. "It," at the Strand, was so very well appreciated and enthusiastically received that it is being held over for a second week. The attraction at the Garden was "Pals First" and played to good houses. The Double bill at the Wisconsin, "Alaskan Adventures" and "Slide, Kelly, Slide," made a strong appeal to the theatre-going public, while "A Kiss In A Taxi," at the Merrill, drew very well.

The good business was echoed in the neighborhood houses, where managers generally said attendance was a bit above average for this time of the year. Possibly, the strong pictures accounted for this. "Faust," at the Milwaukee was very well attended. "The Scarlet Letter," at the Tower and also at the Modjeska, "The Midnight Sun," at the Venetian, and "Midnight Lovers," at the Parkway, were strong attractions.

Denver

AFTER two weeks of comparatively poor business all Denver first-run theatres reported attendance and receipts to be above normal this week. The Victory theatre, with "The Show," reports excellent business, while the other Publix house, the Rialto showing the "Demi-Bride" reports receipts back where they should be. The America, showing a first-run on "Butterflies in the Rain," with an elaborate presentation, also did capacity.

The Aladdin, far out on Colfax Avenue, showing "The Better 'Ole for the third week did a fair business, although not up to the mark set for the first two weeks by this Vitaphone production.

The Lenten period in Denver has affected business rather spasmodically. Some weeks business has been away off while other weeks, especially the last week, apparently for no reason at all, receipts not only came back to standard but above that mark.

Indianapolis

MOVIE business was off in Indianapolis last week.. Picture house managers reported Indianapolis women were busy with pre-Easter shopping and were not attracted by current films.

"The Fire Brigade" despite unusual advance publicity failed to draw the business expected at the Apollo. The show which was to have been held another week was not held because box office receipts were disappointing.

The Circle led business of Major houses. The Vitaphone continuing to draw crowds. Colleen Moore in "Orchids and Ermine" was the picture with the orchestra back in the pit again for last week.

"Slide Kelly Slide" did only fair business at Ohio. Berkell Players opened stock season at English's which probably drew many from the screen.

Weather conditions during the week were fair, rain visiting the city two days, which was a slight damper.

Portland, Ore.

WARM spring sunshine and the lure of the open road knocked the bottom out of business at the theatres here during the past week.

"Don Juan" and the Vitaphone caused the greatest commotion. The theatre did capacity business throughout the week, and all comers praised both picture and the new device.

"Venus of Venice" at the Broadway drew good business for the first three days, and average the balance of the week. Picture was well liked. Fanchon and Marco's "Mardi Gras" stage attraction on the same bill was well received and rated considerably above the average.

"Butterflies in the Rain" at the Columbia did just fair business, with comments on the picture about the same.

"McFadden's Flats" at the Liberty drew reasonably well over the week-end, and fairly well during the week. Audiences liked the picture. Hauptmann, pianist-director of orchestra, fairly popular and credited with some [illegible]

"Kiss in a Taxi" at the Rivoli did unsatisfactory business. Daniels' fans did not like the picture. Critics panned it.

Peoples Theatre played "Blarney" at 25c and got fair business.

Baltimore

THE inclement weather during the latter part of the week beginning Monday, March 28, hurt moving picture business somewhat in Baltimore but despite that fact, business generally was good for the entire week even though it is now nearing Easter.

Keith's Hippodrome still leads the field. "The Better Way" and the Siamese Twins on the family vaudeville bill proving excellent drawing cards. Next to that came Loew's Century and Valencia Theatre with "Women Love Diamonds" at the former and "Tell It to the Marines" starring Lon Chaney, at the latter. While the Valencia was crowded practically during the whole week the excellent business at the Century is attributed somewhat to the overflow from the Valencia which is located atop the Century.

Warner's Metropolitan had very good business with "The Gay Old Dog" and Vitaphone. The Rivoli did pretty good during the entire week with "The Sea Tiger" featuring Milton Sills and Mary Astor and Alice White almost running away with the film.

"Love Makes 'Em Wild" pulled them in fairly well at the New Theatre and "The Denver Dude" with Hoot Gibson and five acts of family vaudeville did fair business at the Garden.

The Embassy had "Don Juan" with John Barrymore for its second run but business seemed to be hurt because they did not have it exclusively in the downtown section, it being shown simultaneously at neighborhood houses as well. During the week beginning Monday, April 11, however, the Embassy will show "Rubber Tires" for its first run in Baltimore.

Central Pennsylvania

PRESENCE of Theodore Roberts, veteran screen and stage star, in person in a clever act at the State Theatre, at the same time that the film play, "Grumpy," in which he stars, was being offered, was a big stimulus to business in this theatre which is devoted part to vaudeville and part to pictures. Another outstanding feature of the week was "The Night of Love," featuring Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky, at Loew's Regent.

The weather was splendid, except on the last two days of the week. Satisfactory box office results were reported at the Colonial, where the feature film was "Prince of Tempters," with Ben Lyon, Lois Moran and an all star cast; and at the Victoria where Bebe Daniels and Chester Conklin were shown in "A Kiss in a Taxi." According to the management this type of comedy seems to be especially popular with Harrisburg audiences at this time of year.

At the Russell Theatre, "Flesh and Blood" drew big crowds in the latter part of the week.

Albany

JUDGING from the crowds that [illegible] the motion picture theatres of Albany during the past week, the Lenten season is having absolutely no effect on business. All records in the history of the Mark Ritz were broken last week, when the second week of the Vitaphone, and Clara Bow in "It," established a business that will probably stand for many months to come.

As a result of [illegible] Theatre, showing double feature first runs, with "Valencia" and "College Days" caught the overflow and had one of its best weeks in several months.

The Leland played to capacity with "Slide Kelly Slide."

The Mark Ritz Theatre, a [illegible] first run house, did only a fair week with "Blind Alleys." The matinees at this house were light.

In Schenectady, the Strand, a downtown first run house, ran light with "Zander, the Great," while only fair business was done at the magnificent State with "Men of Steel." In Troy, fine business was done at the Troy Theatre with "The Flesh and the Devil" and the Vitaphone, the first appearance of the latter. At the American, a downtown house in Troy, "Slide Kelly Slide" started off fair, but it soon became noised over the city that it was a worth while picture and each day's business ran ahead of the preceding one. Fair business was done at the Lincoln with "The Magic Garden." Weather remained cool.

Salt Lake City

DOWNTOWN theatre business in Salt Lake City was very good as a whole last week, the weather having been exceptionally fine. With the exception of the American, all first run houses report business to have been very good. "Blind Alleys," with an added stage attraction went over big at the Paramount Empress Theatre, as did "The Understanding Heart" at the Victory. The prices were raised at the American Theatre for their showing of "The Better 'Ole" with the complete musical score by the New York Philharmonic orchestra being reproduced by the Vitaphone, and also a special Vitaphone presentation; business however was only fair. "Laddie" at the Gem drew large crowds, as did "The Music Master" at the Pantages Theatre. "Heroes of the Night" was the Orpheum feature picture, and "Tin Hats" was offered at the Kinema in connection with Goodspeeds juvenile artists who have been appearing at this [illegible] several weeks. Business [illegible] neighborhood and second run houses is picking up.

New Orleans

THE Lenten season is not seriously affecting the business of the downtown motion picture houses. The past week was one of the best enjoyed in some time. The weather has been unusually good and with theatres playing strong pictures, attendance was large.

The two most talked of pictures in the city were "The Winning of Barbara Worth," at the Saenger Theatre, which proved a big [illegible] cellent business, and "Gigolo" at Saenger's Strand, which pulled them in.

Loew's State continues to do its share of the business. Tom Mix in "No Man's Gold" was the past week's attraction and the theatre enjoyed a large business.

At Saenger's Liberty, "The White Black Sheep," with Dick Barthelmess and Patsy Ruth Miller, drew its share of the patronage. The picture opened to small crowds the first two days of the week, after which business was excellent.

Mae Murray contiues to prove a popular star with local theatre-goers. They flocked in large numbers to see her at Saenger's "Globe," even though the picture had its local premiere at Loew's State a few weeks ago. "Tell It to the Marines," a Lon Chaney vehicle, is still drawing at the Trianon.

"Rose of the Tenements," playing at Schiro's Tudor Theatre, played to houses that were disappointing. Business was below the level in this house.

The management of the Crescent Theatre was highly pleased with the business that was done by Jack Holt in his latest release, "Man of the Forest," which drew good houses during the whole week.

Neighborhood houses continue to do good business despite the Lenten season.

Des Moines

CONSTANCE TALMADGE in "Venus of Venice" did satisfactory business at the Des Moines Theatre last week, while Pola Negri in "Hotel Imperial" also did very well at the Capitol. The latter had an added Publix attraction of the Leviathan Band.

Although the title proved somewhat misleading and had the public guessing, "The Taxi Dancer" played to very fair business for the first half of the week. Finishing the week, "Held by the Law" did fairly well.

Tampa

THE popularity of Clara Bow was demonstrated here the past week. At the Tampa "Children of Divorce" pulled excellent business, while a block away the Victory did good business in a second run of "It." For the last half of the week the Tampa had "The Red Mill" and business was up to standard. The Victory used "The Fire Brigade," another second run, and it drew well also.

Over at the Strand "The Magic Garden" mopped up for two days, pulling the biggest Monday in a year. "The Return of Peter Grimm" did well for three days and "Salvation Jane" did two fine days, winding up a week that showed up nice on the profit side.

The popular Franklin had "The Denver Dude," who kept the house well dressed for three days, then "Birds of Prey" and "The Valley of Hell" two days each kept business up to usual.

Oklahoma City

WITH rainy weather for four days in succession, and nothing spectacular in attractions at the moving picture houses, business was not rushing at the first-run theatres. The Liberty, however, did unusually well the first half of the week with "The Fourth Commandment," this changed to "Perch of the Devil" and ordinary business the last half of the week. "The Show" played all week at the Criterion and played to the usual full audiences Saturday and Sunday with a let down in attendance the middle of the week. "Long Pants" didn't seem to cause much excitement at the Empress, but the fact that it remained throughout the week, when this theatre usually pulls a picture in midweek if it "flops," would indicate that box-office returns didn't fall below par. "Fashions for Women" played to fair business at the Capitol the first of the week, but played one day less than the usual half-week. "Hotel Imperial" played for three days and to a little better business. With the exception of the extra large ads for "The Fourth Commandment" used by the Liberty, nothing unusual was done in the way of advertising and exploitation by the Oklahoma City theatres.

Ottawa

DURING the week of March 27 "The Fire Brigade" at the downtown Regent Theatre was liked by old and young alike and both afternoon and evening performances filled well.

Thomas Meighan also proved to be a popular draw at B. F. Keith's Theatre in "Blind Alleys." Mae Murray had not been seen for some time on an Ottawa screen and her "Valencia" at the Centre Theatre was popular with the younger set. Dolores Costello proved that she is a growing magnet with steady crowds attending the Imperial Theatre for "The Third Degree," with which was presented added vaudeville specialties.

Theatres in Ottawa and Hull, Quebec, catering to French-Canadian patronage did not do so well because of the missions which were being conducted every night at the Roman Catholic churches. This affected the patronage at Laurier Theatre in Hull, where the attraction was "An Affair of the Follies"; at the Eden in Hull, which played "Phantom of the Opera"; the Capitol in Hull, and also the Francais in Ottawa, where three different programmes were presented, features being "The Unknown Cavalier," "Woman Power" and "The Flaming Forest." The Fern Theatre, a neighborhood house, was crowded as usual every night, the presentation being "Subway Sadie" for the first half.

Studio Briefs

"Claney's Kosher Wedding," F. B. O.'s comedy of Irish-Jewish life, was started at the F. B. O. Studio, in Hollywood, this week with Gil Pratt directing George Sidney, Will Armstrong, Ann Brody, Mary Gordon, Sharon Lynn, Rex Lease ad Ed Brady.

Columbia Pictures has chosen George B. Seitz to direct "The Blood Ship," one of the company's more important productions for the coming year.

"The King of Spades," the second of the series of short comedies in which Edward Everett Horton is starring, was finished this week by Hollywood Productions for release by Paramount. J. A. Howe, director of the first Horton, "Dad's Choice," directed the second comedy of the series at the Metropolitan studio. Cooperating on the story were Thomas J. Crizer, N. T. Barrows and James Davis. Appearing in the support are Violet Bird, Jack Raymond, Richard Neil and Jack Curtiz.

Sonya Levien, scenarist with the De Mille studio, who recently completed the continuity on "The Heart Thief," is now preparing the continuity on "Harp in Hock," soon to go into production at Metropolitan.

All of Walter Futter's remaining Curiosities on the Educational programme of releases will be titled by Beth Brown, an author and title-writer who is responsible for the titles of a large number of short subjects.

Pathe's serial unit making "The Crimson Flash" has completed camera work at the Cosmopolitan studio in New York City. The unit made use of the Cosmopolitan studio to shoot interior scenes in the new serial and was temporarily located at the old Pathe studio at 134th Street for the taking of smaller sets. This is the first time that a Pathe company has returned to the scene of its earlier serial endeavors. The major portion of the "Crimson Flash" exteriors was made in and around Charleston, S. C.

"White Pants Willie," Johnny Hines' forthcoming First National picture, was put into work recently at the Tec Art studio in Hollywood. All preliminary work has been finished. Leila Hyams has the leading feminine role opposite Hines. Other players signed to date are Walter Long, Ruth Dwyer, Margaret Seddon, Henry Barrows and George Kuwa. An educated goose, Bozo by name, will have a comedy role in "White Pants Willie."

Actively engaged in the production of three comedy series, Sierra Pictures product is rapidly assuming shape under the supervision of its president, Dale Hanshaw, and Horace Carpenter. The former is supervising a series featuring Earle Douglass while the latter is guiding T. Roy Barnes through a series of society dramas. The Bedtime Stories, starring wild animals, are also being turned out.

Having completed her role opposite W. C. Fields in his new Paramount comedy, Mary Brian departed last Friday for Abilene, Tex., where she will visit relatives prior to continuing to Hollywood. Her next picture has not been announced.

Accompanied by a large supporting cast, the Duncan Sisters—Vivian and Rosetta—left Hollywood last Tuesday for Lake Tahoe, where the company will spend one month on location filming scenes for "Topsy and Eva," their first film for United Artists. Included in the party were Del Lord, director, Gibson Gowland, Imogene Robertson and Nils Aster, European actor who is making his American debut in the film. The director's staff is made up of Clarence Hennecke, comedy constructor, "Lucky" Humberstone, assistant director, John Boyle, chief cinematographer, and Hal Depew, second cameraman.

Two more names were added to the cast of Columbia's "The Romantic Age" when Bert Woodruff and Stanley Taylor were signed this week for two important roles in this production which is based on an original story by Dorothy Howell and which Robert Florey is directing.

Earthquakes and "Specials!"

LEONARD HALL, the distinguished motion picture critic of the Washington Daily News, says in the issue of Monday, April 4:

"Again International Newsreel displays its dominance in its field. International Newsreel is miles ahead in the news game at present.

"This week it clambers over the opposition with stunning shots of the latest Japanese 'quake."

And it wasn't a "special;" just a part of International Newsreel's regular service, at no extra cost to the exhibitor. When International Newsreel issues a special, it means something.

"Brain Storms"
(Educational—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

THIS comedy appears to be the result of a brain storm on the part of those acting in and connected with the production, but it's funny, though ridiculous, so justifies its claim to bookings. It opens with a series of gags built around the cast's attempt to imprison a canary. The next sequence shows the escape from an asylum of a lunatic; he becomes acquainted with the rest of the cast, who, following the canary business launch a charity bazaar. Then—well, you can see the comic possibilities. Clem Beauchamp, George Davis, Phil Dunham, Lucille Hutton and Jack Lloyd head the funmakers, directed by Stephen Roberts.

Lots of furniture is despoiled, the gags click along in fast tempo and everyone in the cast is worked hard and often. Give this little comedy a big hand.

"Jail Birdies"
(Christie-Educational—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

BOBBY, all set to graduate from college, is arrested for speeding and assigned to the rock pile. His fiancee and her father observe his labors and he explains it is football practice and, when asked to demonstrate, he and the other prisoners put on a very amusing burlesque. Then follow the scenes attendant on the graduation, which Bobby is permitted to attend on his promise to return to jail. He accomplishes this after a series of hilarious adventures.

Bobby Vernon, Frances Lee, Billy Engle, Tom Dempsey, and Eddie Baker head the cast. Walter Graham directed and he made a good job of it. "Jail Birdies" is good for quite a few laughs.

"The Lone Star"
(Universal Mustang—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

ANOTHER adventure of Fred Gilman in the role of a Texas Ranger is this latest Mustang release and there is the usual helping of rough and tumble fighting, riders silhouetted against a sky line, the foiling of a plot to "get" a rancher and, of course, a touch of romance. Mix these ingredients together, bake the proper length of time and the result is a two-reel Western entirely suitable, in this instance for any house that wants one. Naturally, Mr. Gilman foils all his enemies, rescues the ranch, has numerous narrow escapes and wins a bride. What more could you ask in two reels?

"Girls"
(Fox Comedy—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

OF course, when O. Henry wrote this story the jazz age hadn't begun—but it's alright any way for the year 1927 and we venture the opinion that those who like comedies will find plenty of amusement in this one.

All the action takes place within a co-ed college where there lives a boy who has never been kissed. One of the girls' schemes to entrap him and his efforts to escape lead him to the girls' swimming pool. Here are bathing beauties galore, and the slapstick and otherwise brand of comedy sets a fast pace. The unkissed hero is finally trapped and finds that kisses are not so bad after all.

"Nature's Wonderland"
(Fox Variety—One Reel)

FROM summer valleys to glacier trails, a view of the world's biggest trees, spectacular mountain falls, smoking craters of volcanos and a variety of gorgeous mountain scenery are all offered as evidence of why Californians shout so loud about their country, during a trip of a skeptical group of Easterners. It's a fine scenic and ends with an extra fine panoramics hot.—E. G. JOHNSTON.

"The Yellow Dog"
(American Cinema—One Reel)

THIS, the second of the picturized versions of the Edgar A. Guest poems, is fully as entertaining as the first of the series. It has the same sympathetic appeal, in fact more so, as the main characters are a little yellow dog and his little boy master, and who, among the spectators of motion pictures, does not get a "kick" out of this type of player. While "Bill and I Went Fishing," the first of the film versions, may not have sold the underlying theme to some the appeal of this number is so elemental that no one can miss the idea behind it.

"The Yellow Dog" is a good buy for any theatre.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

"Felix the Cat in Germ Mania"
(Sullivan-Educational—One Reel)

THIS is one of the most amusing numbers of the "Felix" series yet screened. Though viewed in a projection room without the aids of music or the festive spirit of an audience to help the risibles it nevertheless caused a continuous chuckle. Felix wanders into a scientific laboratory and starts some experiments on his own hook, playing around with fluids with alleged enlarging and contracting faculties; he incurs the enmity of a microbe and the usual chase ensues with Felix emerging the victor.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

"Climbing Into Cloudland"
(Hodge-Podge-Educational—One Reel)

HODGE-PODGE seems a rather unfair brand name for this series as the average reel is always made up of beautiful scenic views, ingenuity of a high order in the composition of the trick shots and comedy scenes which are comical. This number shows Glacier National Park, fantastical views of China and then the Sphinx in Egypt, but this bare description doesn't take into account the many entertaining bits of business introduced.

It's a good bet for any type of house.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

"The Agile Age"
(Sportlight-Pathe—One Reel)

ANOTHER interesting and instructive number of the Grantland Rice Sportlight series, this one a picture treatise on sports requiring agility. A number of examples are furnished, among them representatives of the animal kingdom; Bill Tilden playing tennis, a Lacrosse contest, and some of the National Women Swimming stars training at Bermuda. Alfred Jochim, of the Swiss Turnverein, gives an exhibition on the bars and rings.

There is no let-down in the entertainment value of this series.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

"Catalina Here I Come"
(Sennett-Pathe—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

A FAIRLY amusing Mack Sennett offering with a good selling angle in that the official start of the much-publicized Catalina Channel Swim is one of the scenes incorporated. Madeline Hurlock and Eddie Quillan head the cast of comedians, which puts on a burlesque contest with considerable high-jinks on the bounding waves. There are a number of amusing gags and the action is fast.

"Love My Dog"
(Roach-Pathe—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

THE "Our Gang" kids are in great danger of losing their dogs owing to an order issued by the town veterinary stating that every dog must be vaccinated at a cost of five dollars, which, needless to say, none of the "Gang" possess, either collectively or individually. So the animals are "disguised" and rescued, all but one, the property of Farina, which is captured and sent to the pound, where it is scheduled to be asphyxiated at a given time. The gang secure the money necessary for the dog's release by acting as human punching bags for a rich youngster at "two-bits" a punch and in this wise effect the release of the dog.

This is not one of the best of the series but it contains a number of mirthful gags and proves fairly entertaining as a whole.

"The Newlyweds' Shopping Tour"
(Universal-Stern Bros.—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

LOVEY, Dovey and Baby Snookums are with us again and this time the action takes place in the boss' office and a department store, both places offering this precocious kid excellent opportunities to leave a red trail of wreckage in his wake. The boss is away for the day and Snookum's daddy is left in charge. Mother arrives with Snookums and leaves him with father while she goes shopping. The Boss returns unexpectedly and hurriedly leaves again after Snookums starts working on him. Father and son then go in search of Mother at the store. Lots of action follows at the store which Snookums puts out of commission in a short time. This two-reeler is up to standard all the way through.

"Buster, Don't Forget"
(Universal-Stern Bros.—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

ROMANCE between Buster and Mary Jane almost came to an unhappy end in this Stern Bros. two-reeler through the slick, underhanded work of an attractive little blonde vamp. That is, it would have if faithful Tige hadn't stood by his mistress and frustrated the vamp's attempt to steal Buster's affection. The blonde has progressed to the point where imprints of rouged lips are in evidence on Buster's cheeks. Right at this time Tige is almost foiled by the appearance of the Dog Catcher, who scoops him up for a ride to the station. However, the flirtation is broken up, an exciting ride follows and all is well again. This comedy is O.K.

Pathe Review No. 16
(Pathe—One Reel)

BEAUTIFUL camera views of the dells of Wisconsin, Pathecolor shots of the Kingosan or Diamond Mountains of Korea, comprise the first half of the current Pathe Review. The latter half is a continuation of the film record of the Smithsonian-Chrysler expedition in Tanganyika. This portion of the record details the party's search for the Wildbeeste and the subsequent capture of a member of this species. This reel is worth-while—HAROLD FLAVIN.

"Anti-Fat"
(Fables-Pathe—One Reel)

FURTHER adventures of Paul Terry's cartoon creations and this time animal land is fattened and thinned out, as it wishes, by using the dollar-a-bottle remedy purveyed by a "human" salesman. Suffice it to say that the usual quota of laughs are furnished.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

Horse Shoes

They Do Bring Monty Good Luck

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

PATHE'S diminutive and debonair comedian, Monty Banks, has a fairly good number in "Horse Shoes," his latest production. As a comedy the production has its slow moments which could have undoubtedly been improved by the dint of more application on the part of the editors in its cutting; but then again the slow-moving incidents are not many and far between. The plot of the story, which certainly should not be taken seriously, has been treated in that indispensable "it is to laugh" vein with some burlesque, bubbling sequences.

The plot is more or less familiar. It picturizes the turn of events when a young man and an equally young lady meet and are believed by all to be newly married. Though they vehemently deny laying claim to the married state, their denials are thought by all to be but the natural embarrassment of the newly wed. More sympathy for the hero whose berth happens to be above that of the young lady. However, upon the emergence of the two from the pullman the story suddenly gets momentum and Monty becomes the friend in need of the girl and her father, who are contesting a will in court. He wins the case as you may suspect and all ends happily for pretty Jean Arthur, her father, John Elliott, and Monty.

THEME: Fresh from law school, hero meets heroine whom he aids in contesting a will with his resultant victory due to the hero's unswerving faith in the good-luck magnet—the horse shoe.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The railroad sequences. Banks' acrobatic antics in pullman. Court room scene and its free-for-all.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Horse shoe offers a lot of possibilities. Try horse shoe pitching contest, for one.

DRAWING POWER: Good.

Length, 5,668 feet. Released April 17, 1927.
Produced by Monty Banks Enterprises. Distributed by Pathe.

Hey! Hey! Cowboy

Innocuous Effort Furnishes Fair Entertainment

(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

THE horsemanship of Hoot Gibson, the personable Kathleen Key, the serio-comic tale of a range war and the title, which expression is quite popular at present, are the highlights of this production, which should find favor with the average movie fan. It is done in a delightfully light manner, no attempt being made to stress heroics or villainies, as is the usual custom in Westerns, and the result is that when "Finis" is flashed, the spectator sits back with the thought of having seen something different. It's more on the type of the Tom Mix "Horse Operas," which more or less kid the old established formula used in most productions in this category. The supporting cast is composed of a number of fairly well known troupers, the direction is excellent and the photography is good.

The trouble started when Julius Decker's cattle contracted the habit of making inroads on Joe Billings' hay supply. Both promised trouble and a series of "accidents" occur for which Joe blames Julius and Julius blames Joe, the upshot being the engagement of detectives. A gentle rancher, whose property adjoins that of the warring factions, tries to make both sell out to him. With the arrival of the detectives the affair comes to a climax and it is discovered that the gentle rancher is the trouble maker.

The Cast: Hoot Gibson, Nick Cogley, Kathleen Key, Wheeler Oakman, Clarke Comstock, Mila Davenport, Monte Montague, Jim Corey, "Slim" Summerville. Author, scenarist, director, Lynn Reynolds.

THEME: Serio-comic tale of range war between two irascible cattle owners. Young detective settles trouble and marries daughter of one of the combatants.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Gibson's horsemanship. The treatment of the story. Direction.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Gibson has following and catchy title should draw.

DRAWING POWER: Will satisfy average patron. Family picture.

Produced and distributed by Universal Pictures.
Length, 5,378 feet. Released April 4, 1927.

Fashions for Women

Settings and Styles But Little Plot

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

A STUDY in how to drape a star is on view in "Fashions for Women," a picture which could not be more aptly titled. The story is buried, its tiny thread of plot being lost amid the profusion of gowns which decorate the attractive figure of Esther Ralston—who makes her debut as a star. It's a safe and sure film—which is calculated to please the feminine customers. As a fashion display it hits the bulls-eye.

It not only has a new star but also a new woman director. Lois Weber has a rival and her name is Dorothy Arzner. It isn't her fault that she hasn't made a better impression. After all a director can't register a hit when the story falters. This one builds through a series of disjointed scenes—telling a story of a cigarette girl who masquerades as a beautiful model—and gets away with it. There is something of a romantic trend to the plot, but it never appears to bloom in full.

The picture depends for its appeal upon its settings and its fashion display. Even though one has occasion to pick up a thread of the story the idea is immediately lost because of the succession of scenes showing Miss Ralston on parade. The star is easy on the eyes and all of us know she has her share of talent. She should get a better deal.

THEME: Romantic drama of cigarette girl who impersonates a beautful model and finds adventure and happiness.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The gorgeous settings. The fashion display. The appeal of star. Hatton's comedy moments.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Tie up with modiste shops and specialty shops on fashion display. Use stills in window display. Feature debut of Esther Ralston as star. Play up the new woman director.

DRAWING POWER: For neighborhood houses or sections of cities and towns which cater to feminine patronage.

Produced and distributed by Famous Players. Length, six reels. Released April, 1927.

Casey At The Bat

Not Up To Expectations

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THERE was nothing much about that poem of the mauve decade that could be turned into a screen comedy unless it was treated entirely different from the present release. The chief trouble lies in having gone hokum with it—trying to ginger it up with gags in order to make it a side-splitting comedy. Too many people were involved in trying to glorify Casey and his famous bat. And they've erred a good deal. One of their errors is in placing the action during the nineties—and then trotting out the Floradora Sextette—a group of girls who made theatrical history many years after Casey struck out. More errors have to do with subtitles. The characters often speak in the vernacular of the present day.

It's a hurly-burly number and it's played in a hurly-burly manner by Wallace Beery. As the handy man or loafer of Centerville he is figured out as likely "ivory" by the New York Giants. So he leaves the village belle and the village lot to get framed in a big league ball game. Framed is right. Even the Floradora girls make him a boob. After all this hectic adventure he becomes reconciled with the girl friend back home. The piece has some good atmosphere—and a few amusing scenes. But the real story of the old-time ball-player has yet to be written.

The Cast: Wallace Beery, Ford Sterling, ZaSu Pitts, Sterling Holloway, Sue O'Donnell, Iris Stuart, Sydney Jarvis. Director, Monte Brice.

THEME: Comedy of small-town ball-player with a reputation of being the Babe Ruth of his day. Signs with the New York Giants, etc.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Beery's characterization. The fine acting by ZaSu Pitts. The New York atmosphere.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Feature the famous poem and get some good speaker to recite it. Bill as a comedy with a background of the nineties. Play up star and tie up with ball teams.

DRAWING POWER: Title and star should draw them. O. K. for average houses.

Produced and distributed by Famous Players. Length, six reels. Released April, 1927.

The Night Bride

Has Good Entertainment Value

(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

GRANTING that a story may lack originality and that many of the situations have been done before, that does not necessarily detract from its value. It is who does these things and the way they are done that really counts. So, with these facts in mind, we earnestly believe that this picture is a mighty good evening's entertainment. Marie Prevost is as charming and vivacious as ever and Franklin Pangborn, practically a newcomer in this field, contributes not a litle. Keep your eyes on this man; he's going somewhere. Harrison Ford and Robert Edeson also score in their respective roles.

The story has to do with a modern flapper who, when she sees the man she is about to marry kiss a bridesmaid, seeks refuge in the home of a bachelor author and professed hater of women. Her father, hot on the trail, discovers her in the protesting host's bedroom and matters become even more complicated when the flapper announces her marriage to the author. Father, though reconciled, decides there will be no further slip-up and arranges a tour of the world for the couple. From that time to when they reach the steamer the still unwed woman-hater tries to escape, but to no avail. Eventually they are married by the Captain.

Director Hopper has turned out a good piece of work. The adaptation, by Zella Sears and Fred Stanley, is also excellent.

The Cast: Marie Prevost, Harrison Ford, Robert Edeson, Franklin Pangborn, Constance Howard, Richard Crawford and George Kuwa. Directed by E. Mason Hopper.

THEME: Determined flapper marries protesting "woman-hater" and makes him like it.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Good direction, action and excellent acting of principals.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: See press sheet. It contains some good ideas.

DRAWING POWER: Good enough for any house.

Length, 5,736 feet. Released March 28, 1927.

Whispering Sage

Buck and Natalie Both "Get Their Man"

(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

WESTERN melodramas featuring Buck Jones, his horse, White Eagle, and a generally capable supporting cast need no introduction to exhibitors who book this type of picture. It is usually conceded that they carry a generous amount of hard-riding, slugging, gunplay, the necessary portion of romance and the real thing in Western backgrounds. This one has them all, and then some. It's a cracker-jack of its kind. Furthermore, Buck has found a new feminine lead who does her bit in a way that couldn't very well be improved upon. We will gamble she has "it."

His brother murdered, a dum-dum bullet as the only evidence, and desire for vengeance sends Buck on his quest to a colony of Basques in the Southwest. First, he meets the daughter of the Basque chieftain; later he unknowingly joins a neighboring "outfit" that seeks to drive the Basques from their lands. Buck defeats a ruse engineered by his employer and foreman to start trouble with the Basques and subsequently quits his job. Matters at a crisis, both factions choose the same night to exterminate each other. Plenty of fast riding and fighting now; plenty of gunplay and sudden death—with Buck on the side of his new-found sweetheart. Government forces save the day for the Basques, another dum-dum bullet pins guilt of his brother's murder on the foreman—Buck gets his man and the Basque girl gets Buck.

The Cast: Buck Jones, Natalie Joyce, Emile Chautard, Carl Miller, Albert Smith, Joseph Girard, Joseph Rickson, Enrique Acosta, W. J. Steele, Ellen Winston, Hazel Keener. Directed by Scott Dunlap.

THEME: Western melodrama. Hero thwarts attempt of rancher to obtain Basque property. Romance interwoven with plenty of action.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Western backgrounds, the fight between Buck and the foreman, fast action, acting of principals.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Use regular Western Ballyhoo.

DRAWING POWER: For any house using this type of picture.

Length, 4,783 feet. Released March 20, 1927.
Produced and distributed by Fox Films.

The Yankee Clipper

Good Atmosphere, But Lacks Movement

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

IT was to be expected that other ships would sail the seas besides the Constitution. Which accounts for the sponsoring of the Yankee Clipper. Where the other boat had a mission to clean up the pirates—and was involved with the making of history, the newer vessel's job was to prove to England that she didn't rule the waves in so far as speed was concerned. After some rhetorical preliminaries in which a young skipper from Boston is assigned to the command the Clipper sets sail for the Orient. And then returns via Cape Horn to port, nosing out the boat with the Union Jack, with several feet to spare.

That's about all there is to the picture. Naturally it doesn't offer much dramatic movement. For purposes of conflict the skipper rescues a fair Britisher who with her escort are brought on board. What transpires is her eventual melting of the heart when the girl discovers that the Bostonian is not only a good sailor, but also a good lover to boot. A typhoon stirs up the sea and the action—and this particular sequence is thrilling and picturesque. There are also some eye-catching shots of men high in the rigging. There's no getting away from it—the ship captures the imagination when under full sail.

Had it contained more graphic incidents under and over the decks—had it simmered down to a real race instead of subtitles telling about it, the picture would click much better.

THEME: Romantic drama established around the effort of Yankee skipper to out-race a British boat and effect commercial relations of America with foreign ports.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The marine shots. The mutiny on the ship. The typhoon sequence. The appeal of the boat when under full sail.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Feature the title and historical angle of America establishing commercial relations through speed on the seas. Play up William Boyd, who was excellent in "The Volga Boatman."

DRAWING POWER: Should do business on its title and advertising campaign.

Produced and distributed by Producers Distributing Corp. Length, eight reels. Released April, 1927.

Spuds

Stretching One Reel of Humor to Five Reels

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THE story of this one is a mighty familiar theme—that of an army rookie who has lots of "dumb luck"—and the humor that they have embalmed it in will never transport movie patrons in ecstasy, it may be said. The feature is well over four reels—nearly five—but the material contained therein has obviously been strained in the process of stretching it to feature length. And this is a not unwarranted assertion; it is fairly evident when you see constant repetition of gags embedded in the same scene.

The late conflict certainly has its humorous side. That angle is presented in "Spuds" in a slapstick, nonsensical manner. Larry Semon's comic delineation is fairly good, Dorothy Dwan is a very pretty girl, and you have the element of excitement in the Germans, theft of the pay car and a finale where the much abused "Spuds" redeems himself by stealing the aforesaid car and returning with it over a battlefield strewn with exploding shells. The activities of two spies are also set forth. Here the producers have resorted to the old gag of showing the very emphatic effect that white-sheeted figures have on movie colored rtoops. This scene will bring in its share of laughs. "Spuds" is not up to the standard of war burlesques.

The Cast: Larry Semon, Dorothy Dwan, Edward Hearne, Kewpie Morgan, Robert J. Graves, Hazell Howell and Hugh Fay. Directed by Larry Semon.

THEME: Potato-peeler of the regiment does his bit in helping out his buddie implicated in the theft of a pay car. He discovers it and brings it back "amid shot and shell," arriving in time to stay the execution of his friend.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The hero trying to peel a hand grenade, thinking it a potato. The workings of the two German spies—one of them a blond mama. The sheeted figure in the barracks of the colored troops. The race in the pay car.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Play up the fact that it is a comedy about the war.

DRAWING POWER: Good for average house.

Regional News from Correspondents

Detroit

SAM WERNER of United Film Service has returned from a visit to New Orleans.

Nat Barach, district manager for Warner Brothers, paid Jim Allen a short visit this week.

A. Chapman, special representative for Producers Distributing Corporation, has arrived at the local exchange, and will stay in Detroit for a few days.

The Orient Theatre, which just opened last week, is to broadcast an hour of entertainment through station WJR on every Tuesday night. The program will start at 9 o'clock and will include every feature of the stage presentation, as well as special organ music for the radio audience, played by Reg Webb, organist at the theatre. The Kentucky Colonels, a Jean Goldkette Orchestra, and Eddie Laughton, master of ceremonies, with a new cast of assistant entertainers each week, will be introduced by the Orient Theatre in its presentations, and nearly all of the artists scheduled in the near future are favorite radio entertainers.

The Century Theatre at Dowagiac, Mich., has reopened, after being closed for a number of weeks so as to let workmen and painters redecorate and remodel the entire house. It is now one of the finest theatres in southern Michigan, and is owned by the Larkin Theatre Company.

The Butterfield Theatre Circuit is to take over the Regent Theatre at Port Huron, some time in April. The Regent is one of the smaller houses in Port Huron which has been operated for the past two years by John Streng.

Jake Sullivan, general manager of the New Orient Theatre, was host to about 300 guests last Thursday night, the occasion being the opening of the new theatre. The party was held at Turner's Summer Home, which is located about seventeen miles out East Jefferson Avenue. Dance music was furnished by entertainers from the Orient Theatre. Everybody had a wonderful time and are certainly sold that the owners of the Orient are a regular bunch of fellows.

District managers were quite a few in Detroit last week; among them were C. E. Penrod of F.B.O., W. C. Bachmeyer, of Fox, Nat Barach of Warner Brothers, and Bob Cotton of Producers Distributing Corporation.

Excavation work has started on the new Butterfield Theatre in Niles, Mich. The theatre is to have a seating capacity of 1200 and will cost in the neighborhood of $300,000. It will be located directly east of the Four Flaggs hotel and will be constructed in the same style.

With the steel work complete on Charles H. Miles' new Oriental Theatre and the brick work nearly done, it looks as though this house will be ready by August. Contractors are busily working on the foundation for the new United Artists Theatre on Bagley Avenue and this house should be ready by next fall. The new Fox Theatre, which will be the most elaborate of the three, will probably not be ready until after the first of the year. The seating capacity of this new Fox Theatre will be 5,000, with a six-story building above to be used as stores and offices.

Having disposed of his Regent Theatre to the London Brothers, Charles H. Miles, who operates the Miles downtown, and who is building the new Oriental Theatre on Adams Street, is having plans drawn up for a new $500,000 theatre to be erected somewhere in the north section on Woodward Avenue.

As a result of an election last week, John H. Kunsky will proceed at once with his new theatre at Birmingham. The vote was overwhelmingly for Sunday shows. It is expected to be open to the public by September.

George W. Owens, at one time manager of the Knickerbocker Theatre in Detroit, died last week from pneumonia. His wife and a son survive him.

Metropolitan Motion Picture Company has moved into the new Film Building with the laboratory and office on the seventh floor and a camera shop on the main floor, with Arthur Caplan managing.

The Fleur de Leys Theatre at River Rouge had opened its doors last Saturday after being closed for several months for remodeling. Andrew Bzovi and John Motoc, the owners, have spent in the neighborhood of $30,000 for remodeling and for new furnishings. The house now seats 1,200 with an addition of 100 box seats on the balcony.

The Fleur de Leys looks just like a new theatre, with its different changes on the stage and balcony.

After the performance Manager Douglas Dickerson was host to about thirty guests at a road house where dinner was served with refreshments.

Among the guests were, Dick Lynch one time an exhibitor who was master of ceremonies as well as star entertainer, Dave Mundstuck, of the Mundstuck Film Exchange, Al Isaacson, of the Arctic New Air, Mr. and Mrs. Jerry Meyer, Dad Whitman, of the Rex Film Company, Mrs. Lloyd, Oscar Hanson, manager of Pathe, J. E. Greenly of Columbia, George Carr, Joe Ramond, and Victor Taft.

Jack Goldhar, connected with United Artists as salesman for over two years, was promoted to branch manager, succeeding J. Abel who has resigned.

E. D. TURNER, president of Carolina Theatres, Inc., spent Sunday in Charlotte, having arrived from Pittsburgh, Pa., where he had been for several weeks.

Walter Griffith, manager U. S. Film Transport Corporation, and Abe Rosen, manager of the New York office of the same concern, spent Sunday in Washington, D.C., motoring back to Charlotte Monday.

Capt. C. J. P. Edwards, owner Waynewood Theatre, Waynesville, N.C., announces that he has sold this house to R. W. Sherrill, owner Strand Theatre, Canton, N.C. Capt. Edwards and his family are leaving the first of the week for the Pacific Coast.

C. R. Bamford, of the Princess Theatre, Asheville, N.C., left Tuesday for Washington, D.C., where he expects to spend several days.

J. E. Simpson, owner of the Lyric Theatre, Gastonia, N.C., was seen on Film Row during the week.

C. E. Peppiatt, manager of the local United Artists office, and Mrs. Peppiatt spent the week end in Atlanta, returning Monday.

R. T. Good, formerly with Enterprise Film Corporation, is now with Liberty-Specialty, as salesman, succeeding R. H. Masterman, now connected with Carolina Theatres, Inc.

A. C. Walker, formerly connected with P.D.C. as salesman, also with Pathe exchange, has returned to the Pathe fold to handle both short subjects and features.

Mrs. Walter Griffith has been confined to her home for the past several days with a cold.

S. S. Stevenson, president of Stevenson's Theatres, Inc., opened his new Stevenson Theatre at Henderson, N.C., Monday, March 28, to a very enthusiastic audience. Charlotte's Film Row was well represented. This house is one of the most beautifully decorated and modernly equipped theatres in the State.

On Thursday, March 24th, Paul E. Krieger, genial manager of the Louisville, Ky., First National exchange, left to take up his duties as manager of the Cincinnati office. As a token of appreciation and to show the high regard in which Mr. Krieger is held, the employes presented him with a beautiful smoking stand and humidor and Lee L. Goldberg, of Big Feature Rights, presented him with a very attractive desk clock.

The new manager, Maurice White, of Cincinnati, arrived Monday, March 28, to take charge of the Louisville office. A warm Kentucky welcome awaited Mr. White, who was well remembered from his former connection with First National and more recently with Educational Film Exchanges.

W. B. Davis, Greenville, S.C., lost the sight of both eyes and was otherwise severely burned about the head Saturday night when 16 reels of film he was exhibiting in the Florida Exposition train, while in Louisville, became ignited. The films, picturing the wonders of Florida, were being staged by a small group at the time, all of whom escaped injury. The fire caused $1,500 damage to the equipment in the car. A short circuit in the movie machine is believed to have caused the fire.

Visitors to Louisville last week included Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Pattie, of the Grand Theatre, Frankfort, Ky., and Mr. and Mrs. A. N. Miles, of the Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky.

Madge Kennedy, star of the screen and legitimate stage, will be seen at the Brown Theatre, Louisville, starting Monday night, April 4th, and through Wednesday.

The Lackey Theatre, Lackey, Ky., and the Opera House, Livingston, Ky., have been closed and will not re-open until early fall.

Lee L. Goldberg, secretary of the Big Features Rights Corporation, announces an ambitious expansion program. In addition to the Louisville exchange which serves Kentucky and Tennessee interests, another exchange will be opened this week in Indianapolis, Cincinnati and Cleveland. Close affiliation has also been established with Sol Lesser and Mike Rosenberg for the exchanges in the Far West and with the Stanley Company in the East. In connection with this deal, Henri Ellman, of the Capital Film Exchange of Chicago, was in Louisville Saturday negotiating for the Indianapolis exchange with B.F.R.

The Orpheum Theatre, Fulton, Ky., was badly damaged by fire last week. The seats were nearly all ruined by water and heat. The stage settings were burned. The total loss is estimated at about $6,000. The fire is thought to have originated near the heating stove. The property was under lease by the Strand Amusement Company of Paducah. No plans for the future have been announced.

A RUMOR of some six weeks ago has taken form with the actual construction work starting this week on a new theatre in Salem, Mass., which is being built for W. E. Dunn. It will be ready for formal opening by November 1st under terms of the contracts just awarded. The new theatre will be larger than any in that city at present, will have a first-run policy and will be independently operated, having been entirely financed by Salem capital.

The Gray Circuit has taken over the Strong Theatre at Burlington, Vt. This house has been playing road shows and was operated by J. J. Whalen. For the present the same policy is maintained.

The Somerset Theatre at Somerville, which was taken over some three months ago by Phil Markel and associates, has temporarily closed.

John J. Scully, branch manager of Educational Films, has returned from a trip through northern Maine and reports the outlook there as the best in several seasons, epecially for the theatres operating only during the summer at the Maine resorts. He went as far north as Bangor and Bar Harbor. Roads are well broken out, there is far less snow than for several years and indications are for an early season. The roads have been kept pretty open this spring, which has resulted in a better than average business being done by the theatres in the outlying sections, which draw largely from the rural districts.

William Fox of Fox Films, who was in Boston to address the special course at Harvard University on the motion picture industry, spent two days in Boston, paying a visit to the Fox exchange and greeting other friends about Film Row.

Henry Scully, branch manager of United Artists, has returned from a vacation trip to Bermuda, much improved in health.

Decker's Film Transfer Co. furnished the maximum excitement in Boston's Row during the week when a container filled with scrap film caught fire from some unknown cause while on a truck. Flames shot high in the air and an alarm was sounded from the Piedmont Street box in the heart of the film district, bringing out more fire fighting apparatus than any other box in the city. The truck was somewhat damaged and John Wilson, operator, was slightly burned about the face. Only scrap film was destroyed, Wilson and volunteers saving all other film on the truck.

The Dream Theatre at Cliftondale, Mass., has been taken over by Albert E. Foy, formerly manager of the Winthrop (Mass.) Theatre. He will extensively remodel the theatre. A. J. Keamph was the [illegible] for all bookings for Topsfield and Essex, Mass.

Frank Scully, salesman for United Artists in western Massachusetts, has resigned.

The third outing of the Bookers' Association took place April 6 at Silverbrook Farm, Canton, Mass., when the male bookers were hosts to the girls, repaying the entertainment and dinner served by the girls last January. A chicken dinner was followed by dancing.

Sam Haas has joined the sales force of United Artists and has been assigned to western Massachusetts. He was formerly with Producers and Universal.

Carl Mishrall of the Modern Theatre, Harwichport, Mass., has returned from a vacation trip to California.

Frank Boscatti, who operates the Palace, Broadway and Empire Theatres in Lawrence, Mass., is vacationing in Arkansas.

Lieut. Commander Richard Byrd of polar fame was a visitor to the Pathe exchange in Boston during the week.

Fred Bedard of the Bellevue Theatre at St. Albans, Vt., was a guest in Film Row during the week. His community is one of the most distant from the exchanges served from New England.

Gerald [illegible], [illegible] department representative for Pathe, spent three days in New York City during the week on business.

Richard W. Sears, known to thousands in New England as "Dick" Sears, has been placed in charge of the Pathe News service in New England, starting his duties April 1st. Upon the eve of his departure from the Hearst newspapers and the International service, he was tendered a dinner by his associates and presented with a platinum watch, fitted traveling bag and a beautifully framed testimonial signed by his former longtime associates.

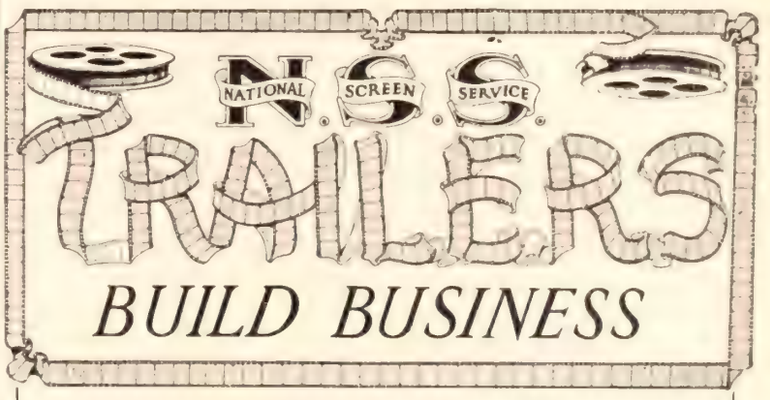
Pathe's laboratories have been moved from Melrose Street to 13 Stanhope Street, the building once occupied by Pathe as its Boston exchange. This has been fitted up for high-speed work and will be directed by the Melkon Laboratories, formerly located in Cambridge, Mass. Sears will make his headquarters at the Pathe exchange.

Harry A. Lotz has been appointed manager of the Boston exchange of United Artists Corporation by Moxley Hill, sales manager Eastern division. Mr. Lotz succeeds Henry T. Scully, who has resigned to enter the insurance business.

Kansas City

THE Gayety Theatre, former Columbia burlesque house and later a 10-cent motion picture house temporarily, has been leased by several Kansas City exhibitors and will be re-opened Saturday as a combination vaudeville and motion picture theatre. The exhibitors who leased the theatre are: William Flynn, Nugent Flynn, William W. Watkins and Edgar Barnett.

The fact that Gloria Swanson, enroute on a Santa Fe train for the West Coast, was up at 8 o'clock in the morning in Kansas City Monday was worth almost one column in Kansas City newspapers. She is one of the few screen stars whom reporters ever have found to be awake at that hour.



The first "official" sign of spring was observed on Kansas City's Movie Row this week when several exhibitors and exchange representatives were seen playing catch with an assortment of mits and a baseball furnished by Jack Langan, film veteran.

The Mystic Theatre at Cedarvale, Kas., a new 700-seat motion picture theatre, said to be among the best for its size in Kansas, was opened last week by William Leonard. The decorating scheme of the house is said to be splendid.

Lew Brent, F.B.O. salesman, was pulled out of the mud nineteen times on a trip through Northwest Missouri and Western Illinois in his motor car last week. D. Sydney, National Screen Service representative, made a hurried trip to Omaha this week. E. C. Rhoden, Midwest Film Distributors, Inc., manager, was out in the territory. Max Stahl, Educational home office representative, who has been in Kansas City a week, left Monday for a swing around the other branch office. Adolph Eisner, former president of the M. P. T. O. Kansas City, has accepted a position as representative of the Artic-Nu-Air Company and has gone to Omaha, Neb. Thomas J. Walsh has been transferred from the Butte, Mont., Pathe branch to Kansas City and is covering Northern Kansas. The personnel of the Educational branch lined up in front of the office this week for an exterior photographic "shot."

R. S. Balentyne, former Pathe district manager in Kansas City, who has been visiting in Kansas City, returned to his Los Angeles headquarters this week. Max Meyer now is covering Northern Kansas for Warner Brothers, while J. F. Baker has been transferred to Southern Missouri for that company. J. N. Naulty, P. D. C. home office representative, was a Kansas City visitor.

Among the out-of-town exhibitors in the Kansas City market this week were: Spyros Skouras, president of the St. Louis Amusement Company, St. Louis; S. E. Wilhoit, Electric Theatre, Springfield, Mo.; Walter Wallace, Orpheum, Leavenworth, Kas.; G. L. Hooper, Orpheum, Topeka, Kas.; C. M. Pattee, Pattee Theatre, Lawrence, Kas.

HARRY M. WILLIAMS, sales representative of Universal in the Tennessee territory, is winner in the salesmen's contest, having sold the most film during the period beginning January 15 and ending March 15. This entitles him to a trip to Universal's sales convention, which will be held about May 1 in some city yet to be selected.

Mr. Williams has been connected with Universal for upwards of fourteen years and has been in the Tennessee territory for half of that time. His home is at Bristol, Tenn.-Va., and he is one of the best known salesmen in this section.

R. B. Williams, district manager of Universal, with headquarters in Atlanta, left Tuesday for Memphis, expecting to return by Saturday.

Frank W. Salley joined the sales force of Universal's Atlanta branch. He is well known in this section, having been connected with Universal several years ago. Of recent years he has been manager of a house in Florida and has also been in the real estate business in that state.

Earl E. Griggs, exploiteer for Universal in the South, who has completely recovered from a recent attack of the "flu," is now engaged in publicity work in connection with the showing of "The Collegians." After working in De-Ridder, La., and Dothan, Ala., he will return to Atlanta, where he will assist in exploiting "Michael Strogoff."

The Atlanta branch of Universal, which was leading the Southern division during the third week of the Carl Laemmle 25th Anniversary Sales drive, apparently has a good chance of winning the coveted prize—a trip to Europe for the manager of the winning exchange. Ben Y. Cammack is head of the Atlanta branch.

The drive will close April 9, the winners in all divisions to be announced May 7. The winning managers will accompany Mr. Laemmle abroad, probably in June, for a six or eight weeks' tour of the Continent.

Arthur C. Bromberg, head of Arthur C. Bromberg Attractions, has returned to Atlanta from the recent meeting at Detroit of the board of directors of American Cinema Association, of which he is a member. He returned home by way of New York.

J. H. Butner, manager of the Atlanta branch of Educational, who has been in Florida for some weeks, is expected to return to his office the first of the coming week.

George Allison, in charge of the Fox exchange in Atlanta, is back from a trip through his territory, but has been confined to his home for several days on account of a severe cold.

Dan Michalove reached Atlanta late Saturday afternoon for important conferences in connection with Universal's southern chain of theatres, and returned to New York Wednesday, accompanied by Willard C. Patterson who has been associated with him in the operation of Universal's theatres in this territory last July.

For the first time in many months E. J. Sparks left his several enterprises in Jacksonville and Florida for a hurried business trip to Atlanta. He arrived early Monday morning and left the same night for Jacksonville.

According to news received on Film Row this week, E. W. Tolbert plans to open a new picture house in Columbus, Ga., about the middle of April. The theatre, it is understood, will seat about 400. All equipment, including a Seeburg organ, is to be furnished through the Atlanta branch of National Theatre Supply Company.

W. H. Smith, booker for the War Department, was a visitor on Film Row this week.

The new Palace Theatre, at Jasper, Fla., of which Horace Bland is manager, will open April 8, according to information reaching Film Row this week.

Atlanta exchangemen received invitations to the opening of the Kingston Theatre at Daytona Beach, Fla., Harry Somerville's new house, which took place the evening of April 4.

The Kingston is located at Ridgewood Avenue and Main Street and is said to be an unusually attractive house and well equipped. Equipment was furnished through the Atlanta branch of National Theatre Supply Company.

James B. Buchanan, formerly connected with the local Pathe News staff, has resigned from the company. Mr. Buchanan's work has been assumed by Jimmy Hamilton, of the Hamilton-Beach Company, Atlanta.

Julian H. King, state manager in this territory for the United Film Ad Service, Inc., of Kansas City, Mo., made a brief visit to Atlanta this week on one of his regular trips throughout this section in the interests of his company.

Mr. King came to Atlanta from Birmingham, although he visited several smaller points en route. He plans to go into North and South Carolina before returning to his headquarters in Kansas City.

Thomas G. Coleman, who has been confined to his home for several weeks with an attack of pneumonia, rallied sufficiently this week to come down to the two theatres he manages, the Cameo and the Tudor, for a brief visit. Frank Ferguson, who has been taking care of Mr. Coleman's work during the latter's illness, will remain at his post until Mr. Coleman has recuperated sufficiently to assume charge once more.

Another independent house for Jacksonville, Fla. is scheduled to open this week, with local capital behind S. L. Darwin as manager. The Capitol, as the new house is named, is a Springfield house about 20 blocks from the business center of the city.

E. B. Coleman's Honey Bunch Company has been definitely signed by Manager Jesse L. Clark of the Palace to open in that house April 9, following close of the Keith season April 8.

Scotty Chesnutt, manager of Famous Players-Lasky exchange, was confined to his room at the Carling Hotel this week on account of illness. His friends are hoping he will be out in time to attend the first showing of "Casey at the Bat," which opens Sunday at the Arcade. Mr. Chesnutt plays the part of the umpire in this picture.

Mr. and Mrs. K. A. Miller, of the Miller Enterprises, were visiting the film exchanges here this week. Mr. Miller was formerly connected with the Tamiami Enterprises.

John Anderson, formerly assistant manager at Universal's exchange, left last Sunday for San Francisco, where he has accepted a position as accessory manager with the Universal branch in that city.

C. P. Lester, manager of the Universal exchange, was in Tampa this week. His office is working hard on the national contest which offers cash prizes and a trip to Europe to the winning office.

Manager C. B. Ellis, of F.B.O., was in Miami this week.

Earl Fain, of Leesburg, Fla., was a caller at Universal Exchange Tuesday.

Tom Richardson, owner of the theatre at Waldo, Fla., visited the Universal Exchange Monday.

Messrs. Hawkins and Hudson, operating theatres at Brooksville, Inverness and Dunnellon, were business visitors in Jacksonville last week.

Miss Johnnye Boswell, formerly of Dublin, Ga., and her sister Eva, have moved to Jacksonville. Miss Boswell is stenographer at the Universal Exchange.

Miss Congo, the gorilla brought from Africa by Ben Burbridge, who made "The Gorilla Hunt," is leaving Jacksonville to travel with the Ringling circus. Manager C. B. Ellis of F.B.O. took his office force out to pay a farewell visit to Miss Congo and she added an unexpected thrill to the occasion by breaking her chain and chasing several F.B.O. employees about the place. No damage.

Guy N. Kenimer, promoted by Publix to be manager of the new Florida Theatre, scheduled to open April 8, is seriously ill at his home in Riverside. He had been suffering for several days from a cold but was forced to take to his bed last week.

Hank Hearn, manager of Liberty-Specialty's Atlanta branch, returned late this week from a trip to Nashville and other points in the Tennessee territory.

Oscar S. Oldknow, vice-president of National Theatre Supply Company, with headquarters in Atlanta, who has been visiting branches of the company in the South, is expected to return by Tuesday. He was in Dallas, Tex., on Thursday.

John W. Mangham, Jr., manager of the Atlanta branch of Arthur C. Bromberg Attractions, left Thursday for a trip to Charlotte.

F. A. Leatherman, who handles the Reproduco organ, has been out of the city for several days on a business trip.

Four new salesmen have been added to the staff of Arthur C. Bromberg Attractions this week. They are W. M. Snellson, B. T. Burkhalter and J. W. Rousseau, all of whom have been assigned to the Charlotte Exchange, and Harry Fudge, who will make the Atlanta office headquarters. W. Y. Harrell has been transferred to the Florida territory.

Earle E. Griggs, exploiteer for Universal, who has been in the Louisiana territory for more than a week, returned to New Orleans on Thursday.

Philadelphia

ELMER PRINCE, who was responsible for the construction of the Lawndale Theatre, is head of the Oxford Theatre Company, which will erect a 2,000 seat theatre on the 7200 block of Rising Sun Avenue, Fox Chase. The theatre will cost $350,000 and will be erected in the section known as Five Points. The theatre will draw on an adjacent community having a population of 50,000. The policy of the house will provide for pictures and vaudeville.

Irving D. Rossheim, treasurer of the Stanley Company of America, and a member of the Board of Directors, is to be tendered a testimonial dinner the latter part of April by his friends outside of the industry. The affair will be given at the Ashbourne Country Club, which Mr. Rossheim practically organized and of which he was the first president. It is expected that about 400 will attend.

Cleveland

DAVID MENDOZA, of the Capitol Theatre, New York, is coming to Cleveland this summer, it is learned now for the first time, to conduct a class at the Cleveland Institute of Music on how to score tunes for the movies.

The projected new 2,000-seat motion picture house for Youngstown has come to life again with the asking of bids by Emil Renner, president of the State Theatre Company. The new house will be built to present both motion picture and vaudeville attractions. It will be located on W. Federal Street in the rear of the present Orpheum Theatre. The Orpheum Theatre will be converted into the lobby leading to the new house. Charles Bates of Wheeling, W. Va., and William Cook of Youngstown are the architects. It was planned to build this house last spring, but for various reasons, the project was postponed until the present time.

William Raynor, manager of Reade's Hippodrome, braved the lake breezes and the mud holes to play his first game of golf of the season last Friday.

M. B. Horwitz, general manager of the Washington Circuit, has sold the Southern Theatre to the Ohio Amusement Company. These are two of the leading neighborhood house circuits in the city. With the Southern, the Ohio Amusement Company now has twelve houses.

Herman Smith, who now operates the Stork Theatre, has added the Cozy Theatre to his possessions. R. B. Wilkinson was the former owner.

The Cleveland Pathe Exchange has moved. Not its location. Just the position of its department. The booking department has been retrieved from its retirement in the rear, and now holds a foremost position right in the front of the exchange. And what was formerly the booking department is now the central poster department with C. W. Allers in charge.

Pathe distributes all of its posters from Cleveland as a centre. The Manager's office remains intact with Oscar Ruby still in command.

Eugene Ochs, who managed the Southern Theatre under the Washington Circuit banner, has been made manager of the Plaza, another Washington Circuit house. The change was made following the sale of the Southern to the Ohio Amusement Company. Ochs was formerly associated with S. Barrett McCormick as assistant manager for the Allen, when McCormick was manager.

Jack Gardner of Toledo has added the Superba to his present theatre holdings.

H. T. Palmer, for several years lessee and manager of the Lyric Theatre, Fairport Harbor, is now living in Painesville, and managing the new 500-seat Park Theatre. The Lyric at Fairport Harbor is being run by E. E. Lawrence, owner of the building.

Leo Devaney, local Universal Exchange manager, has put his racoon coat into winter quarters. If you ever saw it, you'd know it could never survive an April day in Ohio.

Lemotto Smith, president of the Smith Amusement Company, operating houses in Alliance, Warren and Huntington, W. Va., will return this month from a winter in Florida. His brother, Lester Smith, is managing the houses in his absence.

Billy Exton, popular and well known Ohio film man, is now managing the engagement of "The Spreading Evil" at the East 9th Street Theatre.

Robert Cotton, district manager for Producers Distributing Corporation, was called to Minneapolis [illegible] by the illness of his mother, 86 years old.

Skirboll Brothers are going in for a good old fashioned house cleaning at their Grand Theatre, Massillon, and Strand Theatre, New Philadelphia. In addition to soap and water, paint is being generously applied, interiors are being redecorated and in some instances some remodeling is taking place.

Harry Charnas, president of the Standard Film Service Company was in Cincinnati the greater part of last week.

The new quarters of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association will be dedicated on Tuesday, April 12th, when a buffet luncheon will be served to all of its members. The new quarters of the association are worthy of proper dedication exercises. Large, commodious, beautiful and adequate, they represent the result of tireless effort on the part of local exhibitors to band together, to stand together, and to progress together. There are four large rooms in the suite. A reception room, an executive board room and the secretary's room comprise one section, and a recreation room, forty feet long by fifteen feet wide, comprises the rest.

The whole is heavily carpeted by Sterling Welsh Company, who contributed the material to the organization at cost, in appreciation of the membership's patronage. The Emmerling Window Craft Display Company furnished the drapes, which are of red velour, made valance style and trimmed with gold. Philip Garbo of the Italian Fresco and Decorators Company, are responsible for the blended painted walls, and the cafe au lait wood finishing. The cabinets in the main office are similarly finished. The result is so artistic as to [illegible] all true [illegible] ism. The recreation room is supplied with metal folding chairs, furnished by the National Theatre Supply Company.

When not used for meeting purposes, this room will be equipped with pool tables for the use of members only. The Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association has been in existence about fifteen years. Sam Bullock was one of the originators. And everyone in the organization at the present day expressed regret that Sam could not live to see the present rooms of the organization and know that the organization for which he fought so hard, is fundamentally strong and commercially sound.

For Bullock was the first to introduce commercialism into the organization. He started the slide proposition, a proposition that put the organization on a paying basis for the first time in its history. In 1923 the league, as it was then called, introduced business methods into its operations. William J. Banks was made business secretary. He has held that post ever since, and through efficiency and loyalty has won the respect of every member of the organization. J. J. Harwood is president, now serving his second term. It is through his efforts that the present result has been attained. The new association address is 713 Film Exchange Building.

William Rosenthal, local United Artists Exchange manager, has secured the services of Edmund MacIvor, formerly special representative for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, as salesman.

Norman Moray, local Warner Brothers Exchange manager, and his Auburn Beauty Six made a tour of the surrounding country last week, with stop-over privileges at all theatres en route.

St. Louis

SPYROS SKOURAS, president of the Skouras Brothers Enterprises and the St. Louis Amusement Company, and Harry Koplar, vice-president of the St. Louis Amusement Company, have gone to New York City. It is believed they will have some interesting news for St. Louis motion picture patrons upon their return to the city.

One bit of gossip along the Rialto is that possibly the Grand Central Theatre may be used for big road shows. Heretofore such shows have played so-called legitimate theatres.

In recent months the Grand Central has been a jazz palace with Gene Rodemich and His Merry Maniacs holding forth as the principal stage attraction. A feature picture and shorts have also been included in the bill of fare.

Now Gene has passed under the Publix banner and gone to Boston and his syncopation will be badly missed along Grand Boulevard.

Paul Sporleder and his band are moving into the Grand Central on Friday, April 8, to fill the void caused by the passing on of Gene and his jazz, while Brook Johns, one of the country's leading jazz directors, is being brought to the Missouri Theatre, also operated by Skouras Brothers, and directly across Lucas Avenue from the Grand Central.

Johns with his orchestra of 21 pieces will be used entirely as a stage attraction. Singing and dancing chorus will supplement the jazz music. This plan will be given a six weeks' trial and if it goes well will be become a fixture at the Missouri.

Dave Silverman and his classic orchestra will remain at the Missouri Theatre, furnishing the overture and other orchestral numbers.

Sporleder, the new director at the Grand Central, started his career when Rodemich, in the early days of jazz, had a little dance orchestra at Cicardi's restraurant on Delmar Boulevard, St. Louis. Paul sold newspapers on Cicardi's corners and between times slipped into the cafe to listen to Gene's music. After a while the drummer let him practice on the drums in the afternoon. Dave Silverman gave him his first chance as an orchestra drummer and later he joined Rodemich's band. He stuck with Gene for five years and then branched out with a band of his own.

Thomas C. Hall of Moberly, Mo., has awarded the contract for the rebuilding of his Star Theatre in Columbia, Mo., to James F. Moore, 401 Gloyd Building, Kansas City, Mo. Preordained

"— the final result of the motion picture on the screen was preordained from the day that Edison got his first sample of Eastman film."*

That was in 1889. And today the film that made motion pictures practical is the film that makes the most of the cinematographer's art and carries all the quality through to the screen—Eastman Film.

Fundamental Calculations of Screen Intensity

AS a further check, we will now calculate the screen intensity knowing these three fundamental factors:

1. Source Brightness.
2. Effective area of projection lens.
3. Projection Distance.

The brightness of the 1,000-watt stereopticon type of incandescent lamp used in these tests, if the lamp manufacturers' data is at all correct, is 1,000 candlepower per square inch. We shall use this figure—the other two factors we already know.

Hence—

System No. 1

Source brightness.....10,000 cp./sq. in.
Effective lens area....1.25 sq. in.
Projection distance....27 feet.
Transmission factor...75 per cent.
Screen intensity.....$\frac{10{,}000 \times 1.25 \times 0.75}{27 \times 27}$
12.8 foot-candles.

This agrees exactly with the measured screen intensity of 12.8 foot-candles.

System No. 2

Source brightness.....10,000 cp./sq. in.
Effective lens area....2.625 sq. in.
Projection distance....27 feet.
Transmission factor...75 per cent.
Screen intensity.....$\frac{10{,}000 \times 2.625 \times 0.75}{27 \times 27}$
27.0 foot-candles.

This compares favorably with the measured screen intensity of 26.5 foot-candles.

Final Proof of Our Statements

Now for the most important test of all. So far, all we have done is to tear apart the case which Gray constructed and built up so carefully on the basis of the test he made with his Brenkert effect projector.

Now, however, we shall use two projection lenses of exactly the same effective diameter and the same physical diameter, and show that the screen intensity will be the same with each system, no matter if the iris of one is larger than that of the other and the projected "spots" are of the same size.

In order to do this, we used the same two systems as used in the previous tests and merely placed an opaque diaphragm, having a hole 1 inch in diameter, in its center, in front of and against each of the 3-inch diameter projection lenses.

Both of the one-inch diameter lenses so created were then completely filled with light and both, therefore, could be said to have exactly the same diameter—effective and physical.

In other words, this entirely eliminated the item of lens diameter from consideration and put it squarely up to the iris shutter opening to provide the increased screen intensity.

The following three factors then could be said to be constant for each test:

1. Source brightness.
2. Lens diameter.
3. Projection distance.

The only variable factors remaining were:

1. Iris opening.
2. Projection lens focal length.

Any resulting difference in screen intensity with such a test would be due to one or both of these two factors.

Let us see what happened.

According to theoretical optics, the screen intensity would be exactly the same in each case, as follows:

System No. 1

Brightness of source...10,000 cp./sq. in.
Area of projection lens.0.785 sq. in.
Projection distance....27 ft.
Transmission factor...75 per cent.
Screen intensity.....$\frac{10{,}000 \times 0.785 \times 0.75}{27 \times 27}$
8.1 foot-candles.

Since the conditions in System No. 2 are exactly the same as those given above, the screen intensity, too, will be the same.

This represents the calculated intensity of screen illumination, as based on a theoretical consideration of the optics involved.

The screen intensity was measured a number of times, in order to obtain a fair average, and was found to be as follows:

System No. 1

Measured screen intensity.. 8.6 foot-candles

System No. 2

Measured screen intensity.. 8.8 foot-candles

These measurements prove two things. First, they prove that there was no appreciable difference in the screen intensity provided by each system (thus proving Gray wrong in his statements) and, second, they proved that our calculations, based on theory, were absolutely okeh, since the percentage error was less than 10 per cent, which is quite acceptable in view of the fact that these tests were conducted on the actual projection machine and not on an optical bar.

This last, we believe, constitutes our most important proof that Gray is not right and that there are only three fundamental factors to be considered in any optic system:

1. Source brightness.
2. Effective area of projection lens.
3. Projection distance.

There is yet one other thing that our tests prove rather conclusively, and that is, that the focal length of a projection lens (hence size of screen picture) has absolutely no bearing whatever on resultant screen intensity.

It seems rather hard for some people to believe this simple thing. At the time of the Roxy opening in New York, "Art" Smith, chief projectionist of the Roxy, and "Billy," of the National Theatre Supply Co.'s New York office, each, individually, wanted to "bet" the editor one hundred dollars that this was not so, saying that the screen intensity would be raised in proportion to the reduction of screen picture as obtained merely by changing the focal length of the projection lens.

The editor offered to accommodate both of these worthy gentlemen, but since no money was produced to back up their contentions the "bets"—in a manner of speaking—collapsed under their own weight.

Well, Arthur?

Well, Arthur? In view of what was said above, and in the preceding issue, how do your personal views on the subject stand now?

Do I collect, or not?

Gray promised the writer that if proven wholly wrong he would provide him (the editor) with some "extra special" ginger ale at the next meeting of the S.M.P.E. in Norfolk next month.

In all fairness to Gray, though, we will point out a technicality upon which can be based an argument to the effect that in his particular case the lens diameter had not been changed since he started with a 3-inch diameter and he retained this lens throughout the test.

His only variables, therefore, were the size of the iris opening and the focal length of the projection lens. This is a technicality, pure and simple, and, while in a court of law, under similar circumstances, it would gain him some advantage, it would not affect our claim that the lens diameter, in effect, had really been changed.

We do not believe, however, that Gray wishes to avail himself of such technicalities, since he says, "I don't give a tinker's hoot whether the projectionists at large agree with me or with you. What I want is to have the real gist of the matter presented so clearly that they, including myself, will know just what is what. . . ."

Educational Meetings Find Favor at Detroit

TWO hundred members of the Detroit M. P. Operators' Union Local 199. attended the last meeting held in that city. Every third Wednesday of each month "educational" meetings are held, and at the last one Carl Brenkert and J. H. Kurlander of the Brenkert Light and Engineering Co. gave a talk and demonstration on Brenkert product.

Wm. C. Kunzman, of the National Carbon Co., will lecture at the next educational meeting, on April 20.

DIAMOND FLASHER BUTTONS

make the stars TWINKLE

The more you play up the star in a "Star Feature" picture, the more receipts do you pull in to your Box Office. Note the marquees illustrated—the St. Francis Theatre, San Francisco, featuring Harold Lloyd.

Lighted displays with DIAMOND FLASHER BUTTONS are one way to effectively exploit a star. Used in lobby displays, marquees, or stage effects, they get that profit-making attention. And decrease current cost and lamp upkeep.

Ask your supply house today to install DIAMOND FLASHER BUTTONS, or write us for the name of our nearest distributor.

Program Announced for S. M. P. E. Convention

Important Events Listed and Large Attendance Expected at Spring Meet in Norfolk

THE program of events which are to feature the Spring Meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers has been completed and full arrangements covering the four day convention, to be held at the Monticello Hotel, Norfolk, Va., April 25-28, have been published by the Committee in Charge.

Transportation facilities have been arranged with the Old Dominion Line, with a direct service between New York and Norfolk by boat, and the Pennsylvania Railroad to Norfolk. Members who are planning to go by the Old Dominion Line boat, leaving New York 12 o'clock noon, Saturday, April 23, are advised to communicate with J. C. Kroesen, Edison Lamp Works, Harrison, N. J. Arrangements for other sailings must be made direct with the Old Dominion Line, pier 25 North River, New York City.

The program for the Norfolk meeting as issued by the Society is as follows:

Monday, April 25: 9:30, Registration. 10:30, Presidential Address by W. B. Cook, Kodascope Libraries, Inc., New York, N. Y. New Business. Report of Arrangements, Publications, Papers, Publicity and Advertising, and Membership Committees. "Report of Progress in the Motion Picture Industry" by Carl E. Egeler, National Lamp Works, Cleveland, Ohio. "Hollywood and the Motion Picture Engineers" by K. C. D. Hickman, Research Laboratory, Eastman Kodak Company. 1:00, Luncheon. 2:00, Papers: "Radio Movies and the Theatre" by C. F. Jenkins. "Some Technical Aspects of the Vitaphone" by J. B. Harlow, Development Manager, Western Electric Co., New York, N. Y. "The Conservation Program of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America" by Hickman Price, Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., New York, N. Y. Dolores Conrad, winner of the Denver Post's 1926 beauty contest, has joined the cast of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "The Trail of '98." Also from Denver comes Paul Hoefler, cameraman who filmed the Denver-African expedition a year ago, who has joined the "shooting" staff of the producing unit filming "The Trail of '98."

Oscar Apfel, directing a new Pathe Western feature starring Buddy Roosevelt, "The Code of the Cow Country," has finished casting for this Lester F. Scott production. Elsa Benham appears opposite Roosevelt while others in the cast are Melbourne McDowell, Richard Neil, Walter Maley, Sherry Tansey and Hand Bell.

The first member of "The Trail of '98" unit to return from location in the Rockies to Los Angeles is Polly Moran, English comedienne, who went back to take an important part in "The Callahans and the Murphys" which George Hill will direct. Other players in the Irish story will be Frank Currier, Tom Lewis and Turner Savage.

Ken Maynard's next starring Western for First National has gone into production with Al Rogell directing. It is called "The Devil's Saddle" and was adapted by Marion Jackson from the book by Kenneth Perkins.

A new contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has been given to Dorothy Sebastian, who has just completed four picture roles at the M-G-M studio. Miss Sebastian's latest role was opposite Tim McCoy in the latter's latest historical Western, bearing the tentative title of "California."

Richard Thorpe has but recently finished the direction of a new Buffalo Bill, Jr., Western, "Pals in Peril." The production has already been shipped East for screening before the Pathe reviewing committee. Olive Hasbrouck is the chief feminine player in the production and George Ovey provides comedy relief.

First National's optional contract on the services of Donald Reed, now playing in Colleen Moore's "Naughty But Nice," was renewed recently.

The supporting cast of Lon Chaney's "The Unknown," which Tod Browning is directing, has been augmented by the addition of John St. Polis, character actor, who will appear as the surgeon who amputates Chaney's arm in the new mystery story.

Lucien Prival, European actor, has joined the cast supporting Richard Barthelmess in "The Patent Leather Kid," the First National war story which is now nearing completion under Alfred A. Santell's direction. John Kolb has also joined the cast.

The principal players in Universal's "The Eternal Silence" will be Francis X. Bushman, Neil Hamilton, June Marlowe, Otis Harlan and Burr McIntosh. The locale of the picture, which was adapted from William McLeod Raine's story, "The Yukon Trail," is laid in the frozen North. One of the outstanding features of the production is the construction of a large glacier at the Universal studio. This set has just been completed and is being photographed now. The set requires 15,000 amperes of current to light it.

"His Brother From Brazil," the first of a series of feature comedies co-starring Lew Cody and Aileen Pringle, was put into work last week at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio with Robert Z. Leonard directing. The cast of "His Brother From Brazil," in which Cody plays a dual role, includes Gertrude Short, Hedda Hopper and John T. Murray.

As soon as she finished working in the sixth episode of "The Collegians" series for Universal, Dorothy Gulliver was assigned to play opposite Fred Humes in the latter's new Western vehicle "One Glorious Scrap," which Edgar Lewis is directing. She will return to "The Collegians," upon completing her work as leading lady opposite Humes to finish the remaining four episodes for the coming year. Nat Ross, directing the second "Collegians" series, has been given the direction of "Stop That Man," an original story by Hampton Del Ruth.

Former columnist on the "San Francisco Call" and title writer, Robert Hopkins has signed a contract with Paramount. During the last year and a half he titled approximately 43 pictures for Warner Bros. His first work for Paramount will be on "The Whirlwind of Youth" and "The Big Sneeze."

Another melodrama has been assigned Edward Laemmle as his next production. The story is called "Counsel for the Defense" and was written by Henry Irving Dodge. Harris and Cohan produced it as a play in New York. Charles Logue is writing the continuity.

Malcolm St. Clair, directing for Paramount, has been definitely assigned the direction on Richard Dix's next starring vehicle, as yet untitled. The picture will be from a story written expressly for Dix.

Rupert Julian, director, will direct "The Country Doctor," a screen version of the stage play by Mann Page and Izola Forrester. The technical and camera staffs have already left Culver City for White River Junction, Vt., where several of the more important scenes will be taken.

"The Wind," the next Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer film, featuring Lillian Gish, was put into production last week. Two of the star's co-workers in "The Scarlet Letter" are again associated with her in the making of this Dorothy Scarborough story. They are Lars Hanson and Victor Seastrom. The former will again appear opposite Miss Gish while the latter will occupy the director's chair. Montague Love is to have the heavy role.

Seeing a seventeen-year-old Mexican dancer, Lupe Velez, at a benefit performance of the Hollywood Music Box, Hal Roach immediately signed the young senorita to a contract. Now she is a permanent member to the Roach stock company. In Charley Chase's next comedy, as yet untitled, she will have the role of leading lady. Other Roach players who recently signed long term contracts with the comedy producer are Max Davidson, Stan Laurel, Viola Richard, Jess Devorska, Joe Cobb and Jean Darling.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has assigned the direction of "Rose Marie," the rights to which were acquired last fall, to William Nigh. No members of the cast have been decided upon yet; but the production will be screened spectacularly, it is said, probably getting under way at the Culver City studio in about six weeks.

Appearing with May Robson in "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary," which Erl Kenton is directing for Metropolitan, will be Harrison Ford, Phyllis Haver, Franklin Pangborn, Robert Edeson, Arthur Hoyt, Lon Poff, Harry Lorraine and J. C. Fowler.

The latest addition to the editorial department of the Hal Roach studio is Reed Huestis, a Los Angeles newspaperman, humorist and screen writer. Besides scenarizing, Huestis will devote his time to the titling of all Pathe comedies emanating from the Roach lot during the absence of H. M. Walker, vice-president, who has gone to New York City for an indefinite stay.

Clem Beauchamp, one of the outstanding comedians on the Educational lot, is assisting Al St. John, another of the Educational comedians, in the laugh incidents in "Jungle Heat," a new Mermaid comedy.

"Our Gang," Pathe's collection of youngsters, has completed scenes for a new Pathe comedy, as yet titleless. Anthony Mack and Charles Oelze directed for Hal Roach while the important players in the cast were Farina, Joe Cobb, Jackie Condon, Jean Darling, Jay Smith and Scooter Lowry.

George Atterbury, a dwarf who has been seen in this season's output of comedies from the Educational studio, plays the part of a fake bear in a forthcoming Cameo comedy called "Hold That Bear."

Using a railroad station for a scene in the latest Hal Roach star comedy, Fred Guiol, directing the number, had to use the services of twenty-five extra staff assistants to hold back the crowds that collected and keep the stragglers out of the camera's range. Jimmy Finlayson, Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy are in the cast of this latest of the Roach star comedies.

In the next Educational-Christie comedy starring Neal Burns the role of leading lady will be interpreted by Edna Marion. Jack Duffy and Bill Irving will also have something to do with the fun-making.

Tom Mix and a company of 52 actors, cowboys, cameramen and others left the Fox Films studio the other day for Victorville where he will screen sequences for "The Circus Ace," his new starring film in which will also appear Natalie Joyce, Duke R. Lee, Jack Baston and James Bradbury, Jr. The scenario was written by Jack Jungmeyer and Ben Stoloff is directing.

"Slide, Kelly, Slide" — Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Embassy Theatre, New York City

Telegraph: "Just about breaks up ball game. Moves with speed and precision of hero's 'phantom ball.' Has the works—comedy, pathos, heart interest and thrills. There isn't dull moment, nor actor in cast who doesn't deserve word of praise."

Evening World: "One of best movies, and so far as our limited knowledge can reach, the baseball classic, in prose and drama, of all time. Directorially we could find no fault; photographically none could criticize, and if there's a better cast put together in any one picture on Broadway then this reviewer has missed it."

Graphic: "William Haines slid in on another hit. Brings to the screen greatest baseball film ever made. Humor, thrills and romance built around call, 'Play ball!' and in center of it all young Haines, better than in 'Brown of Harvard.'"

World: "Mr. Haines now stands upon his own feet as worthy wearer of robe of dignity which Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has but recently thrown about him."

Evening Sun: "With clever human acting, cleverer subtitles and flavorous, atmospheric humor and sentiment, it represents as good a show as one has a right to expect and deserves to be an exceptional success."

Journal: "Gave the customers everything but ice cream cones and hot dogs. Haines is perfect in his type of role—fresh youngster who finally enlists sympathy. In thrilling game he cracks out homer, with man on first, and wins not only pennant but heroine."

News: "Ought to hit long run on Broadway. If baseball and Bill Haines both strike your fancy, there's entertainment galore for you. Is swift-flowing; there are baseball thrills and human interest."

American: "Will win pennant at box office. Is packed with laughter and pathos, love and thrills."

Times: "No slackness to this picture. William Haines gives capital performance. Film plunges on from the first chapter and goes right through without any intermission. Interest is well sustained and comedy is excellent."

"Slide, Kelly, Slide" — Metro-Goldwyn - Mayer, State Theatre, Los Angeles

Times: "A he-man romance of the baseball diamond and quite as emphatically entertaining as the title suggests. However, the diamond sequences are not too complicated to be followed by the sex that is usually uninitiated in 'the great American game' and then Haines has a good profile. So, you see, even the ladies can't lose by seeing it. And the atmosphere of the game is all there. But the titles take care of the humor. They are very funny without being actually obtrusive."

News: "'Slide, Kelly, Slide,' more than came up to expectations. If it isn't rated high among the best films of 1927, this writer has missed a guess. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer can be proud of this Edward Sedgwick play. It is well balanced, has well-timed laughs and pathos and, above all, it has an intensely human story that should appeal to men and women alike."

THE VOICE OF THE SILENT DRAMA

Prominent on Piccadilly Programs

Luxurious beauty and comfort have been combined to make The Piccadilly Theatre, owned by Herman Schoenstadt & Son, one of Chicago's most palatial motion picture theatres.

Piccadilly programs, however, are every bit as attractive to thousands of theatre-goers as the physical beauty of the new edifice. Playing a prominent part on these programs is the four-manual Kilgen Wonder Organ . . . an instrument which provides "The Voice of the Silent Drama."

The console of period design is a thing of beauty. The organ itself, arranged behind two artistic grilles, is impressive. Its more than three hundred stop keys provide every musical note and auxiliary sound within the cinema gamut. A piano, controlled directly from the organ, is one of the many interesting and unique features.

This Kilgen was built to meet the specific needs of The Piccadilly. We can design an instrument to fit your theatre's needs, no matter how pretentious or modest it may be. Your inquiry is made without obligation... Geo. Kilgen & Son, Builders, Pipe Organs, St. Louis, U. S. A.

Public confidence and good will are a newsreel's greatest assets!

The millions of thoughtful people who go to the movies are quick to recognize basic values, especially as regards screen journalism, in which merit plays such a large part!

FOX NEWS

because of its long record of integrity, impartiality and intelligence in its presentation of the pictorial news of the world, is today the "Mightiest of All" in the public's esteem.

Exhibitors are buying FOX NEWS because the public wants it!

The Champion!

Which would you rather have for a personal appearance in your house, the Champion himself or his challengers? The conqueror with a record or the Tom, Dick and Harrys who brag that they can lick him?

If mere claims brought championships, a flyweight could have Tunney's crown.

A champion doesn't just happen.

He becomes one on performance.

It's the champion that draws the big gates at fabulous prices. It's the champion's name that is on everyone's lips. It's the champion that people want, that multitudes fight to see.

Pathe News didn't get the championship by claiming it but by earning it.

For sixteen years it has been on the very top of the motion picture heap, and by the grace of God, hard work and brain power it's going to stay there.

It's easy to claim; but to expect something bigger and better in news reels over night is akin to expecting babies to be born 16 years old, equipped with a college education.

When you book the Pathe News you're getting a news reel, with a name that's worth millions of dollars to the exhibitors of the United States.

---Outside the Contract

A large part of the value of any product is represented by the advertising and the service that are not mentioned in the contract. Ivory soap, Arrow collars and Buick automobiles might be just as good without advertising, but they would not sell as well and would not make as much money for the dealer.

Educational Pictures make money for exhibitors, not only because they are of the highest quality as entertainment, but also because they are supported by extensive national advertising and powerful exploitation tie-ups. They are the only short features that have had consistent national advertising.

A popular brand means as much to the dealer in motion picture entertainment as to the dealer in groceries, or in clothing.

Good morning!

Jealousy is the whip that makes the mare go in this picture.

Two husbands entertain the green-eyed monster and let it roar. As a result much happens to teach the boys a needed lesson.

"Stolen Pleasures" is sensational but reasonable. The jams the characters find themselves in are just the sort you read about in the papers every day or so. Primitive passions unleashed make an exhibition of themselves. It's all most exciting and convincing, really.

The picture is well produced. The cast is splendid. It seemed SO nice to see Helene Chadwick again! I can't understand why she doesn't appear more often, for besides being an able actress she has a most delightful and appealing personality.

HOLLYWOOD, April 7.

IT doesn't take long for the word to get about here of big pictures in the making. The tip was given me here and there on "The Patent Leather Kid" and the opportunity came along yesterday to see a good part of the picture with R. A. Rowland, in the studio projection rooms at Burbank.

The heavy war sequences are now being shot, up at Camp Lewis, Washington. I saw two powerful war scenes, unusual, too, showing the receiving and operating hospitals just back of the trenches. In these, another young player comes into the limelight, Mollie O'Day, a sister of Sally O'Neill. Her acting is real and touching, taking full advantage of an exceptional part. They seem to be making these youngsters out here on all sides, as Griffith alone did in the earlier days.

Barthelmess is at his best. He has done no work to equal his title part here since "Tol'able David."

The earlier part of the picture, all of which will be greatly snapped up, of course, in the editing, is characterization building. Yet, it is a big and vital picture in itself with Barthelmess in a most finished performance against backgrounds only made possible by such studio facilities as the huge Burbank studio possesses. Through the camera's eye are shown the vast crowds, elevated railway and night life in general of, seemingly, a big section of New York's east side. Barthelmess is in genuine action in the ring; he refused to have a double. The New York City of 1917 is most faithfully produced; there's a wealth of interest in this phase alone.

Like "Wings," this picture is thoroughly distinctive, so much so that it cannot be broadly classed as war stuff. The story is one of the vital kind that writes itself and so very largely makes itself in pictures. Rowland has had it up his sleeve for a big trick. The theme is that of a daring and scrappy prize fighter who turns yellow at the thought of bullets and bayonets, an east side Beau Brummel pug who has never felt the thrill of patriotism. There are some "Star Spangled Banner" climaxes in it which should get audiences up from their theatre seats with real emotion added to the reverence always expressed for the national anthem.

"Camille," Norma Talmadge's last picture for First National, has been sent East. I am sorry to have missed seeing it before the New York opening, which I note is to be at the Globe Theatre on April 21st. I hear excellent reports, particularly of the work of Gilbert Roland, who plays opposite Norma.

Sam Rork's present release has also been finished and goes forth under the catchy title of "Pierre of the Ritz." Lewis Stone in the title part is at his best. There is a notable long shot of the modern hotel with its luxury and jazz madness, carrying the eye through corridors, restaurants and peacock alleys from one New York avenue to another. The picture has narrative length, character delineation and is good box-office.

With the Stanley interests now in control of First National, it is to be assumed that they will have much to say about the future production policy. John McGuirk is a powerful figure. No changes have been indicated as yet, but I gather that the independent producer will be favored. That, at least, is to be greatly hoped for.

Colleen Moore is at work on "Naughty But Nice." George Fitzmaurice is in the production of "The Tender Hour"; Charles Brabin is directing "Diamonds in the Rough." Alexander Korda, the former Ufa director and Maria Corda, brought to this country by R. A. Rowland, will shortly be in action. Their last picture made abroad, for Fox, was billed in Holland while I was there.

The unit scheme of production is in force at First National with John McCormick at the head and in touch with the unit chiefs; Al and Ray Rockett, Carey Wilson, Charles Rogers, Wid Gunning and Frank Griffin.

Universal's Imposing Line-Up

Universal is another company that is out after first honors this year; and here again and without hesitation I can call the exhibitors' attention to a line-up of best seller books, stage successes, and talent that looks like well- and ambitiously-planned box-office.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" is the big one. Production started six months ago, and the scene I watched when I happened in the studio was numbered 1649. Harry Pollard is facing a tense job of cutting. But he has really been studying out the picture for the past two years, and has it clearly visualized. Much research has been done. The book is the whole basis of the picture. The stage play—and indeed all previous efforts at reproduction—would be semi-burlesque today.

I asked General Manager Henningson about the South's attitude toward the picture.

"We are not worrying," he said. "Even if such a territory were partly lost that loss will be more than made up by big foreign sales. The book, you know, is one of the best known in all the world; there have been twenty-seven translations of it.

"But we do not anticipate any trouble in the South; on the contrary, we look to the South for its heaviest box-office. The fidelity with which the picture portrays the ante-bellum South cannot fail to excite wide interest. With all due regard to the South's sensitiveness over the past and her present racial situation, we are presenting the picture with a clear foreword, emphasizing the fact that slavery was only an economic phase in the evolution of this great section. The people there will, I am sure, be bound to see the picture; and because it is well done, it will do well and do good, too."

What Leni Has Done

Another special is "The Cat and the Canary." This is Paul Leni's first American production, and this mystery play was a wise selection for this master of suggestive effects. A few years ago we about came to the decision that the screen could not successfully portray these weird thrillers of the stage in which sound and the human voice played so vital a part. Leni uses photography and sets to pro-

of the Production Situation

duce the same eerie effects. He actually makes furniture talk; a long deserted hallway tells a story; he calls attention to a door by making it oversize and gets attention without taking it from the action in the foreground. We have not had thus far such screen psychology. This picture will score. I had heard much about it in New York, and those reports are fully verified here.

Leni follows "The Cat and the Canary" with Earl Derr Biggers' "The Chinese Parrott" and Victor Hugo's "The Man Who Laughs," with Conrad Veidt in the title role.

Harry Pollard will produce Edna Ferber's best seller "Showboat."

The stage successes: "Cheating Cheaters," and "We Americans" are scheduled; also "Alias the Deacon," "A Pair of Silk Stockings," "The Four Flusher," "Polish Blood," "The Third Party."

More books are Curwood's "Back to God's Country," "The Crimson Hour," Mary Roberts Rinehart's "Finders Keepers," P. G. Wodehouse's "The Small Bachelor."

Then there are the Reginald Dennys.

Certainly an imposing schedule.

Universal, too, it will be noted, comes in for its share of Hollywood's foreign invasion—with Paul Leni, Conrad Veidt and Ivan Moskine.

New Kinds of Theatres

In a recent article I spoke of the changing type of picture here. Of course, we have been striving for "specials" right along. But formerly they came along at the rate of one or two a year, per company, or individual producer. To-day it is, evidently, more the regular order of production. They are not necessarily the big, spectacular type, but rather the theme of broader appeal within this country and embracing as well, the entertainment satisfaction of the peoples of other lands. Talent, technique, sets—all are of a much higher and more general order.

Better stories, too, are available today, in published form. And, also, production is looking about on a broad scale for original and strong screen stories founded upon world romance—history, biography, and great modern events.

There is a marked departure from the regular routine of pictures bearing the Simon pure brand of Times Square and Hollywood.

And so it follows that our theatres will change—are already changing—to meet this change in production, to bring together the new kind of picture and the new kind of people who inevitably respond.

We used to use legitimate houses for the special picture. Now we are going to have long-run picture houses everywhere. All this, of course, with certain and present restrictions and amendments.

Let us take Los Angeles as a criterion for the cities of the country.

Today the Million-Dollar Theatre, Grauman's Egyptian, the Carthay Circle, the Criterion, the Forum, make a group of five theatres with long-run policies. Just now they house, respectively, "Sorrows of Satan," "Old Ironsides," "What Price Glory," "Beloved Rogue," and "Yankee Clipper."

The Metropolitan and Loew's State, two large and costly theatres, representative of the first-run fleet of theatres the country over, are today giving what is virtually a mixed bill, featuring presentations along with the picture.

So the question naturally arises:

Are the much-vaunted first-run palaces to take a secondary place so far as picture entertainment is concerned? Are they to be known as week-runs rather than first-runs? Are they to depend upon considerable attractions other than feature pictures and make their appeal to the public along these mixed bill lines?

Short Subjects to the Front

That brings up the matter of short subjects, for one thing.

Perhaps the big opportunity for short features, the one they have so valiantly fought for, is now here. Are they to get into their deserved limelight by finding the first-runs reaching hungrily after them and adequately promoting them to the public—as feature entertainment?

I put the question to Warren Doane, general manager of the Hal Roach studios. Hal Roach, be it known, has stood steadily, these several years, for the feature quality of the two-reel comedy. He stands just as sturdily today and it now looks as if he were coming into his own.

"The opportunity is here," said Doane; and he called my attention to another phase of the week-run situation. The downtown theatres, he pointed out, don't give the protection to features they formerly gave. The outlying neighborhood houses follow with the same picture within a week. Unless one follows the newspapers very closely, it would seem that the feature is playing day and date, all along the theatre line.

So the other attractions will count with the public; and the exhibitor will quickly awaken to this fact and play up the short feature in his advertising.

"Provided," he emphasized, "they are worth it.

"Here at the Roach studios we are out for production quality, and concentrating on it. We don't believe that anything else will count—certainly not without this requisite. All the ballyhoo in the world won't make features out of short subjects unless they are features. That is what we are after. Our distributing affairs we have put entirely in the capable hands of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. We are out for the production goal."

So, it appears, are others. It is safe to predict a big year in short subjects, much activity on a higher plane of endeavor and some hectic competition.

Hollywood Productions is starring Edward Everett Horton in a series for Paramount release. I saw the first of these at the Metropolitan projection rooms. It is snappy, funny and clean.

Taylor Holmes and Leah Baird are making a series of comedies after the story style of the Sidney Drew subjects.

Studios in Full Swing

The Educational and Christie studios are in full swing. Universal and Fox will devote this year a large part of their heavy production budgets to short subjects; so will F.B.O.

Arthur Maude, whose "Vision" received the Riesenfeld medal for the best short subject of 1926, has just finished another remarkable two-reel feature in technicolor. It is titled "Making the American Flag," and features Francis X. Bushman as George Washington, and Enid Bennett as Betsy Ross. Johnny Walker and Alice Calhoun play the romantic parts in a story written by Maude. The picture was received with cheers at the preview here at the West Lake Theatre.

Here is a short feature—in every sense of the word, "feature."

It is the first of a series in technicolor on great moments in history. The next will be "The Alamo." The producing company is Colorcraft.

All in all, it looks like a big short subject year.

Charles Christie figures that the situation on two-reel comedies will not be greatly changed—as to their volume. The advent of Paramount and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer into this field will be offset by the reduction in these releases on the part of Educational and Pathe. He estimates no more than 190 two-reel comedies from all four concerns, which about equalled the combined releases (of two-reelers) by Educational and Pathe last year.

By Any Other Name

WHEN Joseph P. Kennedy, president of F.B.O., signed Goldie Flynn, a chorus girl in "Criss Cross," it was decided to change her name for screen purposes to the more euphonious Elinor King, and the young lady started on her way to Hollywood under that cognomen—but before she arrived there a letter was received by Mr. Kennedy from another young lady who informed him that Elinor King was her real name and that she had been using it in pictures for six years, so couldn't he find some other name for Miss Flynn? As a result, the former chorister had been rechristened Eileen King by the time she stepped off the train in Hollywood.

From Selling to Making

WILLIAM K. HOWARD, the director of "White Gold," who returned to the Coast to start "The Shepherd of the Hills" on Thursday, is a former film salesman—one of the few among directors. Howard went to Minneapolis as a salesman for Vitagraph, later becoming manager for Metro there. The war intervened, and when he returned he went with Universal, touring the country as special sales representative for the Stage Women's War Relief series of two reelers. On the Coast he decided to enter production and took a position as assistant director at Fox. He had advanced to a full directorship, making small program pictures of the ten-day schedule order, when a slump hit the Coast and studios shut down. Things went rather badly for a spell, with an independent picture now and then—he even returned to New York and sold film for a while—when a contract with Famous Players started the ball rolling in the right direction, since when matters have gone very well. "The Thundering Herd" established Howard as a director to be reckoned with. "Gigolo" and "White Gold" at De Mille have enhanced that reputation.

"White Gold," which is an uncompromisingly realistic piece, was filmed in sequence without a script, each situation being permitted to develop logically out of the characters' reactions. It was not planned on an amibtious scale, but it will probably do more for its company's reputation this year than many of the more lavish productions.

Howard was the surprise speaker at the get-together luncheon of the Motion Pictures Salesmen, Inc., in New York last Saturday, and was a decided hit. He told, among other things, of the influence which leading directors have on younger megaphone wielders, citing Lubitsch as the subtle influence, Murnau for technical mastery, von Stroheim for belligerent aggressiveness, Cruze for human values, Vidor as the greatest American director, Seastrom as the realist, C. B. De Mille as the executive and Griffith as the pioneer.

Dancing Feet at F.B.O.

SIX girls now playing in pictures at the F.B.O. studios won their way into the celluloid drama after dancing careers—Lorraine Eason, Jeanne Morgan, Jola Mendez, Eileen King, Thelma Hill and Sharon Lynn. This is no mere coincidence, says William Le Baron, the new vice-president in charge of production, pointing out that dancers acquire a poise and grace which are valuable in screen work, and have in addition the beauty of face and figure essential to picture success.

EDGAR WALLACH was appointed this week as house manager of the Colony Theatre in New York, succeeding Joe Marks, who is returning to Youngstown, O., where he was previously engaged in theatrical enterprises.

The Story of a Promotion

BACK of the simple announcement that the Board of Directors of United Artists Corporation has elected Miss Mary Rusk to the post of assistant treasurer lies an unusual story of loyalty and diligence and their reward. There are those who say that such things count for little in the film industry—the rise of Mary Rusk from bookkeeper to assistant treasurer is a pleasant reminder that they can and do.

Miss Mary Rusk, new assistant treasurer of United Artists Corp.

When the late Hiram Abrams came to Paramount as president he needed the services of a bookkeeper whom he could rely upon. Miss Rusk was then in the auditing department, and Mr. Abrams' personal accounts were entrusted to her.

Later, when he opened an office in the Candler Building and began working toward the organization of United Artists, he looked about for a secretary who also understood bookkeeping. The auditor of Paramount recommended Miss Rusk for the position as she was fully qualified and was familiar with Mr. Abrams' affairs in the bargain. Thus her connection with United Artists dates from its very inception.

As the years passed, her knowledge of practical film affairs grew in scope and sureness, and she was able to relieve the president of more and more routine detail. Everything went on as usual in his absence, and the confidence which he imposed in her was a tribute both to her ability and her trustworthiness.

She continues to handle these matters today, and a thousand and one details of prints, accessories and whatnot pass through her hands with efficiency and despatch. Yet she is, in manner and appearance, the very reverse of the traditional modern business woman. Quiet-voiced, modest, shy in the extreme, unfailingly even-tempered, self-effacing—surely, here is not what one would expect of a successful woman executive. But there is another side to the picture. At 8:30, Mary Rusk is at her desk, and she is there until work is finished, whether that means 5:30 or 10:30. She is wholly absorbed in her work—lives it—with no hobbies, no diversions, no distractions—yet she remains a sane, normal, well-balanced human being. Perhaps no one is more universally liked in the United Artists organization, and every member of it seemed to find pleasure in the recognition given her services. Arthur Kelly, treasurer, paid a warm tribute to her ability, and expressed satisfaction with her recent promotion.

Obtaining an interview with Miss Rusk proved difficult. She had never been interviewed before—and, she asserts, never will be again—and attempted to evade it by preparing a written statement. When she finally saw a reporter, she insisted that her story was all in the statement—that there was nothing unusual or interesting about herself—that there was nothing to write. Perhaps a few sentences from the statement which she wrote will illustrate her character best:

"May I here pay just tribute to the splendid men with whom it has been my great privilege to work. Loyalty to those 'higher up,' who have never hesitated to help me when I needed assistance in my work, has been a joy. . . . I am happy in knowing my late advancement is due entirely to the magnanimous liberality of our chief executive. . . . When any individual is permitted to serve such men as it has been my privilege to meet in this business—his or her success is assured."

Frances Lee, Wampas Baby Star, shows Bobby Vernon, star of "Duck Out," a Bobby Vernon-Educational comedy, how easy it is to do a split. Bobby has just about decided to leave such things to his leading lady in future.

Hitt Given Coast Post

LAURANCE W. HITT, former art director of the Paramount Long Island studios, has been given a similar post at the Hollywood plant. Hitt was at one time an architect in Montreal and New York, entering picture work in 1920. After "The Passion Flower," "Smilin' Through," "Fascination," "Sherlock Holmes" and others, he joined Famous in 1922 and was made art director of the Eastern studios the following year.

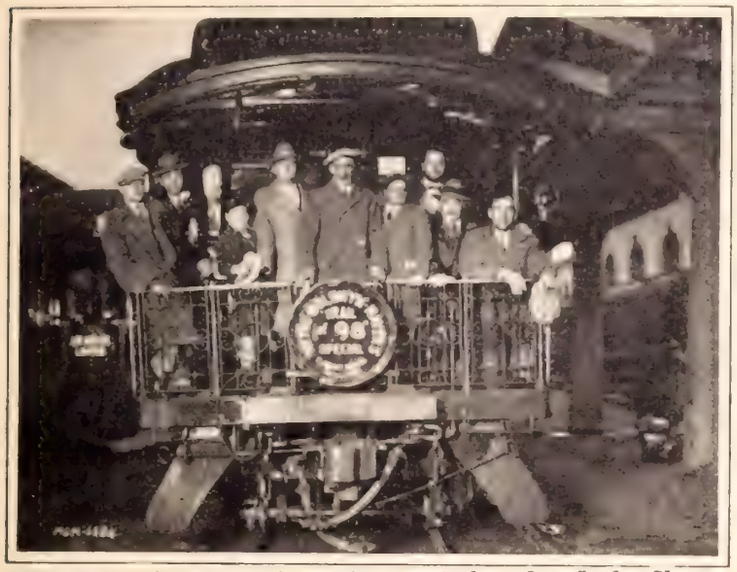
Johnny Hines, C. C. Burr and their script and gag staff, assisted by Loretta, the comedian's parrot, working out laugh sequences for "White Pants Willie," his next First National feature, adapted from Elmer Davis' Liberty magazine serial

There's something funny about this somewhere. Lya de Putti has dark hair and there is only one of her—but here she is blonde twins. Her latest picture is "The Heart Thief" for Metropolitan

The Trail of Danger

THOSE who sit back comfortably in their upholstered seats in a luxurious theatre to see "The Trail of '98" will probably give little thought to the hardships endured by the unit making the picture—but the two dozen members of the cast and hundred technicians who recently returned to Los Angeles with Director Clarence Brown will not forget them in a hurry.

A month spent at an altitude of 12,000 feet in the midst of record-breaking blizzards, terrific gales and a temperature of 25 below zero proved a difficult location trip. Thousands of tons of snow on the peaks above threatened to engulf the camp at Corona, Col., and dynamite had to be used to remove some of the drifts. The high altitude made exertion difficult, and the danger of frostbite and freezing had to be contended with constantly. Brown feels, however, that he has brought back with him the most remarkable snow scenes yet filmed.



Eileen, Pat O'Malley's eldest, is pursued by the menacing Eric von Stroheim, Jr., through the two reels of "Young Hollywood," a Madeline Brandeis production for Pathe. Billy Reid, Barbara Denny, Carey McCoy, George Bosworth, Tim Holt and Mary Desmond are also in the cast

D. A. R. Picks Educationals

FOUR Educational releases are on the first published list of pictures approved by the Daughters of the American Revolution —Eugene H. Roth's three Romance productions: "The Vision," "The Blue Boy," and "The Mona Lisa," and the Robert C. Bruce Scenic Novelties.

What Does He Do in Spare Time?

GRAHAM BAKER, staff scenarist at Warner Bros., is now writing the picture play of "The Heart of Maryland." Lloyd Bacon, who directed "White Flannels" from Baker's script, will officiate. Now in course of production is "Irish Hearts," which he also wrote. In less than one year under the Warner banner, Baker has not only written these, but also "The Third Degree," "Finger Prints," "My Official Wife," "Millionaires," "The Gay Old Bird," "Matinee Ladies," "Broken Hearts of Hollywood," "Hills of Kentucky," and has collaborated on several others. At odd times he plays golf and bridge.

With a special train of 16 cars for principals and staff, the Clarence Brown company departed recently for Denver to film snow scenes of "The Trail of '98," his latest Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production. Tully Marshall, Ralph Forbes and Harry Carey may be recognized among those on the rear platform

Pinning the Medals

SIX subjects were selected for special mention by the National Board of Review in the past fortnight—"Mr. Wu," M-G-M; "No Man's Law," Pathe; Pathe Review Nos. 18 and 19; "Afraid to Love," Paramount, and "Convoy," First National.

Foreign Offers Refused

EDDIE CANTOR has turned down offers to appear at the Hippodrome in London and the Ambassador in Paris to continue his screen career with Paramount.

The first Fox Films' European production to be released here will be "Madame Wants No Children," a light comedy directed by Alexander Korda and starring Maria Corda, shown in the above close shot. Miss Corda is highly popular on the Continent She and Director Korda are both in this country

Picture News Is Vital

FRESH recognition of the genuine news value of film events recently evidenced by the Associated Press action in establishing a film department was given on Monday of this week, when telephotographs of the Vilma Banky-Rod La Rocque engagement party were sent by telephone by the A. T. & T. to A. P. offices in leading cities of the United States. Thus, for the first time, a motion picture news story was handled, words and pictures, entirely by wire.

Miss Banky is doing very nicely, thank you—as shown by her winning of the New York Daily News popularity contest, in which 31,370 persons voted. Ronald Colman came in second.

Irene Rich Wed

IRENE RICH, Warner Bros. star, was married to David F. Blankenhorn, Los Angeles real estate man, at Pebble Beach, Cal., last week.

Arnold, appearing in "The Missing Link" for Warner Bros., rehearses the "Alas, poor Yorick" scene under the expert supervision of Syd Chaplin, star of the production

McGowan Returning Home

WORD received in Culver City indicates that Robert McGowan, director for five years of the "Our Gang" comedies, will be back at the Hal Roach studios shortly to resume work on the series. He has been vacationing for the past three months, a rest made necessary by more than five years of consistent, hard work on one type of story with the same cast, virtually, throughout.

Elinor Fair, featured Cecil B. DeMille player, was the first passenger to try the Pullman facilities of the first "International air express," carrying passengers from Los Angeles to Ensenada, Mexico

Creating Public Favor

EVIDENCE of what may be done in a service way to influence public sentiment in favor of pictures is contained in a letter to M. J. O'Toole of the M.P.T.O.A. from Jimmie Leckie, a student in a Hamilton, Ont., school, telling how a debate on the advantages of photoplays was won through information sent him by the national exhibitor organization. Extracts follow:

"We were fortunate in winning the debate, your material being of great assistance. The vote was unanimous. A rather large audience was in attendance, some people claiming we had changed their opinions towards moving pictures from bad to favorable."

Rothacker Sails

WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER, transatlantic commuter extraordinary, sailed for Europe on Wednesday of this week, to be gone a very short time.

Comedy Scenarist on Leave

FRANK CONKLIN, the man who has written many of the Educational-Christie comedies of wedded life, has been so busy producing scripts for the new comedies for such stars as Bobby Vernon, Billy Dooley, Jimmie Adams and Neal Burns, that he is just getting around to taking his bride, formerly Grace Haskins, whom he married a year and a half ago, on their wedding trip to Europe.

Mr. Conklin has been extremely busy in the last few months and has several stories ahead for Christie. Consequently the comedy producer has given him a leave of absence, and the Conklins are now bound for Vigo, Spain. After a visit there, they will go to Paris and see the sidewalk cafes and cabarets, presumably to absorb a few Continental ideas for comedies.

Foxites to Stage Play

AT the regular meeting in May of the Fox A.C., the Fox Dramatic society will present "Nearly Newlyweds," a one-act farce by Thomas Carmody, with a cast including Joe Ornstein, Dave Ornstein, Pearl Brandeis, Gertrude Robbins, Herman Blumenfeld and Harry Goldberg.

Gest Talks on the Cinema

MORRIS GEST, theatrical impresario, who is to invade pictures with "The Darling of the Gods" for United Artists, returned to New York this week after presenting "The Miracle" to record audiences in California, and predicted that motion pictures, which he once looked down upon, were on the eve of a revolution which would see tremendous intellectual and artistic growth.

It all came about, he says, through a prize fight, a rainstorm and a bad cold. He went to the Dempsey-Tunney fight, was soaked in the rain and caught a bad cold. This, together with his financial worries and what not at that time weakened him to the point where he consented to go to California to stage "The Miracle," and what he saw while there convinced him that the films were a medium worthy of his talents.

"The Miracle" played in San Francisco for three weeks, he said, taking in $145,000 the last week. In Los Angeles it brought $535,000 in five weeks.

Schwab Turns Movie Actor

CHARLES M. SCHWAB, steel magnate, turned movie actor at the M-G-M studios the other day, when he enacted an impromptu scene under the direction of Edmund Goulding. After seeing it, Louis B. Mayer is said to have offered him a steady contract, should Bethlehem Steel go up the spout.

Actor, Stockbroker, Actor

FRANK EVANS, a character actor who plays a strenuous role in W. C. Fields' new Paramount comedy, divides his time between screen acting and stock brokerage.

Evans was one of the pioneers in celluloid circles, having appeared with Mabel Normand and Fred Mace in a 900-foot Sennett comedy, "One-Round O'Brien," which ran six consecutive seasons as a "filler" for the variety acts at Hammerstein's Victoria Theatre, now the site of the Rialto Theatre in New York. For four years Evans was a member of the famous D. W. Griffith stock company at the Biograph studios. He has played featured roles in films with Pauline Frederick, Robert Warwick and Alfred Lunt, among others.

In the Fields picture Evans will return to the screen after an absence of a few years devoted to his brokerage business. His role is that of a hard-boiled business man with a deep-rooted aversion for bill collectors. Fields is a victim of his ruthless tactics, but avenges his dignity when he returns, deluded by a hypnotist into the belief that he is a lion, and boxes the formerly ferocious Evans into a state of helplessness.

Navy Men to See "Convoy"

DURING Navy Week, starting May 30th, a special showing of "Convoy," Robert Kane's naval feature, will be held at the Norva Theatre, Norfolk, Va. Important officials of the Navy Department in Washington are expected to attend, as well as other government department heads.

Alice Terry, playing the leading role in "The Garden of Allah," Rex Ingram's production for Metro-Goldwyn, introduces "Shorty," Ingram's 65-year-old protege, to Rabah, a Bedouin dancing girl brought to Nice from Africa for this picture.

Weekly Playdates Total 48,528, News' Survey Shows

Four Thousand Direct Exhibitor Reports Basis of Tabulation—Over 28,000 Prints in Weekly Circulation

BY J. S. DICKERSON

THE number of playing dates for feature pictures over a given period for the United States has been the subject of much argument and of considerable variance of opinion on the part of those who have been in the best position to compile figures from actual data.

In view of this apparent lack of statistical information, especially from authoritative sources, MOTION PICTURE NEWS has tabulated from four thousand direct exhibitor reports percentage figures from which accurate playing date data has been obtainable.

The grand total of these figures show that 48,528 actual theatre playing dates are available each week in 14,877 theatres (non-theatrical bookings not counted) and that 28,565 prints work one or more times per week to fill the above number of playing dates.

Divided into groups according to the number of days each theatre plays an attraction, the following data is disclosed:

Indefinite runs in theatres devoted exclusively to pictures, not counting producer-owned pre-view houses, road shows, or the occasional hold-over attraction, is compiled at 80. The number of new playing dates in this group at an average run of two and one half weeks is 32. The weekly change group shows 590 houses, with obviously, 590 new playing dates weekly.

Analysis in Detail

Two thousand, two hundred and thirty houses change twice per week and require 4,460 new shows. In the three-times-per-week group there are 4,070 theatres. These houses use 12,210 changes of program.

Changing four times per week there are 1,550 theatres and the number of bills used is 6,200. Only 530 theatres change 5 times per week, but this group requires 2,650 programs.

The daily change houses have been divided into two parts, the first being the houses that are open every day (a six and seven day week counted as a unit) and the second group being the theatres in all towns of less than 1,500 population where , while a daily change policy is universal, the number of days per week the theatres are open varies from one to seven.

In the daily change group playing every day, the NEWS figures show 1,450 houses requiring 8,700 programs. The second group of 4,377 theatres (towns of 1,500 and less) shows an average operating policy of three and one-eighth days per week which, when multiplied by the number of houses, 4,377, gives 15,750 shows used each week in the group.

The number of shows in both subdivisions in the daily change group is 24,450.

Placed in a table the above figures are as follows:

	No. Theatres
Indefinite runs (as designated)..	80
Weekly change runs.....	590
Twice per week changes.....	2,230
Three changes per week.....	4,070
Four changes per week.....	1,550
Five changes per week.....	530
Daily change houses (above 1,500)	1,450
Daily change houses (less than 1,500)	4,377
Total	14,877

Determining Numbers of Prints

Figures showing the number of prints needed to play the 48,528 dates are secured by the following method: prints needed for indefinite run new shows are 32, for the weekly change houses 590, for twice-a-week houses, allowing three days for transportation and inspection between the week-run and twice-a-week group, 4,460; for the three times weekly group 8,140 prints (two days allowed for transportation), and for the four day change houses, with two prints working, 3,100 are required.

Thirteen hundred and twenty prints are figured to serve the 530 houses in the five change per week houses and in the daily change group of houses running every day, 4,350 prints per week are estimated as being needed. The 4,377 small town houses operating on an average of three and one-eighth days per week, estimating the transportation, inspection and lost time in booking as five and one-half days per week, should need 6,565 prints.

The total of these figures is 28,565.

It will be noted that 5,827 houses are still in the daily change class and that the second largest group is the three-change-per-week theatre, 4,070 being in this classification.

Adding these two gives 9,897, slightly less than two-thirds of the number of houses playing pictures once per week or more. The large number of prints required to serve the daily change houses, 10,915, having a total weekly number of playing dates amounting to 22,378 invites conjecture as to the cost of physical distribution in comparison to the gross revenue, except where the daily change house is considered strictly on a basis of volume of business accruing from an investment and fixed overhead that cannot be changed, except in the matter of selling expenses.

In the number of weekly change houses, no allowance has been made for specials that are from time to time held over by the split-week policy theatres. If these engagements were actually counted over a year the number of week runs would without doubt be materially increased. Just what the increase would be, however, is only a guess. The same rule should apply to the weekly run policy theatres but since information of this nature could not be secured at any cost, the NEWS figures have necessarily been compiled on the announced policy of the houses considered and makes no allowance for exceptions.

Ontario Has Wider Distribution of British Films

THE first definite financial move toward the encouragement of British Empire moving pictures in the Province of Ontario was taken March 25 at the sitting of the Provincial Legislature at Toronto when an appropriation of $130,625 was voted for the Ontario Government's Motion Picture Studio at Trenton, Ontario.

In announcing the item, Hon. J. D. Monteith, Provincial Treasurer, told the Legislature that the Ontario Government had decided to give support to the campaign for wider distribution of British pictures in Canada. The appropriation of $130,625, which was considerably more than for the same studio last year, was adopted without a dissenting voice.

Record Number of Repeat Performances for "Big Parade" and "Ben-Hur"

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER claims establishment of another world's record for roadshows with "The Big Parade" and "Ben-Hur." "The Big Parade" has played, up to the present time, thirty-three "repeat" engagements in the first-run houses where it has been road-showed throughout the country. "Ben-Hur" has repeated in thirteen cities, making a total of forty-six second runs for these two specials, which have not yet been generally released, and establishing a precedent in motion picture history for repeats on road show film within such a short space of time, states M-G-M.

Dates Set for Paramount Regional Convention

Sessions at New York, Chicago, San Francisco; Production Program Announced at Meetings

ADVICES from the Paramount home office state that the coming international sales convention will be held this year in three cities, New York, Chicago and San Francisco. The New York sessions run May 2nd to 5th, those in Chicago May 7th to 10th and in San Francisco May 14th to 17th. The New York meetings will be held at the Hotel Pennsylvania, at the Drake Hotel in Chicago, and those in San Francisco at the Whitcomb Hotel.

What Paramount executives declare will be the company's outstanding production program will be presented to the field forces at these sessions, which will be significant in that they mark the company's re-entry into the short feature field. Sidney R. Kent, who will preside at the meetings, will define the company's policy of handling the program of features and short features. Jesse L. Lasky and Emanuel Cohen, director of short feature production, will tell of the product for the new season.

Between 400 and 500 production and sales representatives will attend the three conventions, while the foreign delegation, which begins to arrive in New York this week, will represent more than fifty countries.

Home office executives who will attend the conventions are Sidney R. Kent, Eugene J. Zukor, Sam Katz, Jesse L. Lasky, Walter Wanger, B. P. Schulberg, Owen Davis, Emanuel Cohen, George W. Weeks, Emil E. Shauer, John D. Clark, Phil Reisman, George Schaefer, M. H. Lewis, Mel Shauer, George M. Spidell, G. B. J. Frawley, Charles E. McCarthy, Russell Holman, A. O. Dillenbeck, Leon Bamberger, Dr. Emanuel Stern, Sam Dembow, James A. Clark, Monte Katterjohn, Henry Salsbury, Randolph Rogers, John Butler, E. Gelsey, John J. Gain, L. Sarecky, Louis Swarts, Stanley Waite, Miles F. Gibbons, Joseph H. Seidelman, O. R. Geyer.

From the foreign field will come John Cecil Graham, I. Blumenthal, John W. Hicks, Jr., O. V. Traggardh, Montague Goldman, Fred Martin, Earl St. John, Ben Simmons, J. Hamson, Herman Lorber, Adolphe Osso, Carl P. York, Albert Deane, John L. Day, W. C. Winship, R. A. Loomis, C. C. Margon, Harry Novak, Tom D. Cochrane, Clarence C. Margon.

Members of the field force attending the three conventions follow:

Sunday Show Ordinance Introduced in Nashville

SUNDAY motion picture shows in Tennessee are sought in a bill introduced in the House of Representatives, Nashville, Tennn., April 6th, by the Shelby County delegation.

Unlike the act passed in 1923 and vetoed by Governor Austin Peary, the present bill applies not only to Memphis, which is located in Shelby County, but to the entire State of Tennessee. The bill would repeal the act of 1923, which prohibited Sunday showings anywhere in the State.

In the 1925 General Assembly the Shelby delegation succeeded in passing an act that gave Memphis alone the right to have Sunday showings.

Hartford Resigns; Production Not Affected

THE reported resignation of David M. Hartford as director general of David M. Hartford Productions, Inc., has been confirmed by A. J. Moeller, president of American Cinema Association, for whom the Hartford unit produces. Mr. Moeller declared that Mr. Hartford's move will in no way affect the production program of A.C.A.

The Hartford producing organization has purchased thirty stories, eighteen of which will be produced for the coming season.

Several Theatre Projects in New England

Six new theatre construction projects were launched this week in New England. P. and D. Theatres, Inc., have awarded contracts to Ralph W. Perkins for the erection of a 2,300-seat house at Washington and Dodge Streets in Salem, Mass. James H. Bickford and Sons have been commissioned to prepare plans for the structure which will be typically colonial in architecture. It is planned to have the theatre ready by November 1.

The razing of a building on Moody Street, Waltham, Mass., for the site of a 2,200-seat theatre which the Moody Theatre Trust will build, has been started. David Weinstock is having plans drawn by Edward T. Wiley for a 1,100-seat theatre in Hartford for which G. Cudemo has the general contract. The house will be ready for opening on November 1.

The Blanchard Brothers at Southbridge, Mass., have let contracts for the reconstruction of the Blanchard Theatre, recently destroyed by fire. The house will be ready by Thanksgiving and will be 100 by 70 feet. J. E. Kelley, architect, has let contracts for the Park Theatre for J. J. Donovan at Taunton. This theatre will seat about 1,800. Bids were closed this week for a Philbin Bros. theatre to be built in Chicopee, Mass. The Philbin Bros. who closed their theatre in Clinton some months ago, are now remodeling the structure into an apartment house.

Riesenfeld to Direct Colony Sept. 1

Laemmle Announces Signing This Week; Films to Dominate

Hugo Riesenfeld

DR. HUGO RIESENFELD, one of Broadway's pioneers in the presentation and musical settings of motion pictures, has been signed to become managing director of the Colony Theatre in New York on September 1, when Universal takes the house over as a presentation theatre, it was announced this week by Carl Laemmle upon his arrival in the East. The Universal president paid high tribute to the reputation and ability of Dr. Riesenfeld, and said that he was confident he would make the Colony one of the most popular houses on Broadway.

Dr. Riesenfeld, in a subsequent interview, indicated the policy he would follow, pointing out his determination to base his entire presentation upon the picture itself.

"The picture shall be first, last and all the time," he said. "In presentations, everything else will be only a temporary means of catching the eye or the attention of the audience, of getting them into the theatre, and of supplying a musical and colorful or emotional frame for the motion picture itself.

"For instance, I don't want to give opera in the Colony unless it lends itself to the feature picture of the moment. A picture should be surrounded only by what it can stand.

"I will have an exceptional orchestra—not the biggest on Broadway, but, I hope, the best. The music will appeal to popular taste. It will not be highbrow. I shall devote a great deal of time to the discovery of novelties, both in pictures and in presentation. I am going to pay great attention to short subjects. Their presentation will be handled with the same care as features. In brief, I mean to make the Colony Theatre a mecca for those New Yorkers who want to see excellent pictures presented under the most favorable conditions."

Over Two-Hundred Short Features from Paramount During the Coming Year

THE short subjects department of Paramount will have a releasing schedule of 208 short features during the ensuing season, according to Emanuel Cohen, director of Paramount short feature production, who promises an announcement of the complete Paramount group of shorts within a few weeks.

Besides the bi-weekly issues of the Paramount newsreel, the list of short subjects will include 26 Krazy Kat cartoons from Winkler Pictures, Inc., and 26 Out of the Inkwell cartoons to be made by Out of the Inkwell Films, Inc. Five novelties and five short comedies and comedy dramas will also be produced by the Winkler Company for distribution through Paramount.

De Forest Plans Campaign

Prospect of Sharp Competition Looms, With Vitaphone, Movietone, Photophone and New Foreign Devices

LEE DE FOREST, inventor of the Phonofilm, returned from Europe this week, where he has been recording subjects in England, France and Spain, with the announcement that he would inaugurate an intensive drive shortly to bring Phonofilm into wide use in competition with Vitaphone.

Prospects of a legal battle also appeared when he referred to his patent suit against Fox-Case. Should this succeed he expects to proceed against other companies operating on the principle of photographing the sound record on the edge of the film. Vitaphone continues to strain every resource in making installations keep pace with the demand, and a pool of five companies is still negotiating for the Photophone, in which the General Electric, the Radio Corporation of America and Westinghouse are interested. Fox-Case is proceeding rapidly with recording and the signing of talent, Ben Bernie being the latest "name" mentioned in this connection.

Barney Balaban, a director of First National, stated this week that talking films would come up for discussion at the annual meeting next week in Atlantic City. A low priced installation, within reach of small theatres, is ready, he said. This is presumably Photophone.

To these prospects of a talking picture war is added the announcement that a German device will shortly be placed on the market here. No details are forthcoming. Two such apparatuses are now being shown in Germany, one of them, the Tri-Ergon, being a Ufa project.

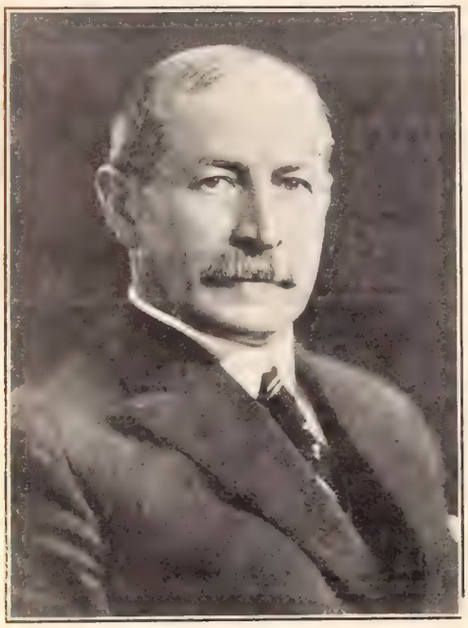
Experiments in this direction by two Italian engineers, Lamberto Pineschi and Arturo Quintiliani, are reported by Consul H. D. Finley at Naples to the Department of Commerce. It has been demonstrated in Paris before the Sorbonne, and before the noted physicist, Branley.

Lesser Theatres Group Busy

Plan Chain of A Hundred California Houses; Levy Curtails Louisville Interests; Switows Plan Fifty

SOL LESSER, Colonel Fred Levy and Mike Rosenberg, operating under the Principal Pictures Corporation, which Lesser headed for many years, plan a circuit of about one hundred theatres in California in addition to their producing activities through Master Pictures Corporation. There are already about twelve houses in the chain, which has been active since Mr. Lesser's return from Europe.

Principal Pictures will carry on a survey of the small towns of California and will acquire or build in those towns which haven't "adequate facilities." In the event of the materialization of the program outlined the Lesser's group of houses will be the chief rival of West Coast Theatres of which Lesser a short time was a chief figure.



Fifty theatres in 1928 is the goal set by M. Switow & Sons Enterprises, Louisville, formed following purchase of the interests of Col. Fred Levy and Lee Goldberg in Louisville, Lexington and Danville.

The purchase brought the total in the chain to 25, and steady acquisition of houses in Kentucky and Indiana will double the number during the year.

The deal with Levy and Goldberg involved the Kentucky here, the Kentucky and Ada Meade, Lexington, and the new Kentucky, Danville. It in no way affects the partners' interests in the Strand Amusement Co., which operates a chain in Kentucky and Indiana.

Eisele's Death Mourned in Business World

William Fox Pays Tribute to Departed Company Treasurer; Had Many Important Interests

John C. Eisele

WILLIAM FOX paid high tribute to John Eisele, deceased treasurer of the Fox Film Company, in a statement issued this week, which read, "John Eisele was a lifelong friend and business associate and his untimely death is a great shock to me, as it must be to his legion of friends. Death has never called a kindlier man or a truer friend, and no one will ever quite fill his place."

Mr. Eisele died suddenly Thursday morning, April 7th, from an attack of acute indigestion. He complained of not feeling well last month after returning from a survey of Fox production activities but, after receiving medical care, he was apparently fully restored to health, and attended his many business interests. Mr. Eisele had just finished presiding over a meeting of the Washington Trust Company executive committee in the company's Newark, N.J., offices when he was stricken.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Anna E. Eisele, and four sons, all of whom were associated with their father in the firm of Eisele & King. The family home is at 591 Clifton Avenue, Newark. Mr. Eisele was 67 years old.

Mr. Eisele was born in Newark and started his business career at the age of fourteen as assistant to a silversmith. In 1894 he and Nathaniel King formed a partnership as representatives of the Equitable Life Insurance Company. This agency soon developed into the largest in the country, and it was here that Mr. Eisele laid the foundation of his fortune. Later Eisele & King became a brokerage firm, and the insurance business was carried on by H. W. Maull & Co., in which the original partners retained a two-thirds interest.

On February 6, 1915, Mr. Eisele took the post of director and treasurer of Fox Film Corporation. With William Fox he had a large share in formulating the financial policy that developed the corporation into its present position in the motion picture industry. He was also much interested in production activities.

Mr. Eisele owned many choice corners of property in lower New York and in Newark. Many times he made use of his knowledge of real estate for Fox Films. He purchased the new Fox Hills studio in Westwood, Cal., the largest motion picture studio on the West Coast. It covers an area of 140 acres.

At the time of his death Mr. Eisele was a director of the Fidelity Union Trust Company, the West Side Trust Company and the Security Savings Bank; president of the Lincoln Building and Loan Association and the Norfolk Building and Loan Association, all of Newark, and director of the Public National Bank of New York.

War on Theatre Lotteries

Theatre Practice of Prizes for Lucky Seat Holders or Drawings Condemned in Massachusetts

THE lid has been clamped down on theatre lotteries which have been running rampant in a large number of the motion picture houses in New England during recent months.

Starting with an edict against all lotteries in motion picture theatres by Superintendent Michael J. Crowley of the Boston Police, Attorney General Arthur K. Reading has issued a similar edict but much broader in scope, taking in lotteries of every kind. As a result of the attorney general's action, two large carnivals scheduled for next week have been called off.

It has been the practice of many theatres, to stimulate patronage, to give away articles of various values, from victrolas to automobiles to lucky seat holders or in drawings made with more or less regularity. The Attorney General has notified police heads throughout the state that such lotteries are prohibited, no matter in what form they are operated, and he has ordered the prizes thus offered to be seized and confiscated. While no such drastic action has been taken during the two or three days since the edict was issued, police chiefs have issued warnings and all lotteries have been ordered brought to an immediate close. The edict extends to church fairs as well as other forms.

Brooklyn Broadvue Plans Spring Building

The Brooklyn Broadvue Company, Cleveland, Ohio, which has just completed the Broadvue Theatre announces a building program for the spring which surpases all other programs announced. On Lake Shore Boulevard at Huntmere Road work has already been started on a building which will house a 1500-seat motion picture theatre, seven stores on the ground floor, and seven suites on the second floor. The building is to be completed by Labor Day. The Union Square Theatre, at Union Avenue and East 114th Street, seating 1,700 will be completed no later than April. Plans have been made and a contract let for a 2,000-seat house on Lorain Avenue and West 118th Street. This will be a two-story structure with stores and suites. Also, the Shaw-Hayden Theatre, recently purchased by the company is to be entirely remodeled and rebuilt so as to double the present seating capacity of 900. Room will be made for a balcony and the entire auditorium floor space will be altered, the walls alone to remain unchanged. Nocola Petti who has been successful in planning the majority of the recent local picture houses, is planning the alterations at the Shaw Hayden. Not content with these houses which are actually in process of construction, Meyer Fine, heading the Brooklyn-Broadvue Company says that a surprise announcement will soon be made about a new 3000-seat house.

Will Feel Harrisburg on Daylight Saving Question

With six committees appointed from the membership of the various business men's luncheon club of Harrisburg, Penn., to canvass the sentiment of the city on the question of whether daylight saving should be restored to Harrisburg this year, the theatre interests are vitally interested in the outcome of the probe. The ordinance has had a lapse of one season but the Lions Club, which is sponsoring the movement, proposes putting daylight saving in force from April 24 to September 25. The theatres, as a whole, are opposed to the proposition.

The city of Duluth decisively defeated a daylight saving ordinance at its municipal election, held this week. The ordinance provided for setting clocks ahead one hour during the summer.

Loew's, Inc., to Lease New Louisville House

Louisville is to have another modern new theatre, a $1,500,000 house, to be built on part of the old St. Joseph's Infirmary property. Work on the new theatre will start within thirty days. It is to be leased by Loew's, Inc., of New York. The plans call for one of the largest and finest theatres in the South, to be of the de luxe type, with a seating capacity of more than 3,500.

Minneapolis Theatre Co. Erecting $2,000,000 House

The Minneapolis Theatre Co., which is building the $2,000,000 Minneapolis theatre at La Salle Avenue and Ninth Street, Minneapolis, took out a permit this week for the foundations for the structure. The cost of the work is set at $40,000, and is scheduled for completion on June 1.

Roxy to Address M. P. T. O. Convention

Woodhull Announces Proposed Amendments Regarding Elections

S. L. Rothafel

IN line with his policy of a constructive business program for the M.P.T.O.A. national convention at Columbus, June 7th, 8th and 9th, President R. F. Woodhull this week announced that S. L. Rothafel (Roxy) would be present and address the delegates.

He is the first of the experts to be chosen to lead discussions at the convention on business topics. Roxy's subject will be "Showmanship," in which he is, by universal agreement, a master. Roxy will also speak at the convention banquet, and will be the guest of the organization during his stay in Columbus.

As the managing director of the world's biggest theatre, Roxy will bring to the exhibitors a vital message on showmanship, Mr. Woodhull pointed out.

Mr. Woodhull also announced that an amendment has been regularly proposed to the constitution which changes the procedure associated with the election of the board of directors. There are thirty members to be elected and the proposed amendment provides that at the convention in Columbus ten of these are to be elected for a period of three years, ten additional directors for a period of two years and ten additional directors for a period of one year and that at each succeeding national convention ten directors are to be elected for a period of three years.

Another amendment proposed which Mr. Woodhull announced is that an amendment may be made to the constitution at any convention and proposed from the floor of the convention to be referred to the committee on amendments if a two-thirds vote is obtained in favor of the the same providing that such amendment be proposed at least one day previous to the final vote being taken upon the same.

Laemmle, in East, Shows Strong Enthusiasm

CARL LAEMMLE, president of Universal, who arrived in New York quietly several days ago in connection with the purchase of several circuits to be added to Universal Chain Theatres, expressed great enthusiasm this week over the special productions in work at Universal City for next season.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin," he predicted, would take its place in film history alongside of "The Birth of a Nation" as the epic of a period in American history. Final shots on this will be made before the end of this month, he said.

The Universal head also spoke with the utmost enthusiasm of "War Eagles," a picture dealing with the U. S. aviation service during the World War. This is now in the cutting stage, he said, and from present appearances promises to be outstanding among the several war pictures of the season's output.

Mr. Laemmle plans to return to the West Coast in a few days.

"Chang"

MAKING natives and wild beasts of the jungle play a dramatic story is the amazing achievement of Merian C. Cooper and Ernest Schoedsack.

The scenario was written in New York before these hardy adventurers stepped on a boat outbound for a remote corner of Siam. They had already shown in "Grass" that they could capture authentic screen records of the biggest of all struggles—man in combat with the primitive, but they were still to show that they could do this to the complete satisfaction of the box-office. Paramount believed they could—and put up cold cash to back the belief. The result eminently justifies the hazard.

So Cooper and Schoedsack took the script and went to Siam. There, through months of patient work and physical danger mutely revealed by the picture itself, they literally dramatized the jungle and brought back what is probably the most unique picture ever made.

There is tremendous appeal in the fight of the little native family against the jungle terrors, culminating in the massed attack of the elephants that smashes everything in sight. No staged thrill could ever bear so authentic a stamp of reality. It is one of the high moments of the screen.

But the adventurous producers have not forgotten that to be dramatic a picture must also be at moments comic. Here the near-human monkeys come into play. Or that it must have its tender interludes; so the child is snatched away just in time to escape the thundering stampede of the elephants. These are only instances—there are many others—of the perfection with which the job has been done.

"Chang" is a great picture, by all odds the finest of its type. It is an extraordinary combination of melodramatic thrill with the wild, almost deadly beauty of the primitive. In theme, it is vital and irresistible. And in action, it moves along with swing and tempo straight to its dramatic goal.

The accompanying music score, arranged by Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, is admirable and adds another to the long list of his successes.

At the Rivoli, New York, when the picture was privately shown this week, the screen suddenly enlarged, through the Magnascope process, at the climax of the massed attack. The effect is like opening a huge window on a new world. For the whole industry, this is what "Chang," the picture, itself does.—O. C.

Importance of New French Projector Is Discounted Here

FROM Paris comes the report this week that a new motion picture projector has been demonstrated which would reduce film footage by one-half. This machine, according to the reports, shows only seven images per second instead of the customary sixteen.

Judging from past developments in the field of continuous projection, it is evident that the new French machine is following these lines. The so-called continuous projectors dispense with intermittent movement, and mirror and lens systems bring about the substitution of each succeeding image.

Continuous projectors have been built in this country and have also been introduced from abroad. Some of these have already shown good projection results at speeds as slow as four or five images a second. The complexity of these machines and the fact that there is no particular demand for projecting pictures at slower than normal speeds are assigned as causes for failure to adopt them for general use here.

The claim advanced for this new French machine—that it will reduce projection speed and thus cut down film footage—is of questionable merit, as sixteen or more images must be viewed per second to get the illusion of the smooth motion of objects at normal speed—P.M.A.

Salesmen Dine Managers

First Attempt of N. Y. Salesmen and Film Board to "Get-To-Gether" Promises Well

THE first "Get-To-Gether" luncheon of The Motion Picture Salesmen, Inc., and members of the New York Film Board of Trade was held on Saturday afternoon, April 9th at the Hotel Astor. The meeting was largely attended and is said to be the first attempt of its kind in this city to bring about a better understanding between men of both organizations.

Representatives of both organizations agreed that better relations would inevitably follow the suggested move to appoint committees from both bodies to sit in on future salesmen and board meetings.

Among the speakers of the day were Felix Feist, manager of distribution for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; G. W. Wolf, president of M. P. Salesmen, Inc.; Charles Rosenzweig, exchange manager in New York for F.B.O. and president of the Film Board of Trade; Louis Phillips, secretary of the F.B. of T.; and William K. Howard, former film salesman and now director with Cecil B. De Mille. Arthur James acted as toastmaster and in addition to introducing the several speakers also read a letter from Will Hays.

Mr. Feist named the three requisites of a successful salesman from his point of view: Good Health; Knowledge of Product; and Sincere Enthusiasm. He also dwelt on the importance of honesty and tact, illustrating the latter characteristic with a fitting story.

The Will Hays letter commended an occasion which would tend to cultivate a better relationship between salesmen, exhibitors and the film boards of trade. It stressed the importance of salesmen in the industry and their ability to sell film—and to sell it in a way which would reduce controversies to a minimum. The letter further stated: "We do not consider that 'honesty' should be practiced solely or chiefly because it is 'the best policy.' That would be putting a glorious precept upon a low plane. But it is the best policy all the same. I would translate preachment into practice, theory into application even to the point of fetching ideals down to 'brass tacks.'"

Charles Rosensweig then paid tribute to G. W. Wolf, whose efforts were largely responsible for bringing about the "Get-To-Gether" movement. He seconded the motion that committees be appointed by both organizations to sit in at their respective meetings and also spoke of the relationship between sales manager and salesman—adding: "No contract was ever turned down because it was too good."

Louis Phillips further seconded the move of appointing committees from both organizations to better observe the working of each, further stating that there was no room in the industry for dishonest dealings and that those who attained success through those methods, paid a high price.

Toastmaster James then introduced William K. Howard, director with Producers Distributing Corp., whose picture "White Gold" goes into the Roxy this week. Mr. Howard was on familiar ground, having at one time worked as a salesman out of a Minneapolis exchange. He spoke of the difficulties encountered by salesmen of the Northwest, such as ploughing through snowdrifts, mud and other unpleasant obstacles during his calls in that territory. Mr. Howard told several good stories and also gave some interesting ratings of whom he considers the foremost directors.

Motion Picture Salesmen, Inc., who attended the luncheon included President J. W. Wolf, Vice-president Jack Ellis, Secretary Vice-president Matty Kahn, Treasurer Saul Trauner, Recording Secretary Morris H. Markowitz, Financial Secretary M. Rappaport, Historian J. W. Goldstein, Trustees Jack Dillon and Solomon Title, Sergeant-at-Arms Jules Jasper and his assistant Bernard Tlied.

Will Review Decision Affecting Theatre Co.

The question of a theatre's liability for injury to a patron through faulty equipment is to be decided by the United States Supreme Court, Washington, D. C., which on April 11 agreed to review the decision of the court below in the case of Marianita Truschel against the Rex Amusement Company of West Virginia.

The plaintiff was a patron of the defendant company at its Rex Theatre, and tripped over a loose stair carpet. She brought suit and was awarded damages of $18,000 in the lower court, which decision was upheld by the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.

The company sought a review of the case by the Supreme Court. Under the West Virginia law the company was not an insurer of the safety of persons visiting its theatre and proof of knowledge, actual or imputed, of the alleged defective condition was declared essential to recovery, which the company contended, was not submitted. The lower court, the Supreme Court was told, had excluded testimony which it was declared would have shown that the company had no knowledge of the defective condition of the carpet.

Pioneer Albany Exhibitor Dead After Month's Illness

Emil Deiches, one time manager of no less than thirty-six amusement places in and around Albany, N. Y., died at his home in that city last Sunday night after a month's illness. Mr. Deiches was very well known throughout the state and particularly in New York City. He had the distinction of being the first of Albany's theatre managers to offer continuous vaudeville, and was also one of the first to operate a motion picture theatre in that city. He was at one time president of the New York State Vaudeville Managers Association. A wife and son survive. Interment was made in Albany.

Association T.O. Indiana Replaces M.P.T.O.

A NEW organization, the Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana, has come into existence in Indianapolis superseding the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Indiana, organized ten years ago. Charles Metzger, owner of three small Indianapolis houses, is president of the association and he explains that the new organization was incorporated to allow for the expansion of the organization so that all theatres in Indiana, whether devoted to films, vaudeville, burlesque or legitimate, are eligible to membership in the Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana.

C. B. Trotters, secretary-manager of the former M.P.T.O., was retained as manager. Other officers are A. C. Zaring vice-president; John Marks, treasurer and Helen Brown, secretary. Headquarters are now located in the Chamber of Commerce Building.

Frank Rembusch, who headed the old M.P.T.O. for two years, has been named delegate at large to the national convention of the M.P.T.O.A. to be held in June at Columbus, O.

In And Out of Town

MOE ALTMAN, purchasing agent for the Fox Film Eastern studio, and his brother, Theodore Altman, art collector for the Fox Film studio, left New York this week for California and the Fox studio on the West Coast, where they will continue in their respective spheres.

LOU REMY, district manager for Fox Films in the Southwest, is in New York for a few days. Most of his time will be spent at the home office conferring with James R. Grainger, Fox Films general sales manager.

WALTER F. FUTTER, producer of Curiosities, an Educational release, is leaving shortly for the West Coast where he will make a survey of the short subject situation. He will also visit the Middle-West for this purpose and then attend the Educational convention in May in Los Angeles.

C. C. MOSKOWITZ, assistant to N. M. Schenck, has returned from a two months' sojourn in Europe on the "Mauretania." During his tour Mr. Moskowitz looked over the Loew properties in France, England and Germany. He brings home with him a report on conditions abroad.

STANLEY HATCH, Western sales manager for First National, left Monday of this week for a swing around the Western circuit to meet all of the exchange men in his territory. He will be absent for about twenty-six days. During that time he will visit twelve exchanges, traveling more than 8,000 miles.

PAUL LAZARUS, general sales manager for United Artists in the South and West, left New York Wednesday, April 6, for a trip of three weeks in the Southern territory. He will spend most of his time in Dallas and Atlanta.

A. W. SMITH, JR., Eastern and Canadian sales manager for First National, left on Sunday for a brief trip to Toronto and Montreal. In Toronto he will confer on sales matters for the spring and early summer product with Lester Bell, general manager of First National's Canadian office.

MORRIS SAFIER, head of the extended runs of Warner Bros., is back at the home office from a three weeks' tour of key cities throughout the Middle-West in the interest of two of the Warner specials.

W. E. CALLAWAY, Southern sales manager for First National, is in New Orleans negotiating with the Saenger Circuit for First National's special productions. Mr. Callaway will bring his family and his household goods to New York with him on returning to the home office.

Two Films Planned for Mackaill-Mulhall Team

First National will produce two productions co-starring Dorothy Mackaill and Jack Mulhall. The first will be "The Road to Romance," which will get under way next week as a Charles R. Rogers production. Ben Taylor is doing the continuity from an original screen story by Al Rosenberg. The second film will be a picturization of "The Crystal Cup," a Gertrude Atherton novel, which Ray Rockett will produce.

Virginia Lee Corbin Gets First National Contract

Virginia Lee Corbin, until recently known as a child actress, has been signed by John McCormick, general manager of West Coast production for First National, to a long-term contract.

De Mille Announces Additions to Studio Staff; Brother Assoc. Producer

A. G. Volck

CECIL B. DE MILLE this week announced the appointment of A. George Volck, former production manager for De Mille, to the position of assistant general manager of the De Mille studio, as a preliminary step in the increased production schedule for the 1927-28 season. Further additions to the executive staff of the studio include Walter Woods and William C. De Mille, Woods as a supervisor and De Mille associate producer.

Mr. Volck has been in the film business since 1922, holding executive positions with Selznick, Robertson-Cole and Thomas H. Ince, from whence he came to the De Mille studio as production manager. Mr. Woods has supervised a number of Paramount's big productions and C. De Mille comes from the directorial field having directed a total of forty-five pictures; he is also known as a successful playwright.

Next year's program of releases for Producers Distributing Corporation is now being arranged and, while the total production expenditure has not as yet been announced it is expected that it will considerably exceed that of last year. The De Mille-Metropolitan Stock Company will be enlarged and used as a training school for "new faces."

Universal Sales Forces Convention in Chicago

Executives and Field Force to Hold Sessions at Drake Hotel, May First to Fourth

THE annual sales convention of the Laemmle organization is to be held this year at the Drake Hotel in Chicago on May 1, 2, 3 and 4. Several times as many sales executives and salesmen as have been assembled by Universal in the past will rally at the meet at which will be discussed Universal's new product. A number of features and short subjects will be exhibited to the sales force during the convention and a big banquet will be the culminating event. The announcement of the Chicago meeting is from Carl Laemmle, the Universal president, who has arrived from the Coast, accompanied by Lou B. Metzger, general sales manager of Universal. Some of Universal's product for the new season will be screened.

Mr. Metzger will direct the convention and he will have as assistants Universal Sales Directors H. M. Herbel and Earl Kramer. Officials and executives from the Universal home office who will be present are: R. H. Cochrane, P. D. Cochrane, E. H. Goldstein, Julius Stern, Paul Gulick, Robert E. Walsh, Nat Rothstein, Hal E. Hodes, Sidney Singerman, Dave Bader, E. D. Leishman, Ben H. Grimm and others.

In addition to the branch managers, exchange heads and exploitation men, all of the Universal exchanges will be represented by several salesmen. They will win the privilege of participating in the sales discussions by their sales percentages during the next few weeks.

Paramount Plans New Screen Material

STATING that all previous methods of developing new faces for the screen will be abandoned, Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president in charge of production of Paramount, announces the intention of his company of concentrating on the developing of the best prospective junior stars within the organization. In April of each year from four to six of these younger players will be chosen, the selections to follow after a close study of the junior stars who have given distinguished performances during the previous year. They will be awarded special contracts and the benefit of the experience of older stars and directors will be placed at their disposal. The selection of the new junior stars will be announced within a few days.

Robt. G. Larsen and Mother Dead Within Week

Just a week from the time of death of Robert G. Larsen, manager of the Keith-Albee interests in Boston and vicinity, came the death of his 90-year-old mother, Mrs. Sarah J. Larsen, at her home, 91 Waldeck Street, Boston. Mrs. Larsen was stricken the day following the death of her son, the shock of which is believed to have caused the stroke.

The body of Robert G. Larsen was brought to Boston following his sudden death in New York, and services were held in St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Brookline.

Burial was in the family tomb at Forest Hills Cemetery.

Arkansas Exhibitors Meet

Discuss Problems in Two Day Session at Little Rock; Memphis Branch Managers Present

THE music tax was probably the most important topic discussed at the Arkansas Motion Picture Theatre Owners convention which was held April 2nd and 3rd at Little Rock. Much of one day's sessions were devoted to discussion of the tax several members reporting they had information that a contract by which the Arkansas exhibitor pays five cents tax per seat annually may be abrogated by the composers' association. They had been advised, they said, that the maximum, ten cents a seat, would be charged.

As the contract was drawn in 1925 for one year's duration, the association could decline to observe it further, but the organization has permitted its provisions to govern the amount paid by the Arkansas theatres since that time. Officers said that they would investigate the reported dissatisfaction of the composers' association with the contract and seek to remedy conditions responsible.

Addresses on problems confronting the exhibitor were made by Claude McKean, president of the Memphis-Little Rock Board of Trade, O. O. Flake, of F.B.O. talked on relations between salesman and exhibitors. Seven delegates to the annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association of America were elected. They are: E. H. Butler of Russellville, W. M. Reaves of Little Rock, J. F. Norman of England, W. L. Landers of Batesville, M. A. Lightman of El Dorado, H. D. Wharton of Warren and President Cupp.

Present officers will continue to serve until the annual election at the semiannual meeting here in October. Besides President Cupp, they are: E. C. Robertson of Fayetteville, vice president, and Mr. Wharton, secretary-treasurer.

Problems affecting the film trade were discussed by exchange managers from Memphil and Little Rock at a meeting held at the Lafayette Hotel, Little Rock, during the convention. A luncheon was given at noon Monday, April 4, at the Lafayette Hotel.

During the course of the luncheon talks were made on fire prevention work that is carried on by the Film Board, the duties of the Executive Committee, cooperation among members; ideas were exchanged on "what makes the most successful salesman"; the functions of the Film Board of Trade and the Board of Arbitration; and the proper handling of contracts where a theatre changes ownership.

Fox Theatres Net $645,101

First Annual Report As of October 31, 1926; Earnings of Seventy-Two Cents a Share

A NET profit of $645,101 is shown in the first annual financial report of Fox Theatres Corporation as of October 31, 1926, after deduction of charges and Federal taxes. The net indicates earnings of seventy-two cents a share after all taxes, depreciation, etc., and a book value in excess of twenty-four dollars a share on the total of 900,000 shares of Class A and Class B stock outstanding.

The balance sheet of the corporation for this period shows the following:

Assets: Land, leaseholds, buildings, furniture, fixtures and equipment, less reserves, $1,627,318; cash, $547,728; call loans, $100,000; demand loans, $2,050,000; miscellaneous accounts receivable, $18,194; accrued interest on loans and notes receivable, $52,488; investments, $12,741,118; amount due in respect to stock of corporation held for employees, $702,681; deposits to secure leases, $202,000; organization expense, $222,254; theatre leases, including minority interest, $3,412,625; deferred charges, $133,417; showing a total of $21,809,823.

Liabilities: Class A stock, represented by 800,000 shares, no par value, $17,600,000; Class B stock represented by 100,000 shares, no par value, $2,200,000; Federal income taxes, estimated, $77,000; deposits by tenants, $4,772; notes payable $400,000; accounts payable and accrued expenses, $224,478; capital surplus arising from appraisal of land, $649,472; surplus, $654,101.

Plans of the corporation for a coast to coast chain are rapidly maturing, it is stated in a letter to stockholders accompanying the annual report. Douglas Tauszig, vice-president, notes that the company has opened the Savoy, Brooklyn, the new Academy of Music on 14th Street, and has acquired a controlling interest in the Roxy. Practically no earnings from these theatres are reflected in the first annual report. It is estimaed that net income of the Roxy will equal 2,500,000 per year, of which approximately $1,250,000 will accrue to Fox Theatres Corp.

The corporation will continue with the construction of the two additional Roxy theatres at Lexington Avenue and 58th Street, and at Broadway and 75th Street, New York.

In addition the new Newark, seating 5,000, is to be constructed in 1928, and the company further announces that it has acquired a site for the largest theatre in Pennsylvania, to be constructed on Market Street, Philadelphia.

Within the next few months a new theatre will be opened in Buffalo, in which the company will have one-half interest; and the Washington, D.C., theatre will be completed by September 1st.

The letter also states that the financing of the theatres in the business districts of Brooklyn, St. Louis and Detroit have been completed, and that each of these theatres, seating in the neighborhood of 5,000 persons, would be in operation early in 1928. The San Francisco, seating 5,000, is being erected for the Fox Theatres Corp. by the Bank of Italy.

Backing Child Health Day with Trailers

A MOTION picture trailer for the use of motion picture theatres wherever and whenever requested during the month of April is the Pathe educational department's contribution to the drive conducted by the American Child Health Association to center the attention of the nation on May 1st, the fourth anniversary of the Child Health Day and the day dedicated to healthy and happy childhood.

Contained in the trailer are the seal of the Association and the "child's bill of rights," written by Herbert Hoover, president of the Association.

Greta Nissen Signs Fox Films Contract

Greta Nissen

GRETA NISSEN, blonde Swedish actress, has signed a contract to appear in Fox Films pictures. The star's first picture will probably be under the direction of Howard Hawks. Charles Farrell, now playing the leading role in "Seventh Heaven," will play opposite Miss Nissen.

Florida, Publix' Jacksonville House, Opened

Publix' newest theatre in Florida, the $1,500,000 Florida in Jacksonville, was formally opened Friday night, April 8, amid an elaborate fanfare of speeches and special features. E. P. Owen, manager of the Jacksonville Chamber of Commerce, and Mayor John T. Alsop, Jr., made addresses of appreciation opening the ceremonies. The invitations included representative folk in Jacksonville and neighboring cities. The house has every modern innovation and convenience, coupled with artistic treatment suggesting old Spain.

Pending the recovery of Guy A. Kenimer, manager of the Florida, who is seriously ill with pneumonia, Frank Lloyd, manager of the Olympic at Miami, and his head usher, Dixon Williams, were assigned to the opening of the Florida.

T. O. C. C. Behind Arbitration, Says O'Reilly

Announcing that the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce is one hundred per cent behind arbitration, Charles L. O'Reilly, president, substantiated the statement which occured in the course of his address before the organization's meeting at the Hotel Astor recently, by referring to a resolution passed by the arbitration committee of the Chamber which authorized that that committee take out yearly membership in the American Arbitration Association. The resolution suggested that an arbitrator could render better service if he maintained such a contract; it was introduced by Sol Raives, chairman of the Arbitration committee of the chamber, and passed by that body at its meeting of March 29.

"Give and Take" Is Acquired by "U"

UNIVERSAL has purchased the screen rights to "Give and Take," the Aaron Hoffman stage success of 1923. The play was acquired from Hoffman's heirs, through William Grossman, Fred A. Bartman and Jane A. Frankel, his executors. Negotiations are said to have extended over a period of six months due to spirited bidding, Universal says. "Give and Take" will be produced as a screen comedy feature and will have popular stars in the leads.

Frazer on Way to N. Y. for Conferences

William R. Frazer, general manager of the Harold Lloyd Corporation, left this week for New York for a series of conferences with Paramount officials. He will attend Paramount conventions during his stay of one month in the East. He will also arrange for the release of the Hollywood productions starring Edward Everett Horton, two of which have been completed. Mr. Frazer is president of Hollywood Productions; as one of the directors of the American Green Grass Association he will help in the promotion of National Forest Week in the East.

Mrs. Frazer will accompany him.

Minnesota Body O'Kays Anti-Daylight Saving Bill

A bill, recently introduced into the Minnesota State Legislature to prohibit the installation of daylight saving systems anywhere in the State has been passed by the house and is now under consideration by the Senate. Exhibitors are expected to support the bill as daylight saving has proven a menace to their business. Duluth is the only city in the State which is considering the system at the present time and it is to come to a vote there early this month. It was soundly defeated when presented in Minneapolis.

Philly Arbitration Board Makes Large Award

The Philadelphia Board of Arbitration recently made the largest award since its inception by giving local exchanges a grand total of $2,592.50, representing contracts signed for by Mr. Coury, who was employed by the Panther Valley Amusement Company as manager of its theatres at Lansford. The award was to compel the company either to play the pictures called for in the contracts which were outstanding or to pay for them.

G. B. Theatres Files Corporation Papers in N.Y.

The G. B. Theatres Corp., controlled by Goldstein Brothers, has been authorized to engage in business in New York State through filing of corporation papers there. The company will maintain New York State headquarters at Utica in the State Theatre building. It is believed this move is a forerunner of the company adding more New York State theatres to its chain. Its main headquarters will be continued at Springfield, Mass.

Exchange Building in N. Y.

Eastman Price Slash May Result in Elimination of Foreign Stock; Rate Met by Some Distributors

AS the upshot of discussions held over a number of years it has been practically settled that New York City is to have a central exchange building which will be so constructed as to make film vaults absolutely fire-proof. The details rest in the hands of a committee functioning under the guidance of the Hays organization with Charles M. Steele, supervisor of exchanges for First National as chairman and J. S. McCloud, of M-G-M and C. C. Ryan of Warner Bros. as the remaining members.

Active in the plan to develop such a structure is understood to be Louis Hirshon of M. and L. Hess. He is reported to have assembled a plot on West 44th St. between 9th and 10th Avenues, and not far removed from the Fox and Paramount exchanges. It is his intention to erect on that site a 16-story building fireproof in construction and designed to meet the problems which enter the shipment of motion pictures.

The committee, however, is inclined to believe that a 10-story building on a plot 100 by 125 feet will be sufficient. This will provide area of 12,500 sq. ft. per floor.

It is reported that several exchanges have already signed leases. Those who are mentioned as having expressed a willingness to take space in the proposed building include Universal, M-G-M, Educational, P.D.C., F.B.O. and Pathe. The project hinges very largely around whatever considerations are forthcoming from the fire department. It was suggested at one time that exchanges be removed to Long Island City. The companies involved, however, hold this procedure to be out of keeping with their business needs.

Several of the future occupants of a building such as has been proposed are tied up by existing leases in 729 - 7th Avenue and 1600 Broadway. The agreements still have one, two and three years to run, but it is believed that, if the deal should go through, an effort will be made to make a settlement covering the unexpired terms.

Raw Film Imports Threaten

Plans Practically Settled for Structure to House Shipping Departments of All Companies

OWING to the reduction in the price of raw stock by the Eastman Kodak Company, effective Tuesday, April 12, it is believed by raw stock distributors that importation will practically be killed; this because of the fact that the duty on raw stock is forty cents per hundred feet, which will force foreign distributors price down to eighty-five cents per hundred if they meet the Eastman price.

Under the new schedule, the Eastman Company is reducing positive stock from one and one-half cents per foot to one and one-quarter cents, and the news stock from one and three-tenth cents per foot to one-tenth. Eastman has not reduced the price for the Canadian market, and it is probable that the price for the export foreign market will remain unchanged.

Statements from executives of the competitive companies show a disposition in some instances to meet the Eastman price.

Du Pont-Pathe is meeting the price reduction, and Ansco states that they expect to meet it also.

Alfred Weiss, president of Agfa, could not be reached for a statement, as he is now at the Coast. On behalf of Bay State Film, Ross Coram stated that his company was holding the prevailing opinion among all these concerns seemed to be that unless foreign offices have a large amount of raw stock on hand, the Eastman price cut will result in practical elimination of all importation.

Fred Schader, veteran film newspaperman, who goes to the Coast as publicity chief of West Coast Theatres, Inc.

Canada's Studio at Ottawa to be Self-Supporting

During the next twelve months the Canadian Government's motion picture studio at Ottawa will be self-supporting because of the increased revenue to be received from a number of contracts for Canadian Government pictures recently secured in Hollywood and Chicago by Raymond S. Peck, director of the Ottawa laboratory. This announcement was made in the House of Commons, Ottawa, by Honorable James Malcolm, minister of trade and commerce. The Canadian studio is operated along the lines of a private producing company.

At a recent public meeting held in Ottawa, Director Peck declared that the total outlay for the Canadian Government studio during the past fiscal year was approximately $55,000.

First Nat'l Releasing Five During Month of May

FIVE features are listed on First National's releasing schedule for the month of May. Heading the list is "The Tender Hour," set for May 1; then follows "All Aboard" on May 8th. "Broadway Nights" will be nationally released on May 15th. On May 22nd "Babe Comes Home" will be issued. The fifth and last release for May will be "The Sunset Derby," scheduled for the 29th of the month.

R. N. Bradbury Supervisor F.B.O. Western Units

An increase in F.B.O. production of Westerns is promised in the announcement from Joseph P. Kennedy that within 90 days two new units will be added to this division. This statement followed closely the announcement of the appointment of Robert North Bradbury to the position of supervisor of Western units. Bradbury is both a writer and a director. Tom Tyler is being groomed, it is said, to fill the gap caused by Fred Thomson's departure to Paramount.

Gotham Adds More Material for Coming Line-Up

Gotham has secured the screening rights to "The Spider's Web" by Reginald Wright Kauffman and "The Head of the Family," by the late George Randolph Chester. These two novels in addition to the Gerald Beaumont stories acquired by Sax have been added to the forthcoming schedule. Negotiations for additional material are now in final stages. An announcement from Sax is due next week.

Liberty-Specialty Acquires New Columbia Franchise

The Liberty-Specialty Films Distributing Corporation, one of the strongest distributing organizations in the South, has entered into a contract with Columbia Pictures for the continued distribution of Columbia's production by Liberty-Specialty. The contract was signed by Joe Brandt, president of Columbia, and William Underwood, general manager of Liberty-Specialty.

Buster Keaton Production Christened "College"

The second production by Buster Keaton for United Artists' release has been titled "College." It is now in its third week of production under the direction of James W. Horne. The story is that of a youth who aspires to the heights of every form of undergraduate sport. Prominent in the cast are Ann Cornwall, Florence Turner and Snitz Edwards.

"Irish Hearts" Is May McAvoy's Next

May McAvoy's next stellar picture for Warner Brothers will be "Irish Hearts," a story by Melville Crosman adapted to the screen by Graham Baker. Byron Haskins will direct a cast which will include Walter Perry, William Demarest, Walter Rodger, Jason Robards, Warner Richmond and Kathleen Key.

Lena Malena and Victor Varconi

De Mille Signs Malena; Varconi Contract Renewed

The signing of new talent and the retention of old were two of the outstanding events at the De Mille studio during the past week. The new find is Lena Malena, a German importation, who has enlisted herself with the De Mille forces and the contract renewal was that of Victor Varconi, the Hungarian actor who will be featured in many De Mille pictures during the coming twelve months.

Miss Malena, part gypsy, graduated from the Berlin stage to the Ufa studio. About two weeks ago she left Germany to try her luck in Hollywood. Special stories are now being sought for her. Her first has not yet been named as some rearrangements of the present De Mille program are being made to permit an early start for her.

Lois Moran to Play in "The Irresistible Lover"

Lois Moran will co-star with Norman Kerry in "The Irresistible Lover," a Universal Jewel which William Beaudine will direct for next season's release. The story heretofore bore the title of "Too Many Women." An early production date has been set for "The Irresistible Lover," in which Miss Moran will make her first appearance in a Universal picture. Carl Laemmle, Jr., recently promoted to the position of a production supervisor at Universal City, will superintend the making of the picture.

Columbia's "Paying the Price" for April

Columbia's first release for April will be "Paying the Price," a melodrama in which are featured William Welch and Mary Carr, portrayers of father and mother roles respectively, George Fawcett, John Miljan, George Hackathorne, Eddie Phillips, William Eugene, Priscilla and Marjorie Bonner. David Selman directed.

Release Dates Advanced for 2 Fox Comedies

IN order that one of the Fox Films special comedy features would be available for first-run bookings for the Easter holiday season, James R. Grainger, general sales manager for Fox Films, announces this week that "The Cradle Snatchers" will be released on April 24th instead of later in the season. "Is Zat So?" another comedy based on a Broadway success, will be issued on May 8th.

Pathe News Featured in Three Broadway Plays

THREE reigning stage successes in New York employ Pathe News in one way or another in their action—"Spread Eagle," "Chicago" and "Honeymoon Lane." The latest of these to open is "Spread Eagle," the new Jed Harris production, in which a reel specially prepared by Editor Ray Hall of Pathe News, a news reel showing the first six weeks of a hypothetical war, is a vital link in the action, billed on the program as "Scene 4—A Broadway Motion Picture Theatre, Six Weeks Later."

In "Chicago" a Pathe News cameraman figures in the trial scene, while in "Honeymoon Lake" a sketch is played in which one of the comedians plays a cameraman known as "Mr. Pathe."

Fontaine Fox Character to Make Screen Debut

Mickey McGuire, one of the characters in the Toonerville Trolley cartoons of Fontaine Fox, will make his screen debut in the near future in Darmour Productions Corporation presentations which are to be released by Standard Cinema Corporation through F.B.O.

"What Price Dough" is the tenth of the fat-men comedies which Standard Cinema is producing. Production work has begun on the next comedy of the series, which has been tentatively titled "How High Is Up?"

Mary Duncan, Stage Star, Signed by Fox Films

Mary Duncan, now appearing in "The Shanghai Gesture" in Chicago, has been signed to a contract by Fox Films and will report for work at the Fox studio on June 1. No announcement has been made as to her first picture, but it is likely that she will be directed by Frank Borzage, who recommended her to Winfield R. Sheehan for a screen test. When the test revealed that Miss Duncan registered on the screen, she was persuaded by Mr. Sheehan to try out the movies.

Ingraham to Direct Last Fred Thomson for F.B.O.

Lloyd Ingraham will direct the final Fred Thomson starring production for F.B.O. prior to his assuming his new contract with another producing organization. The story is "Arizona Nights," and it is said to be entirely different from any previous Thomson film. Ingraham also directed "Silver Comes Through," now undergoing the cutting and titling processes.

Fay Wray in Jannings' "Hitting for Heaven"

Fay Wray, who has been working under Erich Von Stroheim's direction in "The Wedding March," has been selected by Paramount to portray the leading feminine role opposite Emil Jannings in the latter's next picture for Paramount, a story of London's Soho district which has been tentatively titled "Hitting for Heaven."

Columbia Has "New Faces" to be Developed

While during his brief stay in New York City, Harry Cohn, vice-president of Columbia Pictures, spent a considerable portion of his time to the testing of screen aspirants and the discovery of new faces. In response to his company's statement that new talent was wanted for the coming year about thirty applicants took screen tests and of this number only four proved successful. They are Bert Wheeler, comedian with "Rio Rita," Alexander Clark, Jr., in "Fog," and the McCarthy Sisters, appearing in "Scandals."

Mr. Cohn left for the Coast this week accompanied by his wife and Dorothy Howell, assistant production manager. He brought back with him several options the names of which he will announce later. If the players mentioned are placed under contract by Columbia, Mr. Wheeler will supply comedy relief and the other three will be featured in future Columbia productions.

Morris Gest Sails to Select His Cast

Morris Gest sailed for Europe on the S.S. "Homeric" on Friday night, April 8, to choose his international cast for "The Darling of the Gods," his first motion picture which United Artists will release. He will be gone until July. Mr. Gest goes to Dortmund, Germany. He will leave there accompanied by Max Reinhardt, for Venice where plans will be discussed with Otto Kahn. Mr. Gest will also visit Maxim Gorky and Gabriele d'Annunzio. Joseph M. Schenck will join Mr. Gest in Europe and together they will choose the principals for the first Gest picture. Production on "The Darling of the Gods" will probably begin in Hollywood in July.

Elect Officers of M.P.T.O. for Maryland

Officers for the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Maryland, Inc., for the ensuing year have been elected as follows:

Harman A. Blum, president; William M. Whitehurst, vice-president; Frank A. Hornig, treasurer; J. Louis Rome, counsel; William E. Stumpf, secretary. Those elected as directors are Frank A. Hornig, Walter D. Pacey, Harry Cluster, Louis Back, Louis Garman, A. W. Bauers, Havre De Grace and Phillip Miller, Annapolis, Md.

Warners Sign Clyde Cook to Long Term Contract

Clyde Cook, comedian, has signed a long-term contract with the Warner Bros. whereby he becomes a member of the Warner stock company. He is to support Louise Fazenda in "Simple Sis."

"King" Premiere April 19 at Gaiety, N. Y.

Preparations in Charge of Hugo Riesenfeld; Theatre Undergoing Remodeling Process

THE first presentation of Cecil B. De Mille's "The King of Kings" will take place the evening of Tuesday, April 19, at the Gaiety Theatre, New York City, which has been remodeled for the occasion. Preparations are under way to make this premiere one of the most important of recent years.

Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld is in supreme charge of the presentation and he is being assisted to the remodeling activities by John Wenger. A lower stage is in the process of construction for the thirty-six piece orchestra, and a number of novel effects, combining the work of projectionists, players and stage crew are in preparation. It is said that a chorus of forty voices will supplement the orchestra over which Dr. Riesenfeld will preside. Sets are being constructed and painted by Wenger. A massive electrical design which will cover practically the entire Broadway front of the building will be carried out by Norden. One of the features of the Gaiety showings will be the fifty-two large oil paintings which will stand in the entrance of the theatre. These paintings are enlargements thrown up and colored from still negatives; complete information concerning them will be embodied in a catalogue that is being prepared for the audiences.

Many of the distinguished men and women of the East will be present at the Gaiety on Tuesday evening. Representing the Pacific Coast will be a large party of Mr. De Mille, which arrived in New York last Sunday morning, April 17. A number of distinguished visitors from the West will be present also.

Included in the De Mille party are Mr. and Mrs. De Mille, Miss Cecilia De Mille, William Sistrom, general manager of the De Mille-Metropolitan studio; Jeanie Macpherson, Mrs. Claire O'Neill, Mrs. E. K. Adams, Anne Bauchens and A. B. Berwanger. Among those who have been interesting themselves in the invitation list of leading men and women of the country to be present at the premiere are Will Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors; Mark A. Luescher, head of Keith-Albee publicity; and John C. Flinn, vice-president and general manager of Producers Distributing Corporation.

A dress rehearsal prereview will be staged at the Gaiety on Monday evening, April 18.

M-G-M Studios Are Active

Now Producing Fourteen Pictures; Seven More to Start Shortly; Three Specials Well in Work

THE production mills of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios are grinding busily these days. The Culver City plant is now turning out fourteen productions and seven more, three of them specials, are scheduled to be launched shortly as part of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's production program.

These specials are films that will run from ten to twelve reels and they will receive special presentation as road shows or extended run attractions. Three of these, which are in the midst of production but upon which work must continue for many weeks before they reach the completed stage, are "The Trail of '98," "Old Heidelberg" and "The Crowd."

Feature pictures now in work are "The Wind," which Victor Seastrom is directing and "Quality Street," a Sir James Barrie stage play which Sidney Franklin is transplanting to the screen. Other pictures under way are "His Brother from Brazil," presenting a new comedy team, and "The Callahans and the Murphys," presenting an all-star cast.

Among the productions on which the cutters and titlers will be working soon are "Captain Salvation," "The Bugle Call," "Body and Soul," "California," "Rookies," "The Unknown" and "The Thirteenth Hour."

Forthcoming films which are to get under way in the near future are the specials, "Anna Karenina," "Twelve Miles Out" and "Spring Fever" and "The Frontiersman" and "Smarty." Another two which will enter production soon and which are now almost ready for screening are "The Enemy" and "Rose Marie." Both of the pictures will be filmed lavishly, it is said.

Dorothy Devore Signed by Educational

DOROTHY DEVORE, a featured star in two-reel Christie comedies up to three years ago, has been signed by Educational to star in Dorothy Devore Comedies, her own series of two-reelers for next season, which will be produced at the Educational studio.

Miss Devore played in Christies for about four years. During the last three years she has been taking featured roles.

"Beau Sabreur" Will Have Both Comedy and Romance

Paramount's "Beau Sabreur," P. C. Wren's sequel story to "Beau Geste," will be produced as a spectacle with a high-grade comedy plot coupled with romance as the central theme, this according to B. P. Schulberg, who announced the details of the production, which will be James Cruze's next special production. The script will be worked out by Tom J. Geraghty.

Edward Montagne and Charles Kenyon are collaborating on "Show Boat," "The Man Who Laughs" is being prepared by J. Grubb Alexander and Gladys Lehman is working on "Thanks for the Buggy Ride," an original story. "The Best Policy" and "Heaven Forbid," both Reginald Denny pictures, are now being whipped into shape, the former by Rex Taylor and the latter by Earle Snell. Other stories and scenarists are "The Stolen Lady," Custis Benton, "Too Many Women," Beatrice Van, "Betty's a Lady," Lee Jacobson, "We Americans," Alfred Cohn and "Let's Go Home" (tentative), John Clymer.

Two Tiffany Productions Are Completed

"The Enchanted Island" and "The Beauty Shoppers," two Tiffany productions, have been finished and are now in the final stages of editing and titling. They will be released this month. In the former picture are Henry B. Walthall, Charlotte Stevens, Pat Hartigan and Floyd Shackleford. In the latter feature Mae Busch, Ward Crane, Dale Fuller, Thomas Haines, Doris Hill, James Marcus and Cissy Fitzgerald are the players.

"U" Slates Four Farces for Denny Program

An original story by Peter Milne and Philip Hurn will be put into production by Universal as a next season Reginald Denny vehicle under the title of "Good Morning, Judge." Three other pictures on the list of forthcoming Denny releases are "Ask Me Another," "Out All Night," and "The Canvas Kisser."

Brief Reviews of Box Office Conditions at Leading Theatres About the Country

New York

BUSINESS last week on Broadway was nothing to grow excited about—a not unnatural condition in view of the season. The Roxy continued to pull strongly, however, going over the $100,000 mark on the second week of "Wolf's Clothing," not considered a strong draw. There are many speculations along Film Row these days as to what gross the house can maintain after the novelty has worn off and the theatre ceases to be an attraction in itself.

According to a statement issued by the theatre publicity department, $503,513 paid admissions had been registered up to and including Monday evening, April 4, with a total gross for the three weesk and three days of $430,950.79.

"Casey at the Bat" proved a timely draw at the Paramount, the house going over the $70,000 figure its grosses hover around.

The Strand suffered the worst drop. "See You in Jail" turning in a very poor week's receipts.

"Metropolis" at the Rialto did well, all things considered, and the six weeks' run will turn in a better figure than many of the dopesters estimated.

"Tell It to the Marines" at the Capitol proved a draw, and boosted receipts well above the previous seven days. It would have stood another week, in all probability, but previous bookings and the season made it unwise. The two-dollar pictures all slipped last week.

Los Angeles

BUSINESS was generally good throughout Los Angeles last week, although one or two slight disappointments were felt in the down town theatres. Reports of good and fair spotted the neighborhood houses; a falling off in receipts in some localities due to the Lenten season.

"What Price Glory," now in its twenty-first week at the Carthy Circle, continues to pull big business. "Old Ironsides," at Grauman's Egyptian, improved over last week, but is not playing to normal business. "The Beloved Rogue," at the Criterion, will close this week after a run of three weeks. The picture was a slight disappointment as it was hoped to carry along for a four weeks run at least.

"The Magic Garden" played to good crowds at the Figueroa Theatre. Deserving of special mention is the Fox travel picture, "Exploring the Amazon." The management reports it is receiving unusual praise from their patrons, and is being held over for a second week run along with the feature. The Amazon picture runs about 3500 feet and never lags a minute in audience interest.

"Getting Gertie's Garter" with Marie Prevost, clicked at the Metropolitan, while Sorrows of Satan at the Million Dollar did not come up to expectations. "The Yankee Clipper" closes this week after a three weeks run of satisfactory business.

Chicago

BUSINESS in Chicago for the week preceding Palm Sunday, was spotty, the smaller theatres apparently bearing the brunt of the Lenten depression.

In the loop the Chicago Theatre with "Knockout Riley" as the feature picture, and the inauguration of H. Leopold Spitalny's orchestral productions, which are now being given in addition to the usual stage show, did a big business.

At McVickers, "Children of Divorce," was in its second week and business was slightly off. The Oriental, whose box office reports probably fluctuate less than those of any theatre in Chicago, did its usual big business with "Afraid To Love" and Paul Ash and his merry and musical gang on the stage in "Hogan's Alley." At the Roosevelt, "Casey at the Bat," enjoyed a second big week; in fact business was so good that this feature will remain at this State Street house for four weeks instead of two or three as originally booked. "Old Ironsides" went into its second week at the Auditorium to good business. At the Monroe, "Whispering Sage" played to a business up to the usual Monroe average, and "White Flannels" and the Vitaphone turned in a fair box office report at the Orpheum.

The unusual spectacle of the same feature being played in three big de luxe northside theatres was presented by Norma Shearer in "The Demi Bride," which was the feature at Lubliner & Trinz Harding and Senate, in both of which, normal crowds were reported, and at Ascher's Sheridan, where it also played normal attendance.

Other theatres reporting fairly satisfactory business, considering the time of the year, were the Granada with "Love Makes 'Em Wild," as the feature picture, and the Uptown, with "Sorrows of Satan."

On the south side, Bennie Kreuger again proved his popularity at the Tivoli, where "The Telephone Girl" was the feature, business was good. The Capitol, with "Sorrows of Satan," as its picture, the Vitaphone, and on the stage, Del and the Capitol Merrymakers, was a little off in its box office report.

St. Louis

WEATHER conditions were not ideal for big business at St. Louis motion picture theatres during the week that ended on April 8.

The neighborhood houses' business continues off. It is possible that the passing of Lent will have a beneficial effect.

At the Missouri Theatre Gilda Gray in "Cabaret" was the chief screen attraction, while on the stage "The Night Club Revue" built around Sissle and Blake, stars of "Shuffle Along" was the big noise. This combination proved strong enough to do very nicely throughout the run.

Across the street at the Grand Central, Viola Dana, in "Home Struck" was the film offering. The passing of Gene Rodemich as leader of his Merry Maniacs apparently had some effect at the box office.

"Casey at the Bat," at the Ambassador Theatre knocked 'em dead in real big league style. It was noted that a very large percentage of the patrons at this big down town house during the week were of the masculine gender, indicating that Casey is a man's man.

John Gilbert in "The Show," was the feature picture at Loew's State, during the week.

Atlanta

LENT is doing its share towards turning the tide away from local box offices, and coupled with very changeable weather, the result last week was that all local houses suffered. The record-marker was "Children of Divorce" at the Howard. The picture clicked emphatically with audiences at the big Publix house, and business ascended correspondingly. Loew's Grand did good business with "The Taxi Dancer" and Keith's Georgia held its own with "The Auctioneer," both houses showing excellent vaudeville bills in conjunction. "The Red Mill" was disappointing from the box office angle at the Metropolitan, and the Rialto did fairly well on "Breed of the Sea" and the re-issued "Shoulder Arms," both liked. The semi-weekly change house, the Tudor, suffered a slump with "Thunder Mountain" and "Hidden Loot." The New Alamo did nicely on "Stolen Pleasures," two days, and very well indeed on "The Courage of Wolf Heart," played Saturday only.

Boston

PRE-EASTER business in both down town and outlaying theatres was below the average maintained for the rest of the Lenten season, but is slightly better than during the same period last year.

Michael Strogoff at Loew's State did a good week's business, supplemented by Duke Yelleman's WEAF orchestra and vaudeville.

Fashions for Women at the Metropolitan played to a little less than average, but part of this may be due to the fact that there were no large conventions in Boston during the week to bring out sight-seers and the Easter shopping season was hardly under way.

Children of Divorce played simultaneously at five theatres, Fenway, Central Square, Scollay Square Olympia, Capitol and Washington Street Olympia, to average houses.

What Price Glory enters its final week this week after a three month's run. Unlike its predecessors, it maintains attendance records and no free passes have been issued during its entire run.

"Too Many Crooks" at the Twin Houses, the Modern and Beacon, and a Tom Mix feature, "The Broncho Twister," were exceptions to the general rule with better than average receipts.

Both Keith's and Keith-Albee Boston Theatres played to good business, the latter continuing its recently adopted policy of a feature film with "The Mysterious Rider."

Loew's Orpheum with "The Fire Brigade," the Bowdoin Square with a special Spring Carnival program, the [illegible] with "McFadden's Flats" and "The Third Degree" and double feature bills at the Exeter and University report patronage well up to the average.

Cleveland

REMARKABLE business for the Lenten period, is universally reported at all of the local downtown theatres. While the general average of the houses is somewhat below normal, it is considerably above previous pre-Easter weeks. "Slide, Kelly Slide" held up right to the finish of its three weeks' engagement at the Stillman. "Orchids and Ermine," entirely surrounded by a jazz week program, did splendid business at the Allen. Thomas Meighan in "Blind Alleys" was well patronized at the State. The Palace did fairly well with "Butterflies in the Rain" featuring Laura LaPlante and a mediocre vaudeville bill. "Casey at the Bat" brought its continued run at the Cameo to a successful close. "It" did first-run business during its second-run engagement at the Park. "Bertha the Sewing Machine Girl," brought up to date, did fairly well at Keith's East 105th Street Theatre, but did very well downtown at Reade's Hippodrome where it was shown simultaneously. The Circle Theatre made a very good showing with "The First Night," in addition to Vitaphone specialty acts. Neighborhood houses reported business pretty good in some sections, but the majority of the suburban houses state that they are just about breaking even.

San Francisco

IN spite of the two days of storm, good business was done, by the first-run houses the last week in March.

"Casey at the Bat" continued to draw crowds for a third week at the St. Francis Theatre and the management was more than pleased with the results. "Getting Gertie's Garter" at the Granada proved very popular, together with Jack Partington's presentation act. "The Red Kimono," shown at the Cameo at popular prices proved to draw crowds. The second week of the "Flesh and The Devil," which was shown at Loew's Warfield Theatre, proved fairly popular, although the majority, it is thought came because of Fanchon & Marcos presentation, that always draw. "The Taxi Dancer" at the California Theatre, proved popular.

The Golden Gate Theatre celebrated its fifth anniversary and had special vaudeville and "Easy Pickings." The picture was fairly popular. "Hair Trigger Baxter" at the Union Square proved popular as did the comedy, "Blue Streak." "The Black Pirate," with Douglas Fairbanks was at the Rivoli Theatre and it is thought if it had not been shown here before, many more would have gone there.

The residence theatres did well. The Coliseum showing "The Canadian" and the Wigwam did especially well with "Riley's Night Out." Success there also is attributed to Russell's comic acts.

Minneapolis

THE past week proved another good one for Minneapolis picture theatres, with the weather remaining mild and conducive to theatre-going.

"The Night of Love" proved a box office smash. "Casey at the Bat," at the State Theatre, proved another strong attraction and business was exceedingly good. "The General," was the offering at the Garrick, and although the picture was not of the type generally shown at this house, it recorded very good business.

Other picture houses in the city, both loop and neighborhood, reported business as being from "fair" to "very good." There were a number of rather strong counter-attractions in the city, which probably cut into the movie business some.

Kansas City

A WEEK of sunshine brought out good attendances at virtually all Kansas City theatres again this week, following a week of rain and inclement weather. The line-up of pictures at most first run houses, too, was strong.

Lon Chaney in "Mr. Wu" at the Newman attracted good crowds all week, the Publix stage presentation, "Chinese Jade," serving as a timely prologue. At the Liberty, "Madame Wants No Children," played big to audiences which were composed largely of women, especially at matinees. Corinne Griffith in "Three Hours" at the Main Street played to a normal week's attendance, while the same can be said of "The Monkey Talks" at the Pantages Theatre and "The Shamrock Handicap" at the Globe Theatre.

Seattle

MODERATING weather and an increase in general retail business around the Northwest resulted in a stimulated motion picture business last week, and several houses in this city established new high marks for recent weeks.

At the Blue Mouse Theatre, Vitaphone and "Don Juan" played a second week to capacity business, with long waiting lines before the house every night, and at several daily matinees. It will continue indefinitely, according to announcements made recently.

At the Coliseum Theatre, Manager Al Raleigh cashed in on "Faust," putting it over with a fine newspaper campaign and an elaborate operatic prologue and musical score. The picture did a very fine business.

The Fifth Avenue Theatre did a very good business with "Slide, Kelly Slide" and an elaborate Chinese Fanchon Marco Revue. The picture was the drawing attraction—the act was highly exploited but failed to interest the audiences as much as was expected.

At the United Artists Theatre, "McFadden's Flats" ended its two-week engagement with a good click at the box office. Reports indicate that the picture did the largest gross at the house of any film that has played there since the opening, three months ago.

"Angles Preferred" at Pantages and "Love Makes 'Em Wild" at the Embassy were both average attractions.

Among the suburban houses, Hamrick's Egyptian Theatre continued to top the list. The attraction was "Flesh and the Devil" which did a fair week at the Fifth Avenue two months ago. Manager Carl Mahne offered as an added attraction the Blue Mouse Music Masters in concert, taking advantage of the Vitaphone engagement as the Blue Mouse Theatre. Mahne's Egyptian Seneraders, directed by Bill Winder, are playing concerts only at Hamrick's Uptown and Lakeside Theatres.

Ottawa

BALMY weather and religious observance tended to break up the patronage at theatres in Ottawa during the week of April 4, although several of the leading houses continued to draw big crowds. Even with the downtown theatres, the patronage was "spotty." From a Canadian viewpoint, "Tell It to the Marines" was surprisingly good and it satisfied all ages at the Regent Theatre. The opinion of patrons at B. F. Keith's Theatre where "he Cheerful Fraud," starring Reginald Denny, was shown, was rather divided. Some said it was Denny's best, while others thought that the plot was weak. The McTigue-Sharkey fight pictures helped to draw good crowds to Keith's. Attendance at the Centre was fair to good for "The Sea Tiger" while at the Imperial Theatre "The City" drew fairly well. The general interest in Lon Chaney in "Tell It to the Marines" was reflected at the Fern Theatre where good crowds saw him in "The Road to Mandaly," second run. The new stock company at the Capital Theatre has cut into the patronage of exclusive picture houses, largely because Ottawa has had mighty few stage attractions during the past year.

Theatres of Hull, on the Quebec side of the Ottawa River from Ottawa, were not very active centres because of Lent. Announcement was made that they would close altogether on Good Friday. During the week of April 3, the Laurier had fair patronage with three different features, "Three Bad Men"; "Kosher Kitty Kelly" and "Don Q, Son of Zorro." The Eden Theatre did fairly well with three attractions, "Sealed Lips," "The Boy Friend" and "30 Below Zero."

Exhibitors in Ottawa and Hull have made big preparations for Easter Week with special attractions.

Denver

APRIL 8th marked the close of an unusually poor week among Denver theatres from a business standpoint. Every day was warm and spring-like and the generally accepted reason for poor business is the fans are taking advantage of their first opportunity to spend their evening motoring in the mountains nearby. This condition is expected to exist for another week at least.

The America Theatre showing "Taxi, Taxi" reports business away off. The Victory Theatre with "Children of Divorce" also reported receipts away below standard. The Rialto with "Let It Rain" seems to be about the only house which is anywhere near satisfied with their week's business. The Aladdin out on east Colfax Avenue, with the Vitaphone and "Ankles Preferred" did a good business.

All suburban houses are complaining but are marking time until after Easter.

Des Moines

"THE Night of Love," playing at the Des Moines Theatre, did very nicely. "The Sea Tiger" evidenced that Milton Sills is a drawing card. The week at the Capitol went very nicely indeed. No doubt considerable of the success of the run was due to the fact that Dorothy Burke, a former Des Moines girl, was the star of the Publix Show, "Puppets," a gorgeous thing. "The Show" went very good at the Strand. It was scheduled for a half week. "Johnny Get Your Hair Cut" did fine for the rest of the week. It came just at the time when the youngster were all out for spring vacation and the grown-ups think it adorable, too cute, etc.

Baltimore

IT IS claimed that "Tell It to the Marines" went over great with the public during the second week of its engagement at Loew's Valencia, Baltimore, Md., beginning Monday, April 4.

It is unquestionably true that Chaney is a great drawing card in Baltimore.

In conjunction with the showing of "Fashions for Women," at Loew's Century, a fashion show tie up was arranged by the theatre and went over very fine.

"One Hour of Love," and five acts of vaudeville did excellent business at Keith's Hippodrome but at the opposition house, the Garden, "Down the Stretch" with five acts of vaudeville did not do so well. The shows were about evenly matched.

"White Flannels" played to pretty good business at Warners' Metropolitan with Vitaphone attractions and "Love's Greatest Mistake," went over good at the New Theatre. This might be attributed not only to the appearance of the story in Liberty but also to the fact that it was written by a Baltimore novelist and the scenario was done by a cousin of Albert C. Ritchie of Maryland.

Colleen Moore, as usual, went over very well at the Rivoli in "Orchids and Ermine."

New Orleans

THERE was a noticeable drop in attendance at the downtown theatres the past week. This is attributed to the coming of Holy Week.

The best picture business was recorded at Loew's State with "Slide, Kelly, Slide."

This city is all agog over the opening of the Southern League baseball season and incidental with the showing of this picture of the great national pastime was the appearance in the city of the St. Louis Browns, who also appear in "Slide, Kelly Slide," and other big league teams. The Loew State press agent took advantage of this situation and the result was that that theatre did the largest business of all, despite the drop. "The Show" at the Saenger drew good numbers of admirers of these stars.

"Hotel Imperial" with Pola Negri was the Strand attraction. Pola has been absent from New Orleans screens for some time, and the Strand attendance was up to expectations.

Bebe Daniels in "Stranded in Paris" drew a crowd of her fans all week at Saenger's Liberty, while at the Trianon "A Man of the Forest" also proved a drawing card. "Up Stage" did a fair business despite the fact that the picture had its local premiere at Loew's State. "McFadden's Flats" at the Crescent coupled with a musical comedy show did a good business. "Hold That Lion" was the Tudor attraction but business was not up to standard.

All local neighborhood houses report a falling off, due to Holy Week.

Milwaukee

"THE Crowds Pour In -And How!" says the Alhambra advertisement this week, which is literally true, for an unusually satisfactory attendance has prevailed during the showing of "Michael Strogoff" at that theatre. Crowds poured in too at the Wisconsin to see "Cabaret," for Gilda in Milwaukee has a large following of those who knew her when she lived there.

"It" upheld its popular appeal during the second week's showing at the Strand. "Ankles Preferred" at the Garden and "Altars of Desire" at the Merrill each drew a fair share of the downtown patronage during the week.

The big attraction downtown this week however, was "Beau Geste," shown at the Davidson. Twice daily it played to large houses.

Theatres in the outlying sections reported an unusually good week. "The Show" at the Milwaukee was most enthusiastically received. "Night of Love" at the Tower and Modjeska drew exceedingly well. "Getting Gertie's Garter" packed the Venetian. Crowds flocked to the beautiful new Colonial which recently opened, and which this week was showing "Tell It to the Marines."

Albany

WITH cool weather prevailing throughout the past week, business continued good at practically all the theatres in Albany and Troy, although dropping somewhat under the week before. This is mainly due to the effects of the Lenten Season and the approach of Easter.

The Vitaphone continues to be a heavy drawing attraction at the Mark Strand in Albany, and last week coupled with "The Night of Love," business ran well, though under the previous week. At the Leland, "The Midnight Sun" played to capacity throughout the week, although there was an absence of persons standing for the second show.

Stock opened last week at the Capitol Theatre, but without appreciably affecting the crowds at the motion picture theatres. Double feature first-runs at the Clinton Square last week included "The Masked Woman" and "The Wreck," both doing well. At the Mark Ritz, "Love's Greatest Mistake" did but fair.

In Troy, the Vitaphone, coupled with "It" played to business above normal, with Saturday and Sunday exceptionally good. At the Lincoln, in Troy, "Orchids and Ermine" ran but fair.

Salt Lake City

OCCASIONAL spring flurries have seemingly had no dampening effect the past week. Business at all of the downtown houses is reported to have been exceptionally good. This was due to the fact that in addition to the high grade productions being shown, it was also Mormon Conference week. Exploitation was keenly alive.

"The Fire Brigade," is being received very favorably and doing good business and is to run for two weeks. "Casey at the Bat" is going over unusually big at the Paramount Empress, and is booked for a nine-day run in connection with an added stage attraction billed as "The Follies of 1900." The Vitaphone and the second week of "The Better Ole" was the big attraction at the American. Gem has been showing "Young April" successfully, and the Kinema offered "Faust" as a second run. The Mission Theatre, a neighborhood house, did a fairly good business on "Stella Dallas." "Women Love Diamonds" was the feature picture shown at the Pantages in connection with their vaudeville, and "Play Safe" was the offering at the Orpheum.

Central Pennsylvania

THE outstanding pictures of the week were "Michael Strogoff," at Loew's Regent, and "Summer Bachelors," starring Madge Bellamy, which made an instant hit at the Colonial. The attendance at both theatres was exceptionally large. The weather was cold for this time of year, but the majority of days were fair.

"Blind Alleys," at the Victoria was not generally regarded as by any means the strongest vehicle that Meighan has appeared in that his local popularity prevented the picture from even approaching a "flop." The attendance was not, however, up to the usual average. Another episode of "The Collegians" serial was shown at this theatre and helped to swell the box office receipts.

The photoplay at the State, devoted in part to vaudeville, was "Lunatic at Large,"," starring Leon Errol, in the first half of the week and proved popular. At the Broad the main feature, "The Love Toy," proved a good business-getter.

As a counter attraction to the movies the Morgan Wallace Players ran into their third successful week in stock.

Oklahoma City

THE weather last week in Oklahoma City was mild enough but not very cheering—however, not enough so to have such influence on the audiences at the theatres. Advertising kept along at its usual pace. The Capitol Theatre received the best press notices the first of the week with the showing of "The Demi-Bride" and showed to good business. "Volcano" with an extra good cast created an interest in the week-end audiences at the Capitol. "The Winning of Barbara Worth," although the Criterion played to the usually good houses on Saturday and Sunday, the opening days of the week's picture, seemed to dwindle rather than increase the audiences for the balance of the showing. "The Notorious Lady" drew well at the Empress all week, the stars seeming to draw more than the picture. At the Liberty "Perch of the Devil" kept business at about the usual line for this theatre, while the last of the week, "Held by the Law" did a little better than usual in the size of audiences.

Tampa

LAST week was "off" for the show business. Hot summer weather and the Gulf bathing beaches called, and the Billy Sunday revival meetings pulled in excess of 23,000 people.

The Tampa played "The Beloved Rogue" the first four days and "Evening Clothes" the last three. Both the stars, Barrymore and Menjou are favorites in Tampa and would have made a better showing had conditions been different.

The Victory inaugurated their "summer season" this week with a cut in prices from 25 and 50 to 20 and 40 cents, which seemed to help out as a draw. "The Love Thrill" was the attraction and it did well.

The Strand had "Afraid to Love" the first two days, "The Cheerful Fraud" the next three and "Her Father Said No" the last two. Denny proved the best card of the three, but business was not up to the usual Strand standard. Over at the Franklin, "The Last Trail" did the best business, with "Rose of the Tenements" and "Red Hot Hoofs" doing as well as could be expected on this exceptional week.

Fakir Act on Stage Heralds "The Show"

Instead of the usual trailer announcement for the presentation of "The Show," at Loew's State in Los Angeles, this production was "advanced" by a stage act featuring a fakir sideshow scene in which the magician ran swords through a box encasing a woman.

The announcement featuring the picture was displayed on the trunk which was used in the act.

"Music Master" Scene from Cut-out

As a lobby display to exploit the showing of "The Music Master" at the Liberty Theatre in Marysville, Cal., Manager W. H. Cornwell built a naturalistic scene in which figures cut from the stock 24-sheet were featured. The scene shows the violinist at the right corner of room—an effect gained by the use of an electric floor lamp, rug and enclosed in a cloth drape—in which a young man and women were seated, in the attitude of listening. A phonograph concealed behind the drape played violin records continuously. The arm of the Music Master was so arranged that it moved the bow across the violin. A fan motor was used to animate the figure.

Circus Ballyhoo Used for "Don Juan"

Warner's Metropolitan Theatre in Baltimore is a downtown house with an uptown location, so to speak, and the exploitation staged in that city for special presentations is designed to meet the situation. When "Don Juan" and the Vitaphone were presented recently, Manager Frank Cassidy made a special play for advertising in downtown locations. He began by obtaining several excellent window displays and added to that a street ballyhoo consisting of a steam calliope mounted on a circus wagon with all the gilt and red paint necessary to add visual flash to the attractor.

"Twinkletoes" Display a High Kicker

Animated cut-outs are in high favor as occasional attractors for theatre front exploitation, and several ingenious devices have been made by exhibitors along the lines of this type of display. One of the most effective devices of the kind, done by Thomas C. Grindley, manager of the Wilma Theatre, Missoula, Mont., was made with a 24-sheet cut-out of Colleen Moore in the character of "Twinkletoes." Grindley cut off one of the legs, pivoted it to the body of the figure with a mechanism operated by a clockwork, and produced a realistic animated figure of the star going through a high-kick dance.

Man in Stocks is Feature of Float

"The Scarlet Letter" had the benefit of a clever exploitation campaign when it showed at the Capitol Theatre in Philadelphia. A highlight of the drive was the float which was used in advance and throughout the run as a street attractor. The float was mounted on a horse-drawn truck and featured the "stocks" which were the form of punishment in vogue in the period dealt with in "The Scarlet Letter."

Tiger Featured in Jungle Display

Though the display was for "The Gorilla Hunt," the highlight in the atmospheric lobby arrangement at the Loughlin Theatre in Long Beach, Cal., was a stuffed tiger, mounted on a circular pedestal in the center of the lobby.

Huge Books Exploit Film of Novel

Manager W. F. Brock of the Rialto Theatre in Chattanooga, Tenn., directed attention to the fact that "The Winning of Barbara Worth" was a screen version of a novel by a lobby display featuring huge cut-outs representing the book by Harold Bell Wright. Over the marquee of the Rialto there was an open book with the billing for the picture printed across the spread pages in large lettering. At the curb, under the marquee, there was a realistic cut-out of a book, partially open and with a cut-out figure, made from a poster, with hero and heroine riding a white horse.

College Atmosphere in Lobby Display

A lobby display in which a colorful arrangement was obtained by the use of college pennants, pillow tops and the regular posters for the picture made an attractive exploitation device for "College Days" when that picture played the Tremont Theatre, Ansonia, Conn. The display was arranged by Manager Henry H. Cohen.

Gold Passes Given to Public Officials

A gold ticket, bearing an invitation to Mayor Malcolm W. Gross to attend a showing of "Michael Strogoff" at the Rialto Theatre in Allentown, Pa., was one of the exploitation stunts used for the picture in that city. The presentation was made by Bernard P. Berenstain and Harry A. Weisbrod in the presence of John Newkirk, manager of the Rialto. This was the fourth presentation of a gold pass for "Michael Strogoff" made through the Universal company.

Booth Changed Into "Red Mill"

A realistic "Red Mill" was constructed around the ticket booth of the Broadway Theatre, Newburgh, N.Y., when the picture of that title was offered as the feature attraction. The set was constructed of compo board, painted red, with white cloth sails on the arms of the mill. The cashier wore typical Dutch costume. On either side of the ticket window were painted panels to represent blinds, thrown open, and bearing the title printed in vertical fashion in white letters.

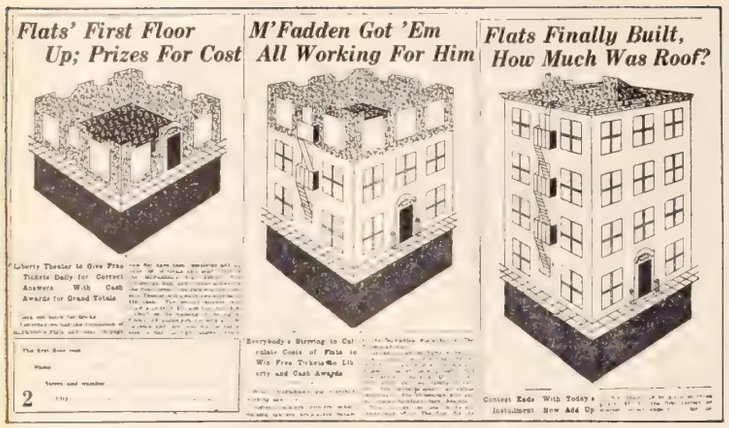
Firemen Do Stunts to Exploit Film



Through a tie-up with the Fire Department of Birmingham, Ala., the firemen of that city staged some thrilling stunts in front of the Temple Theatre as an advertisement for the showing of "The Fire Brigade." Hook and ladder apparatus was brought up to the theatre and from the top of an extended ladder the men jumped into fire nets held by their fellow fire fighters.

Window Display in Broadway Store

Samples of the floor plans published in the contest which exploited "McFadden's Flats" (First National)

The Contest Editor of the Pittsburgh "Sun" was swamped with replies computing the cost of building "McFadden's Flats"

TWO PITTSBURGH THEATRES EXPLOIT "McFADDEN'S FLATS"

HOW two theatres in the same city can exploit the same feature was demonstrated recently when Harry Davis' Grand, at Pittsburgh, under direction of the Stanley Company, and Stanley-Rowland-Clark's Liberty, under management of Harry Thomas, put over "McFadden's Flats."

Two distinct and individual methods of exploitation were used by the two theatres—although newspaper circulation was the basis of both campaigns.

The Liberty, through a tie-up with the Pittsburgh Sun, inaugurated the "McFadden's Flats" contest, offering prizes of cash and tickets to the winners. It was in the form of an apartment floor plan, with one plan published on each day of the five days of the contest. On the drawings were dozens of small numbers, promiscuously sketched into the drawing. Correct additions and computations of cost of building "McFadden's Flats."

The Grand campaign for the feature was built along very different lines—and instead of tying up with a single paper, Mr. Davis preferred to use the five Pittsburgh sheets—omitting the contest angle, which might have been confusing, and to play the game heavily with display advertising and news readers. However, a private screening for 2,000 members of the Post's Fair Play Club, was arranged at the Grand, and a three-column spread in the news section resulted. The remainder of the campaign was given over to display ads in the news sections of the various papers.

Reo Co. Issues Material for "Yankee Clipper" Displays

THE Reo Motor Car Company of Lansing Mich., is preparing to launch a national co-operative drive on their model car, "The Flying Cloud," in connection with local showings of "The Yankee Clipper." The tie-up is based on the title of the picture and name of the car, "The Flying Cloud" was the name borne by one of the most famous of the New England clipper ships.

A series of publicity stories directly tying in The Flying Cloud with the De Mille photoplay will be sent to the local Reo dealers, who will, in turn, see that they are published in the different newspapers and magazines, prior to and simultaneously with the local run of the picture. Newspaper advertisements being prepaid in four and five columns, combining the copy of The Flying Cloud with "The Yankee Clipper," are to be inserted in the different newspapers, prior and during the run of the picture in the local city.

Urge Dealer Tie-ups

A complete description of "The Yankee Clipper" has been reproduced in the Reo Company's house organ and bulletin, along with a number of suggestions as to window displays and various tie-ups with the local theatres.

Window posters will be distributed both by Producers Distributing Corporation's representatives and the Reo distributors. These posters will have co-operative copy. A number of scenes from the film itself will be used in the layout. These posters will be distributed and displayed by the various Reo dealers during the run of "The Yankee Clipper" in the local cities and a quantity will be sent to each of the Producers Distributing Corporation's branch offices so they, in turn, can distribute them through their various channels.

Special bulletins have been sent out by the Reo Motor Car Company in which they urge that their representatives in the field give all possible co-operation to representatives of Producers Distributing Corporation in assisting them in placing the picture in the local theatres.

The campaign, which will be engineered during the run of "The Yankee Clipper" at the Roxy Theatre, in New York, will be an example which should be followed throughout the entire country.

New Taxi on Display for "A Kiss in a Taxi"

Manager Montague Salmon arranged for the display of a new taxicab in front of the theatre to exploit the Paramount picture, "A Kiss in a Taxi," when that film played at the Rialto Theatre, Macon, Ga.

Half of the taxi was on the sidewalk and the other half was on the street. Banners were placed on either side which advertised the picture, name of theatre, and play dates.

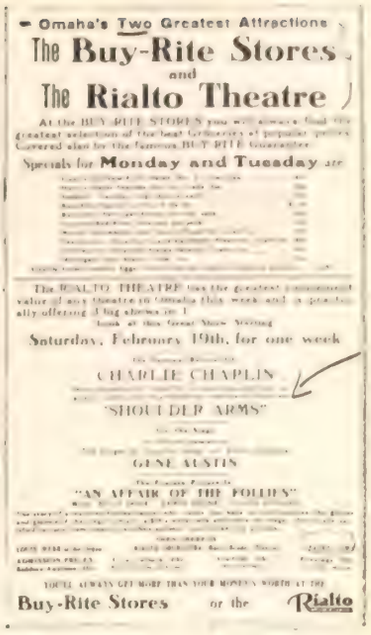
A large circular disk was stuck in the rear spare tire carrying the following words in lage type: "A Kiss in a Taxi." In the rear window of the taxi could be seen a silhouette of a couple in the act of kissing. At night a baby spot was thrown on the silhouette, which helped to increase its attractiveness.

A two-column ad (entire length of paper) was inserted in the "Telegraph" on the last day of showing of the picture. This ad was paid for by the taxicab company.

Courtesy Competition for Staff at Canada Theatre

W. P. McGeachie, manager of the Algoma Theatre, Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, has his whole staff on their toes because he is conducting an "Employees Service and Courtesy Competition," the contest to close at the end of March. The patrons of the theatre have been asked by letter to point out how different employees of the theatre have acted toward them. Did the usher escort you to a seat? Did you receive a cordial "Thank You" from the cashier and doorman? Was the employee properly dressed?, etc. Prizes have been offered for the most courteous employees.

Colleen's Slippers Given to Canton Cinderella



An adroit exploitation stunt netted the Alhambra Theatre in Canton, O., a fund of publicity for the showing at that house of "Twinkletoes." The stunt, executed by Ray C. Brown, manager of the house, was the giving of a pair of dancing slippers, donated by Colleen Moore, to a local store, which offered them to the girl who could wear them. The star's telegram to Brown in reply to his request for a pair of slippers similar to those worn by her in making "Twinkletoes" was featured in a newspaper ad run by the shoe store which tied up with the stunt.

Frontal display for "Shoulder Arms" (Pathe)

Electric lights feature showing of "Will Rogers in Dublin" (Pathe)

Merchant tie-up ad features "Shoulder Arms" (Pathe)

Stunts to Feature Short Subjects

It is not only the theatres of the smaller towns and the neighborhood houses which support their presentations of short subjects. The re-issue of "Shoulder Arms" is currently playing many big theatres and is being featured in newspaper advertising and theatre displays. The Strand Theatre in New York used marquee lights to bill the picture, and repeated the practice when the first Will Rogers travel picture "In Dublin" was presented. The Rialto Theatre in Omaha featured "Shoulder Arms" with large cut-outs and banners in a special frontal display, and in addition obtained an excellent advertising tie-up with the Buy-Rite Stores of that city.

Theatre Prints Ad Upside Down

The idea of printing a newspaper display for a motion picture upside down is, in a manner of speaking, journalistically taboo. So when Harold B. Dygert, advertising director of the Stanley-Rowland and Clark Theatres in Pittsburgh, decided to use the stunt for "The Silent Lover" at the Liberty Theatre, he was up against it for some means of making the newspaper composing rooms swallow the poison. He ordered his staff artist to draw in the usual standardized border first, with the name "Liberty" across the top, as usual. Then to turn it upside down, and sketch in the copy. The plate made from the drawing was sent to the paper. Thirty minutes before press time, the Gazette Composing Room rang Dygert on the phone and told him that the engravers had botched his Sunday ad. Dygert said it was too late to make any change and to go ahead and run it thus—which was done.

Style Map Used in Cooperative Ad

Above the cut was the theatre's announcement and the rules of the contest conducted in connection with the page.

"Sally Wise starts out to see 'Michael Strogoff' at the Majestic Theatre, but the presentation being continuous, she stops on her way to the theatre to do some shopping, using all of the 12 stores whose advertisements appear herewith," read the copy.

"In each of these ads there is a headline in which the printer has used a number of capital letters, most of them correctly, some incorrectly. Jot down these capital letters, correct and incorrect, and using them as basis, see how many words you can make out of them, using only the capital letters in the headlines and using them only the same number of times in each word as they appear in the headlines."

Merchants Tie-in With Contest

A popularity contest, designed to select the most popular athlete in Carthage, Mo., proved excellent exploitation for the presentation of "The Collegians" at the Crane Theatre there. The idea was based on votes to be cast by patrons of the theatre, each admission entitling the purchaser to a vote. The contest thus was run for the entire period of ten weeks covered in the showing of the "Collegian" series. The contest stirred wide interest in Carthage.

"The Lunch Hound"
(Bray Cartoon—One Reel)

A RELEASE from the Bray studio which is decidedly amusing. Lantz has injected a lot of clever stuff in "The Lunch Hound." The appellation of hound could apply to either Pete, the cartoon pup, or Lantz, because both of them are ferociously hungry. And with such an important theme as hunger at the bottom of all this your interest is caught and does not wane. There are amusing little bits or highlights—notably where Lantz calls the pup (hiding somewhere in a cartoon forest) and calls in vain for Pete does not appear on the scene and respond to his master's voice. But Lantz knows how to draw him out, so he sketches a tempting morsel, the aroma from which compells the errant Pete to reveal his whereabouts. The dog seems to resent this for he plays a few practical jokes himself when Lantz tries to cook himself a meal in the absence of his cook. It's irritating for Lantz—and for Pete, too, for the latter gets a lunch of bread and water in a prison in which his master, by a few strokes of his pen, had confined him. An entertaining number.—RAYMOND GANLY.

"Pete's Pow Pow"
(Bray Cartoon—One Reel)

THE wonderful flexibility of these cartoon heroes! One must get used to their many sided accomplishments. They cannot be held down by mere pen and ink, flat surfaces, Newton's laws of gravity or anything of that sort. They are decidedly capable, ingenious. Pete, the Hot Dog pup, is a trainer of pugilists in this one. He is a good trainer but Walter Lantz, his creator, and pupil, finds training an irksome game. He displays a marvelous faculty for doing wrong. However Pete possesses a lot of patience. He also carries a punch, too, and this punch he uses to good advantage when his pupil's opponent invades Pete's gymnasium. Needless to say this same opponent gets himself knocked bowlegged. But not by Lantz, he had been induced to sleep for some time, but by the redoubtable Pete.

It is amusing and should prove entertainment for your patrons.—RAYMOND GANLY.

"Sports of the Great Lakes"
"Pottery"
"A Big City's Water Supply"
(Bray Magazine Special—One Reel)

INTERESTING subjects here. Fishing and duck hunting. The storing and filtering of millions of gallons of water. How pottery is manufactured. Scenes like this, different as they are, undoubtedly do entertain. Certainly they are not encountered generally in the life of the average movie goer. To those of us who live in cities such views of our great inland seas are illuminating. Then again the sight of our huge reservoirs, then many sprays, dams, etc., are worth while, offering as they do information about that all essential commodity—water. We are told that the industry of pottery-making is as old as civilization itself. And are they not discovering vases, urns and the like constantly in ancient tombs, mounds, pyramids? There is more than a mere modicum of interest in the matter incorporated in these subjects; it is worthwhile.—RAYMOND GANLY.

"Flaming Snow"
(Universal Western—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

DON'T confuse this "Western" with the kind chock full of hard-riding and fighting cowboys, bandits, guns, etc., for the most Western thing about it is its locale where the dramatic class of Piperock (somewhere in the wide-open spaces) are moved to display its histrionic ability.

Ben Corbett and Jack Knap are the two players very much in evidence throughout and accompanied with a two-ton leading lady who wrecks everything she comes in contact with, the laughable burlesque moves along with a generous helping of good lines and gags. Of course, the "snow scene" goes over big; also the fake wind storm, but a real storm steals upon them unawares and provides a good climax.

"The Hon. Mr. Buggs"
(Roach-Pathe—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

THREE well-known feature length picture actors appear in the current Roach comedy, which will prove a highly amusing addition to any program, and they not alone "appear," but take full part in the work of getting over the various bits of business for which the plot calls.

Matt Moore plays another of his "timid" roles, Anna May Wong, the serio-comic adventuress and K. Sojin, the arch-fiend, in the tale of a stolen brooch and the excitement aroused in its recovery. Martha Sleeper, Oliver Hardy and Laura La Varnie, regular Roach comedians, add their work to the general whole and it is no mean contribution. Fred Wood Jackman directed and he made a good job of it.

"The Pie-Eyed Piper"
(Fables-Pathe—One Reel)

ANOTHER humorous Pathe release is the latest Aesops Fable. This time poor old Al Falfa is trimmed in a poker game by a couple of his animal "friends" and then, in hopes of charming back his money he buys an alleged Pied Piper's whistle which, however, doesn't achieve the result obtained by the original man from Hamlin. There's lots of fun in this reel—HAROLD FLAVIN.

"The Prince of Whales"
(Life Cartoon-Educational—One Reel)

THIS is about the best of the series seen thus far; the cartoon characters are made to perform many amusing stunts and the net result is good entertainment for the fans. The cats and dogs set out on a whaling trip; they sight one of the mammals and the fun begins when they shoot a huge harpoon which fails to hit a vital spot. The whale retaliates by upsetting the boat and chases them around in the water but is finally subdued.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

"Buried Treasure"
(Bruce-Educational—One Reel)

NOT up to the usual standard of the Bruce Scenics, for it lacks the camera views of nature's beauty spots usually on exhibition in this series. "Fadeout," a Scottish terrier, searches over land and sea for a lost bone and the quest is the means by which scenes on earth and water are introduced, but they are not as attractive as those ordinarily incorporated.—HAROLD FLAVIN.

"Dumb Belles"
(Christie-Educational—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

BILLY DOOLEY'S latest starring comedy serves to introduce Ruth Perrine, one of the winners of the magazine contest conducted by Educational, and it seems, from the bit allowed her, that Miss Perrine will prove a good bet.

As for the story, Billy, or his cousin, will inherit a girl's school if either one shows more aptitude for the teaching job than the other. They both demonstrate their ability, thus providing many amusing scenes. Billy loses out but opens a seminary opposite that which he expected to inherit and the girls all flock to him. Directed by William Watson and the supporting cast includes Bill Irving and Jack Duffy. It satisfies.

"Keeping His Word"
(Universal-Stern Bros.—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

THAT even a strapping, Amazonian type of mother-in-law cannot keep two loving hearts apart is laughably demonstrated in this recent Stern Bros. release featuring Charles King. First, Charlie gets in bad with the old lady by handing her an explosive golf ball. Further calamities result in our hero and his fiancee being hurled through the window of the latter's bedroom. This inspires mother-in-law to force a marriage, which is of course, entirely acceptable to the pair. However, the two are kept apart. A fake burglary arranged by Charlie makes him a hero in the household and all is well. Director Scott Pembroke has made a first rate comedy.

"Broke in China"
(Sennett-Pathe—Two Reels)
(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

FUNNY gags, funny titles, funny comedians, make this latest Ben Turpin two-reeler one of the funniest comedies turned out at the Sennett studio, or at any studio, for that matter. Ben, as a sailor, in company with a shipmate, visits a cabaret in China catering to a hybrid miscellaneous patronage. Two hostesses (who look as if they starred in the first burlesque show ever produced) endeavor to part Ben from his money but instead he tells them a heart-breaking tale of thwarted love. And how he tells it!

Eddie Cline directed Ben who is supported by two excellent comedians, Louise Carver and Anne Belcher. You can't miss with this one.

Pathe Review No. 17
Monkeys, Pilgrims and Hunters
(Pathe—One Reel)

MONKEY life at the monkey club in the Zoological Gardens, Milwaukee, is on view in the opening scenes of the current reel; next Pathecolor shots of Plymouth, England, famous as the seaport from which the Pilgrims set sail in 1620. The latter porton of the reel is devoted to the third installment of the camera record of the Putnam expedition to Greenland; in this part is described the landing of the party, the Eskimo version of the "Black Bottom" and the mountain climb by the members of the expedition.

Interesting and amusing. — HAROLD FLAVIN.

"They Call It Love"
(Universal Bluebird—One Reel)

FOR those audiences not too well fed up on a lot of old familiar gags and slapsticks, this single reeler featuring Neely Edwards will do very well. Edwards is in the role of a young lover, who in order to win his fair one must prove his chivalry. This he attempts to do but continually walks into trouble in his efforts to render assistance to several ladies. The climax takes place in the gashouse district where a tough egg is maltreating his sweetheart. Neely emerges triumphant.—E. G. JOHNSTON.

Altars of Desire

Light Story; Should Do Well at Box-Office

(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

MAE MURRAY, Conway Tearle, Andre Beranger, the "Different" comedian, and the semi-comic story constitute a combination that should draw patronage to any house in which this production is exhibited. The title seems rather heavy for the story idea, which is not of "The Merry Widow" type, but that is not an important matter as Mae Murray's name in the lights will draw them regardless of the picture in which she appears. Conway Tearle is there with his usual restrained emotionalism and Andre Beranger's unusual comedy-character delineation should give both high and low-brow any number of hearty chuckles. There is just a sufficient blending of the melodramatic and the ridiculous to satisfy the admirers of both types of pictures.

Another angle which will help sell this production is the sequences done in Technicolor which are about as good examples of this method of filming as has been seen. The story is a delightful whimsy built around the star who endangers her chances of real love and happiness by continually flirting to gain masculine admiration. Miss Murray's performance as the spoiled daughter of a rich man fully realizes the possibilities of the role which calls for a post-graduate course in "flapperism." The star is nobly aided and abetted by the entire cast which turns in sterling performances.

The Cast: Mae Murray, Conway Tearle, Andre Beranger, Maude George, Robert Edeson. Directed by Christy Cabanne from Maria Thompson Davies' story.

THEME: Rich man's daughter is infatuated with worthless count but, when in trouble, turns to childhood sweetheart and eventually marries him.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The performance of the entire cast. The Technicolor sequences. Direction and photography.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Mae Murray's name played up.

DRAWING POWER: Any type of house. Good for sophisticated grown-ups.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Length, 6,037 feet. Released February 5, 1927.

Down the Stretch

Universal Makes a "Different" Race Track Story

(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

AT last—a race track story with the screen treatment from a different angle, and it's a thoroughly human one. Conspicuous by their absence are the grey-haired mother waiting on the "mortgaged to the hilt" farm for news of the race which will decide whether or not she has to leave the old homestead and the poor, but proud Kentucky colonel down to his last dollar and horse. This tale glorifies the jockey, stressing the torture undergone in an effort to hold down weight, the hunger, the drying out process and the terrible nerve strain which these boys suffer, but which is never realized or appreciated by anyone outside the training stables. And Robert Agnew, as the jockey, realizes the possibilities of his role to the fullest extent.

True, there is a mother and some reference to huge sums placed on the race, but these angles are used only as a background, being part of the generally good race track atmosphere maintained in the telling of the story. The one and lasting thought of the spectator is the awful hunger of the jockey. The one criticism is the length of the production. There is only one situation and it takes five reels to lead up to it. A deletion of approximately a thousand feet would help in quickening the tempo.

Recall your regular race track story details, the harsh trainer, the "interests," and the crooked gamblers, add to them the starting jockey angle and you have the "Down the Stretch" story.

The Cast: Robert Agnew, Marian Nixon, Otis Harlan, Ena Gregory, Virginia True Boardman, Ward Crane, Jack Daugherty. Directed by King Baggot.

THEME: Race track melodrama with youth suffering to keep down weight before big race which he wins. There's a girl.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The race track atmosphere, performance of the principals.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Restauraut tie-up and lobby display.

DRAWING POWER: Middle class patronage and theatres. Family picture.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Length, 6,910 feet. Released May 29, 1927.

See You In Jail

Amusing Moments On An Old Theme

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

AN old theme which has proved its mettle time and again upon the screen is uncovered here. It projects the young man who engages in verbal brickbats with the proverbial parent—with the result that the obstreperous heir is told to pack and be on his way. The youth's subsequent adventures comprise the meat and the stuffing and the sauce of this celluloid tidbit. Of course the only chance it has of scoring is in its array of incident and the interpretation. Fortunately the director sees to it that the high jinks tumble over each other with gags—and Jack Mulhall carries out the portrayal with a good sense of situation and humor.

The young smarty doesn't hold his jobs very long—and the girl who comes into his life doesn't help matters much. Indeed she hastens his exit. After idling about a bit the plot eventually gets under way insofar as explaining the title. He is propositioned to serve a term in jail for a rich man on his way to Honolulu. The hero takes him up in order to square himself with the girl—who has accused him of robbing her.

From this point the film releases some amusing moments—what with the youth kidding the judge to extend his three-day sentence to thirty, and again when he goes on a "big business" venture with his cell-mates. It's all impossible, but since it is pitched in a farcical key it doesn't ask you to take it seriously. Mulhall's aids catch his spirit—which is to say that the piece is played right up to the handle.

The Cast: Jack Mulhall, Alice Day, Mack Swain, Crauford Kent. Director, William H. Clifford.

THEME: Farce-comedy of rich man's son who is told to go on his own and not come back 'til he's made good.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: Mulhall's acting. The scenes between father and son. The romantic interludes. The moment when hero goes to jail. The jail episodes. The subtitles. The sparkle of the humor.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Tease the title and map campaign along comedy lines. Play up star who has developed into first rate light comedian.

DRAWING POWER: Suitable for average houses everywhere.

Produced and distributed by First National. Length, six reels. Released April, 1927.

Matinee Ladies

Builds Slowly to Melodramatic Climax

(Reviewed by Harold Flavin)

THE first half of this production drags lamentably and, though they've packed a great number of melodramatic stunts in the latter portion, it is doubtful whether the picture is good box-office as the story is trite. The star simply walks through the first three reels accompanied by the leading man, no action, no attempt at characterization, no story started, save for a feeble effort here and there. All the fireworks are shot off in the last reels, a jazz party in a night club, the party's continuation on a houseboat, the inevitable storm and rescue of the girl by the hero. But, owing to the fact that these same incidents have been incorporated in numberless features during the past few years, it doesn't seem probable that audiences will react very enthusiastically. It is all so obvious.

It is hard to decide just who is responsible for this very old-fashioned story. If written the way in which it has been filmed, pity the poor scenarist, or perhaps the director read the script and then threw it away deciding he could do better; or, is it due to supervision? One would have to be on the ground when the picture was filmed in order to state who is to blame. May McAvoy, Malcolm MacGregor and the rest of the cast do their best, but they're up against a stale tale.

An embryo lawyer is forced to earn his way through college by becoming a paid dancer in a cabaret also employing a cigarette girl with whom the boy falls in love. She is sought by a wealthy bootlegger. The usual poor boy, rich man, pretty girl battle follows.

The Cast: May McAvoy, Malcolm MacGregor, Hedda Hopper, Margaret Seddon, Richard Tucker, Jean Lafferty, Cissy Fitzgerald, William Demarest. Directed by Byron Haskins.

THEME: Law student and cigarette girl fall in love, but she is sought by wealthy bootlegger. The temptation of riches and position against poverty and love besets her, but she chooses love.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The night life scenes. The houseboat sequence and the storm.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Play up as picture of wild night life.

DRAWING POWER: Will get by in small houses.

Produced and distributed by Warner Bros. Length, 6,352 feet. Released April 9, 1927.

The Ridin' Rowdy

A Fairly Good Western Has Its Appeal

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THERE is not a little that is good in this latest of the adventures of Pathe's cowboy star—Buffalo Bill, Jr. Perhaps the plot is a trifle familiar, but then are not all of these Westerners with their chaps, sombreros and cattle old acquaintances? "The Ridin' Rowdy" is a fair-to-middlin' proposition in its box-office or drawing value; however, in it the fan can find much that is entertaining. It does not offer anything that is spectacular or thrilling—but it offers a likable personality in its star, competent support from the other members of the cast, an interesting though familiar theme. In some Westerns pretending to visualize the days of rustlers, cow punchers and their cayuses there is very often absent those all important cattle generally the cause of all the monkey-business. In "The Ridin' Rowdy" one is not led to imagine that the cattle are around somewhere for we see shots of herds with punchers dutifully tending them.

The old feud 'tween cattler and rustler plays its part in "The Ridin' Rowdy." Bill is a cow man and he has the misfortune, from his father's point of view, to fall in love with a sheep herder, Olive Hasbrouck. Of course these characters come to feel that mutual attraction, that inner urge which Bill responds by fighting for her when she faces extinction and because of which she comes to love this impudent cow puncher who offended her high-strung, nervous temperament by embracing her upon their first meeting.

The Cast: Buffalo Bill, Jr., Olive Hasbrouck, Al Hart, Harry Todd, Lafe McKee, Jack McCready, Walter Brennan, Raye Hampton, Charles Whitaker. Director, Richard Thorpe.

THEME: Drama of the conventional Western brand in which the boy and girl defy conventions by loving and fighting for each other in spite of the fact that they are supposed to hate each other, being as they are cowpuncher and sheep herder.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The scrap in the bar room. The scene where the girl and her friends hold off the enemies who seek their extermination.

DRAWING POWER: Good in neighborhood houses.

Produced by Action Pictures, Inc. Presented by Lester F. Scott, Jr. Distributed by Pathe.
Released April 24, 1927. Footage, 4,794 feet.

The Notorious Lady

Satisfying But More Picturesque Than Real

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

WHAT is told in this picture has been told many, many times before, but withal, it manages to tuck away a moving hour—what with its melodramatic adventure, heroics and atmosphere. The lady of the title is not so notorious as she is big-hearted, but the definition is appropriate for the purpose of establishing her character in court.

The action, through a time lapse, shifts to the diamond fields of Africa and takes along its central figures. Another man enters the plot—and he becomes interested in the wife while a native girl makes life bearable for the husband. The subsequent episodes usher in a melodramatic climax which involves an attack by the natives. When the wife's new friend is severely wounded, the husband magnanimously carries him to her cabin. The result is her eyes are open to his manly gesture—and a reconciliation follows.

All of this is told with a fair amount of suspense, but the real highlights center around some gorgeous shots suggestive of the African locale and a fine subdued interpretation by Lewis Stone as the husband. Ann Rork displays a deal of personality and talent as the native girl—and is well on her way to emotional heights. Barbara Bedford as the wife would be more convincing if she didn't appear so civilized in the African scenes.

The Cast: Lewis Stone, Barbara Bedford, Ann Rork, Earl Metcalfe, Francis McDonald, Grace Carlyle, E. J. Ratcliffe, Guniss Davis. Director, King Baggot.

THEME: Adventure melodrama involving a triangle and a woman's self-sacrifice to save her husband.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The atmospheric backgrounds and detail in the African scenes. The acting by Lewis Stone. The appeal of Ann Rork.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Play up as a moving melodrama involving a woman's sacrifice. Feature Lewis Stone and the others in the cast.

DRAWING POWER: Stone has a following and billing him strongly will draw them. Suitable for average houses everywhere.

Produced by Sam Rork. Distributed by First National. Length, six reels. Released April, 1927.

Afraid to Love

Brisk Enough But Not So Bright

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

COMPOUNDED from a recipe which has performed yeoman service on the screen this picture is forced to rely upon its speed and its interpretation for appeal. The scenes dovetail well, but they are easily catalogued. You know just what is going to be served up every minute. Some of them are seasoned with sentiment, other with comedy relief. And all are in place. The fault, of course, is the lack of a nourishing plot in the stereotyped scheme of things for it fails to carry any surprising twists.

There is no variation at all on the old theme—which tells its little idea briskly enough, but with scarcely any sparkle. And because it drags, the customers are apt to become fidgety. We see a hero capitulating to the charms of a tidy temptress though he cannot marry her if he cares anything about his inheritance. Consequently a marriage of convenience is arranged in order to effect a quick divorce. But the upshot of it is he falls in love with his wife.

The piece might have enjoyed more emphasis upon the farcical incident, but instead it sticks straight to its cut-and-dried pattern. Florence Vidor humanizes the wife very well—and Clive Brook makes the husband genuine.

The Cast: Florence Vidor, Clive Brook, Jocelyn Lee, Norman Trevor, Arthur Lubin. Director, E. H. Griffith.

THEME: Farce-comedy of young man who must marry against his will or lose his inheritance. He ends up by falling in love with his bride.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The acting by the principals. The gowns worn by Miss Vidor. The brisk action. The settings and atmosphere.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Treat this from humorous angle, concentrating upon the domestic mix-up. Play up the featured players—who are always dependable.

DRAWING POWER: Suitable for neighborhood houses or high class clientele. Needs exploitation.

Produced and distributed by Famous Players. Length, six reels. Released April, 1927.

Hokum In A Jewish-Irish Setting

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

NOT to be caught napping by the wayside Metro-Goldwyn has bobbed up with one of those "Abie" stories which never gets away from its stereotyped hokum insofar as the plot is concerned, but does present a fair assortment of gags to keep it going. As a result it's a pretty fair dish of celluloid—made so through the director's understanding of the characters. Naturally they behave according to the popular conception.

Papa Lapidowitz married an Irisher (yes her name is Bridget) and all the little Lapidowitzs have monickers suggestive of both racial strains. When Colleen Lapidowitz falls in love with a traffic cop (a true Irisher) she is merely obeying the same impulse which guided Mama to marry Papa. After various complications which are spirited enough to suit the Jews and the Irish everywhere the girl finds the officer more attractive than the wealthy bounder whose name has been reduced from Goldberger to Gold.

The high jinks revealing a St. Patrick's day parade and the various conflicts of the family are what add spice to the picture. The show should please you if you're not over-sophisticated.

The Cast: Sally O'Neil, Roy D'Arcy, Charles Delaney, Kate Price, Tehen Holtz, Leon Holme, Turner Savage, Helen Levine. Director, William Beaudine.

THEME: Romantic comedy based upon conflicts in home of Jewish-Irish family.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS: The gags, especially the St. Patrick's Day parade. The scene when the heroine leaves home and her reconcilation. The romantic conflict.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES: Feature as story of the Irish and the Jews. Go after the Irish and Jewish population. Bill as typical comedy of the two races. Play up cast.

DRAWING POWER: Should attract average theatre goers everywhere. Title should make it popular.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn. Length, six reels. Released April, 1927.

Regional News from Correspondents

N.Y. & N.J.

AN account of the "Get Together" dinner held at the Hotel Astor last Saturday by the Motion Picture Salesmen, Inc., will be found in the front news section of this publication. That it was a most successful affair will be attested by all those present.

Some of the highlights were: Felix Fiest's address, and his story illustrating "tact"; also, the one he told about Queen Isabella and Rosenzweig and Katz.

President Wolf, of the salesmen's organization also gave an interesting talk.

Max Broad kept things lively at the table occupied by members of the trade press.

Joe Less, of Fox Films failed to make a speech and you "ain't heard nothin'" until you hear Joe. We could recommend Joe and Pelham Lynton for a Big Time team.

William K. Howard, erstwhile film salesman and now a De Mille director, did his share to entertain the "fillum" boys. Howard knew his ground.

Charlie Rosensweig, of F.B.O. paid high tribute to G. W. Wolf, president of the M.P. Salesmen.

Not forgetting the luncheon: everything in the way of food was fine and the past reputation the film salesmen have for knowing how to entertain, was exemplified in every way.

Four more theatres in northern Jersey have been taken over by the Fabian-Stanley circuit, according to report. They are: Joseph Cocalis' Royal and Strand in Elizabeth and the U. S. Theatre Co.'s U. S. and Bishop theatres at Hoboken. Some time ago, the Cocalis deal was reported in these columns as being under way.

Among those who will go to Hollywood are Bill Heenan, manager of First National Exchange; Edgar A. Moss, manager for Fox; Bob Lynch, of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer forces; Jerome Safron, branch manager for F. B. O.; Charles S. Goodman, assistant manager for Educational Pictures.

Jack Greenberg, secretary of the Film Board of Trade, will leave the latter part of May for French Lick, Indiana, to attend a meeting of secretaries of film boards of trade in the United States. Mr. Greenberg will probably be gone from Philadelphia about two weeks.

W. H. Erbb, at one time a member of the sales forces in the Philadelphia territory and now branch manager for Famous Players in Boston, was a recent visitor in Philadelphia.

Mayer Milgram and I. Pilch have acquired a four-year lease on the Ritt Theatre, 53rd and Haverford Avenue, Philadelphia, which was formerly operated by M. Poplow.

East Coast Theatre Company has made a general shift of managers in its theatres. James A. Flynn, who has been in charge of the Spielmont and Globe theatres at Marcus Hook, Pa., has been transferred to the Roxborough Theatre, succeeding Phil Fienne. Everett Boyle, who has been identified with several motion picture theatres in Richmond, Va., has succeeded Mr. Flynn in Marcus Hook.

The sales force of the Philadelphia office of Pathe has been increased by the assignment of W. W. Black from the home office of the company in New York. Mr. Black will devote his time exclusively to the marketing of non-theatrical films.

Members of the Our Gang Club of the Philadelphia office of Pathe, are making plans to go to New York to enjoy a dinner and dance as guests of the Pathe Club of the New York exchange.

Sam Stiefel, part owner of De Luxe Exchange, has recently recovered from a severe attack of mumps. Mr. Stiefel, accompanied by several others interested in the motion picture industry in Philadelphia, has left for a short stay in Maine. Oscar Neufeld, partner of Mr. Stiefel, is in the meantime making a tour of the sixteen East Coast theatres operated by him and Mr. Stiefel in the territory.

William J. Heenan, president of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, recently announced the appointment of the following committees to serve for the succeeding three months. Executive—Joseph Hebrew, Warner Bros., chairman; S. Wittman, Universal, and C. S. Goodman, Educational; Membership—W. G. Humphreys, P. D. C., chairman; Harry Wiener, Columbia Pictures; Edgar A. Moss, Fox. Credit—Percy A. Bloch, Paramount; Jack Hennessy, United Artists; Gene Marcus, Twentieth Century. Transportation—Jerome Safron, F. B. O.; Mike Levinson, Penn Productions; Oscar Neufeld, De Luxe. Members of the Arbitration Board who will serve for the ensuing two months are: S. Wittman, Universal; Joe Morrow, M.-G.-M., and Tony Luchese, Liberty. Alternates: Edgar Moss, Fox; Harry Wiener, Columbia Pictures.

Wolf & Berger who operate the Empress Theatre, are now planning to spend approximately $23,000 to double the capacity of the theatre. Work will be started in June and the entire interior of the theatre will be redecorated and renovated.

Hunt's Theatres, Inc., will start work in October on a five-story hotel and 2,200-seat theatre on the site of the old Blaker's Theatre at Wildwood, N.J. The undertaking will represent an investment of approximately $500,000.

The Philadelphia Film Board of Trade has abandoned the Safety Committee for the coming two months and will instead try out the plan of having an individual exchange member make regular inspection of an exchange on the street other than his own to survey the fire hazards. Reports on existing conditions will be formally submitted to the Film Board of Trade through its secretary, Jack Greenberg.

Kansas City

MRS. MARY HENRY HOLMES, wife of Guy Holmes, city film censor of Kansas City, died this week after a short illness.

The Orpheum Theatre, through Lawrence Lehman, manager, and the Co-Operative Club of Kansas City were hosts to 110 children of the Jackson County Parental Home at the matinee Wednesday.

Fortunately W. P. Cuff of the Peoples and Mainstreet theatres did not have the receipts for those theatres with him when a bandit attacked him last Friday night. As the bandit was searching Mr. Cuff's pockets Mrs. Cuff called from the house, frightening him away.

Pathe officials in Kansas City believe they have discovered a record in the length of continued service of a film company to a theatre. In 1904 C. H. Thompson and M. J. Trimble established a motion picture policy at the Opera House, Plattsburg, Mo. The first program contained Pathe product. Each day since then has been Pathe pictures on the bill.

She was a pretty girl, was Estelle McBride. Often she would visit headquarters of the M.P.T.O. Kansas-Missouri in Kansas City and confide in Mrs. June Medcalf, secretary, that she thought one William Bradfield, Metro-Goldwyn salesman, was the "judge's earmuffs." Then the secret leaked out. The couple had been married since January 1.

Among the out-of-town exhibitors in the Kansas City market this week were: W. P. Cuff, Peoples and Mainstreet theatres, Chanute, Kan.; S. E. Wilhoit, Electric, Springfield, Mo.; C. M. Pattee, Pattee Theatre, Lawrence, Kan.; Walter Wallace, Orpheum, Leavenworth, Kan.; G. L. Hooper, Orpheum, Topeka, Kan.

Charles G. Branham, newly appointed divisional manager of Universal chain theatres, has established his headquarters in Kansas City.

John Nolan, Fox branch manager, made a hurried business trip to Chicago this week.

R. A. McGuire, Warner Bros., home office representative, was a Kansas City visitor.

Harry Strickland, Warner Bros., went to Coffeyville, Kan., to visit John Tackett of the New Tackett Theatre, it being the first time the two had seen each other since 1907.

Gib Jones is the new assistant manager of the Enterprise Film Corporation.

"Red" Jones, Educational branch manager, was hustling for more contracts in the territory this week.

W. J. Morgan, P.D.C. sales manager, was a Kansas City visitor. In effort to add color to exploitation the P.D.C. office has been transformed into virtually a ship while office personnel has been wearing sailor caps.

Walter Fruedenberger, sales manager for Ad-Vance Trailer Service, returned from a business trip to Chicago.

C. A. Schultz, P.D.C. branch manager, went to Wichita, Kan., after additional business.

Preordained

"— the final result of the motion picture on the screen was preordained from the day that Edison got his first sample of Eastman film."*

That was in 1889. And today the film that made motion pictures practical is the film that makes the most of the cinematographer's art and carries all the quality through to the screen—Eastman Film.

Inquiries and Comments

A Progressive Local

NOW that spring is here, it is only natural that the annual spirit of restlessness, which assails us at this time of the year, should shake things up a bit.

The officers of Local No. 199, Detroit, Michigan, evidently feel the same as we do about this matter of spring, because we recently received a communication from the Honorable Max Ruben, business agent of the above-mentioned local, which reads as follows:

Special — Important — Read Carefully

"We believe that this Union has taken the most progressive step undertaken since the inception of the Organization, by complying with the numerous requests made by a great many members for Educational Meetings and Demonstrations and Lectures on the numerous late developments in the motion picture field.

"After considerable correspondence, we have arranged to hold monthly Educational Meetings on the third Wednesday of each month (which used to be a regular business meeting night) at our meeting hall. At these meetings we will have lectures, apparatus and illustrations by charts, films and slides on subjects of great importance for the future welfare of the organization and particularly the individual members thereof. The topics will be of great interest and will be delivered by people who thoroughly know their subject.

"If we could only have a 100% turn-out the first meeting, we are positive that not one of those attending will want to miss the future lectures at any cost. There will be only one a month, lasting from one to two hours and after the lecture the members will be permitted to ask any questions in line with the lecture, to which they will be given the answers. There will also be refreshments, some lunch and smokes, and we want everyone present.

"Yours for a successful first meeting and hoping to see you there."

Detroit Motion Picture Operators Union
(Signed) M. RUBEN,
Business Representative

On March 16th the meeting, as referred to above, was held, and "a goodly crowd was there," it being the writer's pleasure to be present.

G. E. Sight—we have his assurance that G. E. does not stand for General Electric—president of the enterprising local, presided over the meeting, explained its purpose and then introduced the speakers for the evening; these being Karl Brenkert and J. H. Kurlander, both of the Brenkert Light Projection Company.

A Hundred Percent "Turn-out"

The hundred per cent turn-out, so ably pleaded for by Max Ruben, materialized in the form of more than 200 individuals, each of whom later appeared to have an almost insatiable appetite for asking every conceivable kind of question, all of which, strange to say, were satisfactorily answered.

The interest of the men who had gathered to hear the "low-down" on such things as spot-lamps and effect projectors may well be imagined from the fact that thirty or forty projectionists, unable to crowd into the well-filled hall, patiently stood for three hours (from 12 o'clock midnight to 3 A.M.) in a rear hall and listened to the lectures through an open door. It was 4 o'clock when the last few stragglers, apparently exhausted of all questions, searched out their hats and coats and departed for home.

We are assured by the offices of Local 199 that this meeting only marks the beginning of an extended series which will be solely devoted to lectures by authorities in the form of manufacturers' representatives who will cover every possible phase of motion picture projection.

At the next meeting, R. J. Geib, and W. C. Kunzman, of the National Carbon Company, will describe the physical and operating characteristics of the various forms of carbon arc sources of light. Following them, generators, reflector arcs, high intensity lamps, screens, projectors, etc., will successively be described in detail by competent representatives of the respective manufacturers.

A Recognized Necessity

To put it rather mildly, the action of the Detroit Local in working out a regular schedule of educational talks and then providing the means for putting this schedule into effective operation is to be highly commended. It can be taken to indicate a high degree of foresight on the part of the officers, since there are clear signs of intense activity in the same direction among other locals which, heretofore, have hibernated in the bulrushes, so to speak, in the matter of providing their members with ready means for acquiring up-to-the-minute information on all forms of projection devices.

This idea of lectures and demonstrations is by no means a new one, so that no credit, if any, can be said to exist, for originality in this respect is involved.

The matter of demonstrations, informed talks and lectures, has long been a recognized necessity as concerns the technical education of the projectionists at large, since no handbook or textbook can possibly serve effectively for this purpose.

Attempts have been made, it is true, to use such books for reference purposes and, in other fields where changes are not so frequent and rapid, a fair degree of success could be obtained by the textbook method. The motion picture business, however, is still young and conditions, therefore, lack the stability so necessary to a successful application of the handbook method.

As a result, wherever books have been published the information they contain has, for the most part, been rendered obsolete even while the books were yet on the press and the passage of only a year or two usually suffices to make them wholly inadequate to meet the needs of modern conditions.

The best such books can do is to present merely the basic fundamentals of optics, electricity and simple mechanics, leaving the more volatile matters of specific equipment design to the field of demonstrative lectures of the type described earlier in this article.

Union Sponsored Schools

There is yet another method for achieving the educational work so badly needed in the field of motion picture projection. The individual locals at last seem to be waking up to the fact that they have a duty to perform other than that of merely assuring their members of a fair wage for their services. In the past, they largely confined their efforts to exercising vigilance over wages paid by exhibitors and to maintaining a fair semblance of order inside the organization. It has only been lately that some of the more progressive locals have realized, in a practical way, that the welfare of the members was based not alone on money, but also upon skill and proficiency in their chosen work. And these items, in turn, were based upon the knowledge which the respective members acquired from various sources.

It should be readily apparent that the locals of the country are in a most excellent tactical position to serve as a centralized source for the purposes of collecting information from individuals and manufacturers and then thoroughly disseminating the material so acquired among its members and apprentices.

The practical way of doing this is by the simple expedient or organizing a School of Projection to which all members and a properly limited group of apprentices would be eligible.

Weekly classes, or as frequently as may be necessary, could then be held and presided over, in turn, by competent instructors in the fundamentals of the various

Day or Night Service from National Supply Co.

"Keep the theatre open against all odds!" That's the order from headquarters passed along to every one of the 31 National Theatre Supply Company stores.

All branch managers have been instructed to furnish all exhibitors whom they serve with "night" telephone numbers, to which an emergency call may be made after office hours.

This action is considered very wise, indeed, as most equipment emergency cases develop outside of regular store hours, and when a breakdown or a fire occurs, time becomes most precious and quick service is pretty much in demand.

A night phone call will undoubtedly in many cases save a shut-down on the following day.

Stanley-Fabian to "Carrier-Condition" 3 Theatres

Three of the large Stanley-Fabian theatres in New Jersey have contracted with the Carrier Engineering Corporation for complete air conditioning and cooling systems to be in operation during the coming summer. These are the Branford in Newark, with 3,000 seats; the Stanley, now being erected in Jersey City, with a seating capacity for 4,300, and the Fabian, a 3,000-seat theatre now under construction in Paterson. These are said to be the first scientifically conditioned theatres in this State. Carrier centrifugal refrigeration, in connection with the complete Carrier air conditioning system, will be used in all three theatres.

phases of projection and once a month, or oftener, lectures and demonstrations could be given by manufacturers' representatives. In this manner, theory could be tied in with present practice in a most logical manner.

It is interesting to note that one large [illegible] started such a School of Projection for its members, but it is yet too early to predict either success or failure for it. Its success will depend largely upon the manner of conducting the school.

The idea is good; let us hope that the execution of it will be likewise.

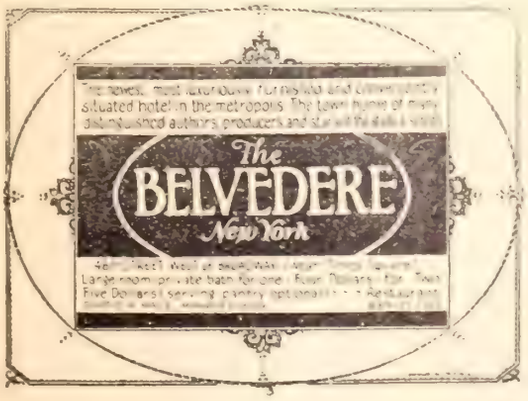
Heywood-Wakefield Special Representative in New York

L. H. [illegible] as special representative for the Heywood-Wakefield line of high grade theatre seating. His office is at the Heywood-Wakefield Show Room, 520 West 34th Street. Mr. Francis for the past seven years has managed the Minneapolis office of the Heywood-Wakefield Company. He is not merely a seating engineer of unusual ability but understands theatre equipment requirements thoroughly. Those who have need for Mr. Francis' services will find him very eager to be helpful.

Construction Under Way on New Buffalo Theatre

Construction work recently started on the 2,200-seat theatre to be erected by the East Genesee Holding Corporation at 1588-1604 Genesee Street, Buffalo, N.Y. The general contract has been awarded to [illegible] architect.

The theatre proper will be completed during the month of August, 1927, while the stores and offices will be ready for occupancy in June. Everything in the way of modern equipment will be installed to make this house one of Buffalo's finest community theatres. The interior of the auditorium will be done in Cornithian style. A forty-foot electric sign will illuminate the theatre's front, and latest ideas in lighting effects will be carried out in the interior. A large organ will also be installed.



Nicholas J. Basil, manager of the Central Park Theatre at Main Street and Fillmore Avenue, Buffalo, is the secretary and treasurer of the [illegible]

Phillip Reister Back at Desk After Illness

Phillip Reister, advertising manager of the Rudolph Wurlitzer Co., manufacturers of organs and other musical instruments, has returned to his desk after a six weeks' siege of illness.

Mr. Reister has been associated with the Wurlitzer organization for a long term of years and was in charge of all the big advertising campaigns when trade in this field was at its peak.

Good business in hot weather

It's easy enough to get if you'll just keep in mind that people want to be cool and comfortable in hot weather—

And to give them what they want.

Typhoons have proved in nearly 2,000 theatres that they deliver the right cooling results at the right price—

And that they pay for themselves the first summer.

Studio Briefs

A part he played in real life is to be seen in film form in "Catalina, Here I Come," a Pathe two-reeler in which William Wrigley, Jr., chewing gum manufacturer and sportsman, offers the Mack Sennett contestants, Alma Bennett and Madeline Hurlock, a reward for their aquatic efforts in conquering the Catalina Channel in the film. These swimming scenes are motion pictures of the actual swim with Mr. Wrigley pictured as shooting the pistol which starts the race.

Malcolm Stuart Boylan, title editor with Fox Films, will report to Allan Dwan within the next few days to title "The Joy Girl," Dwan's latest production for Fox Films which stars Olive Borden. Boylan will later take a vacation, returning to Los Angeles via the Panama Canal.

Billie Dove's supporting cast in "The Stolen Bride" will have Lilyan Tashman, Armand Kaliz, Cleve Moore and Oscar Beregi in important roles. This is Miss Dove's initial starring vehicle. Lloyd Hughes has the male lead.

Lon Chaney will have a new director when he starts work on "The Ordeal" in the person of John Griffith Wray who will start work on the new picture in the near future. "The Ordeal" is a sea story and was adapted from the novel of the same name by Dale Collins.

Virginia Valli and Eugene O'Brien are co-starred in "Flames," a Pathe feature produced and directed by Lewis H. Moomaw. The scenario and story were written by Alfred A. Cohn. Included in the supporting cast are Bryant Washburn, Jean Hersholt, Cissie Fitzgerald, George Nichols and Doris.

The background of the next Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer historical Western starring Tim McCoy will be the campaign against the Creek Indians of General Andrew Jackson. Reginald Barker will direct the picture which has been tentatively titled "The Frontiersman." The story is an original by Ross Willis and Madeline Ruthven and centers around the guerrilla warfare of the Creeks in Alabama and Georgia more than a century ago. McCoy's latest vehicle, "California," has now been completed.

The screen rights to two of Gerald Beaumont's stories have been secured for Gotham Productions by A. M. Landau, of the Edward Small Play Company, acting as the late author's representative. The stories are, "United States Smith" and "The Rose of Kildare."

"The Great Train Robbery," Peter Milne's story, which is included in F. B. O.'s Gold Bond productions for the 1927-28 season, was put into work this week at the company's Hollywood studio, under the direction of George B. Seitz. Theodore Von Eltz is portraying the leading role while other parts are being played by Holmes Herbert, Jeanne Morgan, De Witt Jennings and Frank Nelson.

Columbia Pictures has loaned Dorothy Revier to Fox Films for an important role in "Carmen." Miss Revier is under a long-term contract with Columbia. In the Fox Films production she will have the role of a Spanish dancer. She is also scheduled to appear in several of Columbia's pictures for the new season.

Nat Ross, Universal director who handled "The Collegians" series, will direct "Stop That Man," a feature scheduled to start as soon as Ross has completed the last four of "Collegians." Universal recently purchased the story, an original by Roy Del Ruth. The cast will be all-star.

Additions to the cast of "Anna Karenina," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's forthcoming screen translation of the Tolstoy novel, are Helene Chadwick, Lionel Barrymore and Mario Carillo.

Lucille Hutton, leading lady for Al St. John, is appearing in that comedian's latest Mermaid comedy, "Jungle Heat." Production on "Atta Baby," a Big Boy vehicle, has been started. Charles Lamont is directing the juvenile star in this Educational comedy.

In Tim McCoy's fourth historical romance, "The Frontiersman," which Reginald Barker will direct, the Western star will have two leading ladies—Claire Windsor and Dorothy Sebastian. The latter is also the principal player in McCoy's "California," soon to be released. Other newcomers in the cast of "The Frontiersman" are Russell Simpson and Tom O'Brien. The story is an original by Ross Wills and Madeline Ruthven. The continuity has just been completed by L. G. Rigby.

Ralph Ince's unit will return shortly to the F. B. O. studio shortly to begin another production to follow "Not for Publication." Locations are being sought for the production of "Down Our Way," the Larry Evans magazine story which is to be put into work under J. Leo Meehan's direction. As soon as Ince has finished his new picture, which has a shooting schedule of eight weeks, he will immediately take the "Windjammers of Gloucester" unit to New York to begin filming exteriors.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has added Johnston McCulley, former newspaper man and scenarist, to its writing department. He will arrive in California at an early date.

The racing sequences in Red Grange's new picture for F. B. O., "The Motor Maniac," were taken recently on a location in and around the city of Ventura, California, whose Chamber of Commerce threw open the town to Director Sam Wood and his company.

One of the choicest roles in "The Great Mail Robbery," an F. B. O. production which deals with the marines and their protection of the mails, is to be portrayed by Theodore von Eltz. Jeanne Morgan is cast as the heroine. George B. Seitz is the director.

Richard Crawford, Joan Crawford's younger brother whom Metropolitan recently signed to a long-term contract, has been given one of the featured roles in "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary."

Paul Fairfax Fuller has again been assigned to adapt a story for serial production for Pathe—this time she is occupying herself with the continuity for "Still Face," a Clarence Buddington Kelland story which is running in the "Saturday Evening Post." It is to be an East Coast production. "Still Face" is a working title.

Following the cutting and editing of "Not for Publication," Ralph Ince has departed for Catalina with his technical staff to prepare "Shanghaied" for screening. The story is an adaptation of Edward Montaigne tale, "Limehouse Polly." Ince will both star and direct.

William Orlamond and Edward Earle were added last week to the cast which Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has assembled as Lillian Gish's support in "The Wind." Also in the cast are Lars Hanson, Montagu Love and Dorothy Cummings.

Tiffany is filming "Backstage," a new stage romance. A cast of well-known performers are being assembled for the principal roles.

The title role in "What Happened to Father?" in Warner Bros. coming photoplay of that name, will be played by Warner Oland, contract player in the Warner stock company. John Adolfi will direct the story, which is from the pen of Mary Roberts Rinehart. Charles Condon is now working on the scenario.

With the signing of Florence Ronerts, the cast of Samuel Goldwyn's "The Magic Flame" is now complete and now includes Vilma Banky, Ronald Colman, Rolfe Valencia, Constance Howard, Augustino Borgato, Gustav von Seffertitz, Harvey Clark, Jarry Reinhardt, William Bakewell, Shirley Palmer, Soso Kyrle Bellew, Vadim Uraneff, Andre Cheron, Victor de Linsky, Edward Reinach, Cecil Ray, George Davis, Rolf Sedan and David Mir.

With the preliminary production details completed, Mrs. Wallace Reid began actual production this week on "The Satin Woman," the first of her two special productions, which will be released by Lumas. Walter Langthe is both author and director of the story. The supporting cast is made up of Rockcliffe Fellows, Alice White, John Miljan, Laska Winters, Charles Buddy Post, Ruth Stonehouse and Gladys Brockwell.

The cast of Columbia's "Rich Men's Sons" was augmented this week with the addition of George Fawcett, Frances Raymond and Robert Cain for important roles in the forthcoming comedy-drama. Shirley Mason and Ralph Graves head the cast of twelve featured players. The picture is now entering its third week of production under Graves' direction.

"Wandering Girls" — Columbia Pictures, Chicago

American: "It is well directed and splendidly acted. One of the best things about this picture is Eugenie Besserer, who plays one of the most natural mothers I've ever seen on the screen."

Post: "'Wandering Girls' presents a straightforward adventure story. I think you will follow the little tale with interest and be satisfied with its conclusion."

Herald Examiner: "Well photographed and nimbly directed and it tells a story that holds the attention throughout."

"White Flannels" — Warner Bros., Colony Theatre, New York City

Herald-Tribune: "'White Flannels' is at times one of finest pieces of work we ever saw on the screen. Our advice is, go and see Miss Dresser's performance and use that as a standard for other mothers of the screen."

Telegram: "Miss Dresser gives a performance that is so emotionally honest and so complete down to the ultimate detail of make-up that we are inclined to list it as the finest piece of acting the American screen has shown this season."

Daily News: "Louise Dresser's perfect performance makes 'White Flannels' considerably more than average film fare."

World: "Much is being said currently of the performance of Louise Dresser in 'White Flannels' and even so not nearly enough noise is being made about it."

Post: "'White Flannels' gives Louise Dresser a chance to stir up memories of 'The Goose Woman.'"

American: "Louise Dresser gives a sincere characterization of a mother torn between jealousy of, and ambition for her boy."

ONE MINUTE TO SELL

YOU see people stop outside your theatre, hesitate a minute, then enter or pass on. That brief opportunity is given you to sell your services. Whether you are aware of it or not you are being asked and are answering questions—the same three questions that determine the trend of any business—questions of price, quality and service. What you offer is being compared with what your competitors offer.

The question of quality is applied to the picture you are showing. It is more or less standard as it, or others just as good, may be seen at other theatres. If the picture has a good reputation you score a point. But still you have not sold your particular service. Why should they see this picture at your theatre?

What about the service you offer? How well do you present pictures? That is the deciding question. Do your prospective patrons know that your showing will be first class? That no defective projection equipment will mar the appearance of the picture? Has your theatre a reputation for good projection?

If it has—and patrons quickly recall whether it has or not—then your sale is made, and in the same manner you will win patronage in the future. If you have poor projection—you turn business away.

Good projection is essential to the success of your theatre. It's a matter of good business because it pays a profit greater than its cost. And the surest way to obtain perfect projection is to equip with Simplex Projectors.

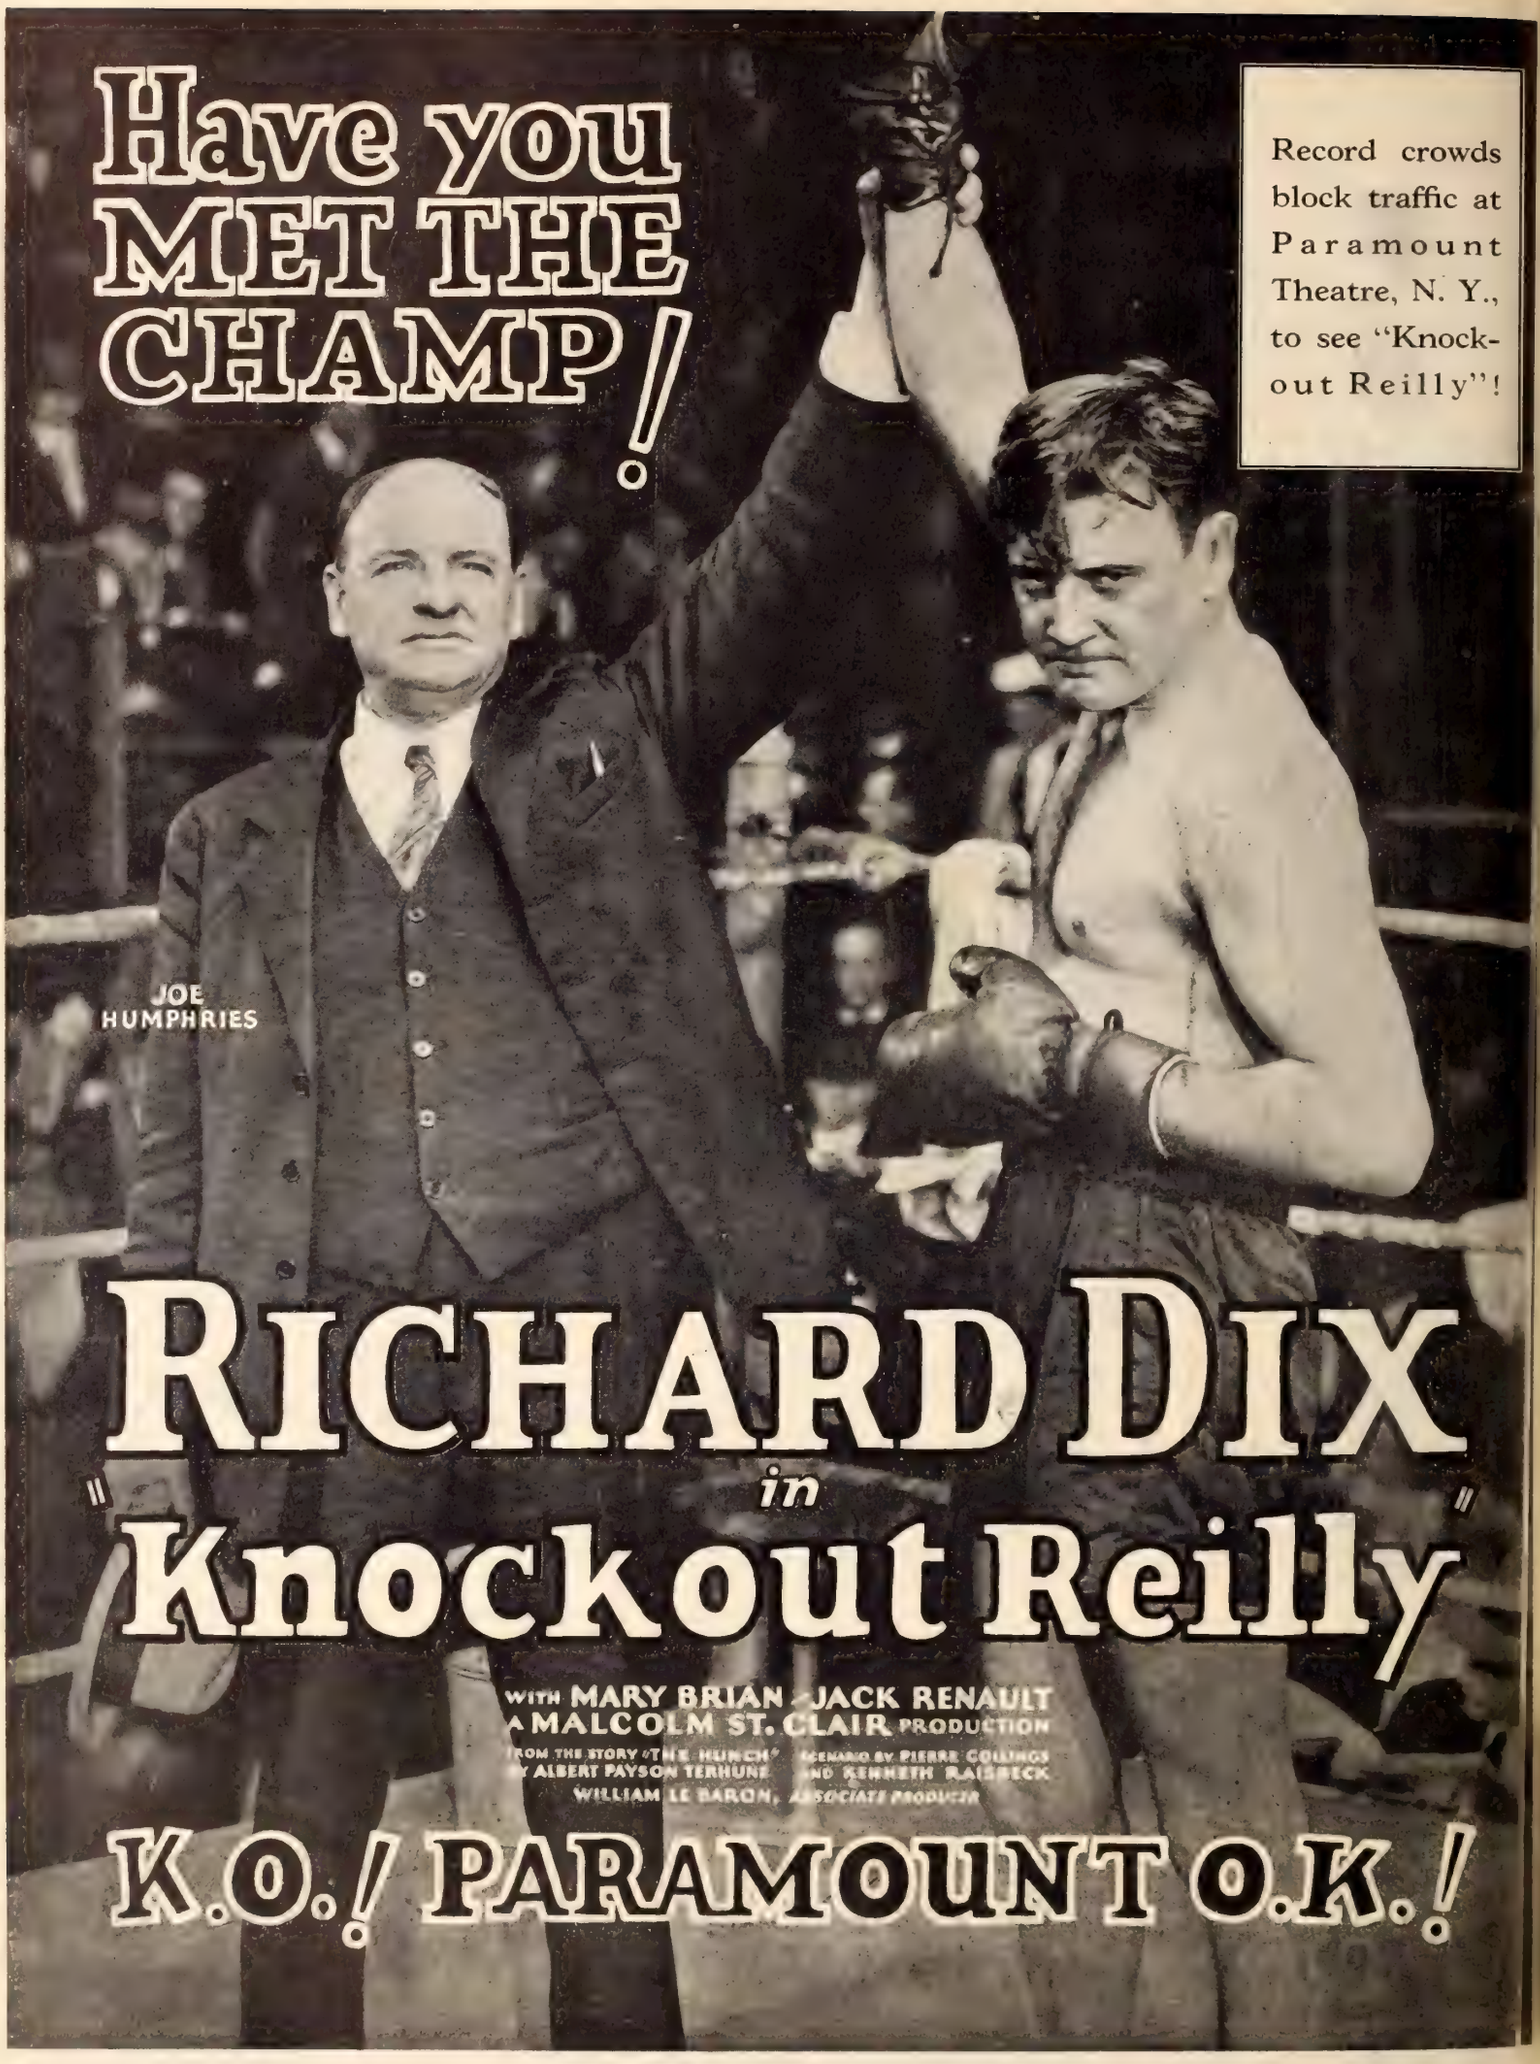
WURLITZER

ORGANS



Under the control of one musician the Wurlitzer unites the world's finest pipe organ with all the various voices of the Symphony Orchestra. No other musical accompaniment is so effective for the proper presentation of feature photoplays. The judgment of America's leading showmen in favoring the Wurlitzer is emphatic.

LETTER FROM EDDIE CANTOR

EDDIE CANTOR
PARAMOUNT FAMOUS LASKY STUDIOS
HOLLYWOOD CALIFORNIA

Dear Mr. Exhibitor:

My first Paramount Picture,"Kid Boots," was so well received that Adolph and Jesse (Mrs. Zukor's and Mrs. Lasky's boys) asked me to make another one. They wanted a big comedy "special" to deliver to you, so I made "SPECIAL DELIVERY."

It's about a mailman, and does he have trouble? Say--did you ever try removing a porous plaster with boxing gloves? I picked this character because he is human, helpful, lovable, and has a whistle.

I wouldn't be a bit surprised if after he sees "SPECIAL DELIVERY," the Postmaster General puts my picture on the two-cent stamps. Can you imagine the sale in my neighborhood?

Jobyna Ralston is my leading lady. She used to be with Harold Lloyd. He is a good comedian, too.

If you played "Kid Boots," of course you'll play "SPECIAL DELIVERY." If you did not--for goodness' sake, let's get together. Look--I'm willing!

Love and kisses, and lots of stamps.

"A MASTER

"The Yankee Clipper"—with William Boyd, Elinor Fair and Junior Coghlan

(P. D. C., May 7; 7,920 ft., 92 to 113 min.)

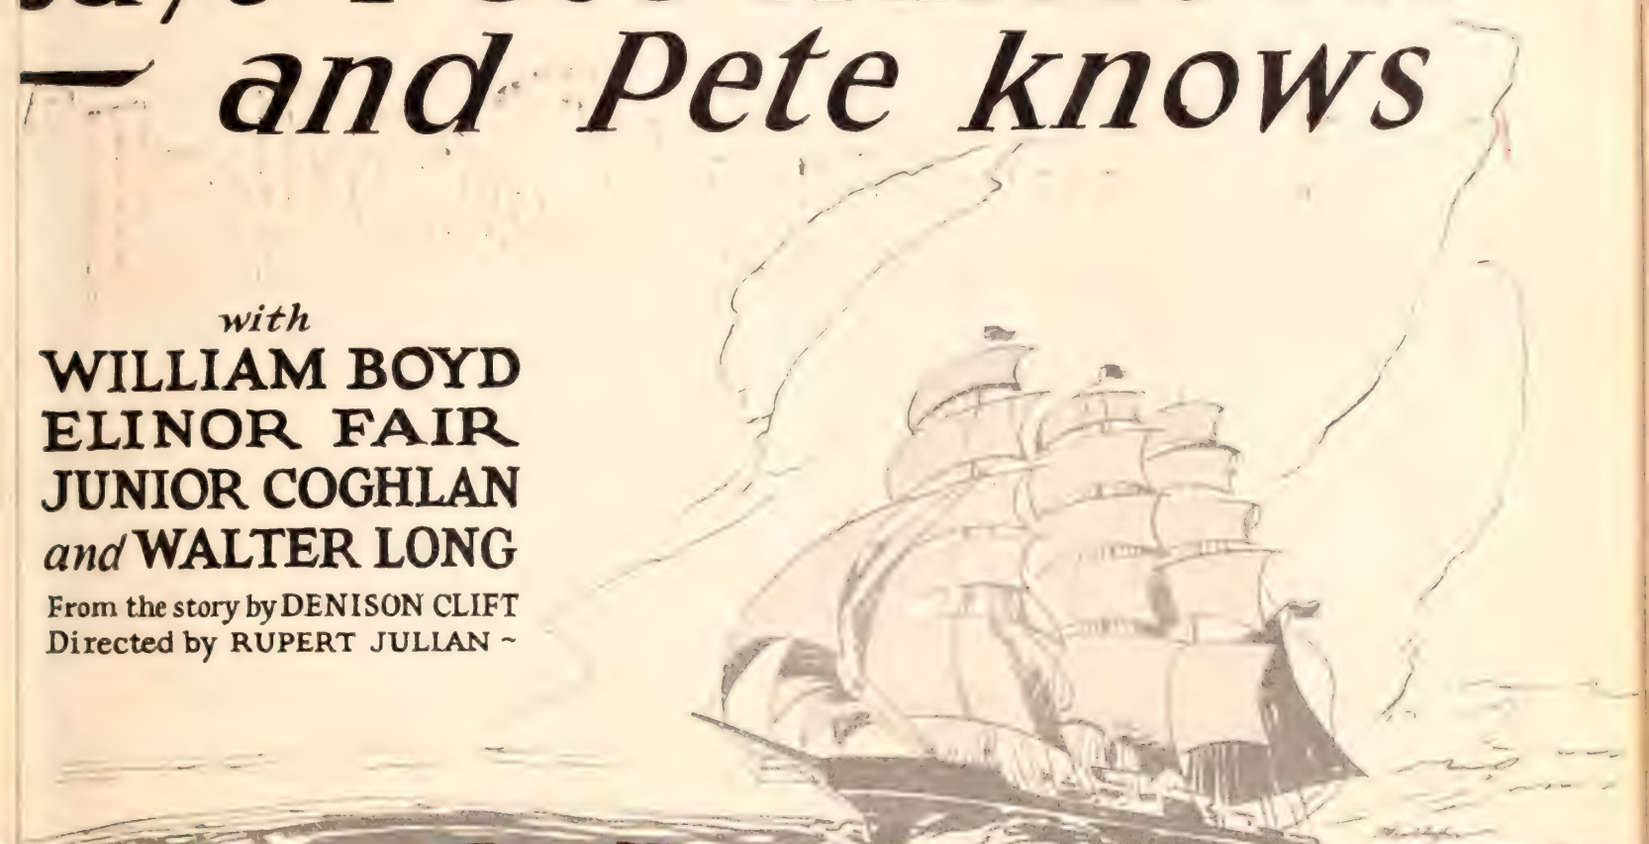
An unusually absorbing and powerful melodrama of the sea. Not only is the plot strong in originality, but it has everything that holds an audience's attention—thrills, pathos, comedy, human interest and a natural, pleasing love story. It is well acted by the entire cast. Particular praise is due Rupert Julian not only for the marine technical skill with which he has directed the picture, but for the clever fashion in which he has kept the action humming at top speed all the way through and for the ingenuity he has shown in making his scenes merge into each other with perfect smoothness. There is a storm scene, in which a typhoon strikes the racing Yankee Clipper, that will bring the members of any audience to the edge of their seats with excitement. It is a masterpiece of realism and of sharp photography. The theme centers around a race from China to Boston between an American and a British ship, the American vessel being the first of the great clippers that in the '50's made the United States flag known all around the world, holding the speed records in the tea trade. This particular race is a thriller, action from start to finish. Besides the storm scene, there are various other situations that stir the spectator,—a savage struggle when the crew mutiny is defeated by the captain and his faithful few, a mixture of comedy and near tragedy when little Mickey, the captain's stowaway mascot, is chased up the rigging by a ruffian with a knife to the end of a spar. Mickey, just as the enemy tries to stab him, discharges a stream of juice from the tobacco he was chewing into his assailant's eyes. The man yells, loses his balance and falls overboard to his death. There is a scheming villain who comes to a bad end; a girl, who is kidnapped by the captain (hero) to save her from the worthless chap her father wants her to marry, and who comes to love the young skipper at the end. The finish, when the Yankee Clipper beats the English ship past Boston Light by a narrow margin and is cheered in sportsmanlike manner by the losing Britishers, is thrilling.



Rupert Julian was ably seconded by his brilliant cast of players. William Boyd is an excellent Yankee captain; Elinor Fair a winsome heroine; little Junior Coghlan never did better work than in the role of the little stowaway; the villain's role is well filled by John Miljan. The plot is founded on a story by Denison Clift. Garrett Fort and Garnett Weston wrote the scenario and C. [illegible] supervised the production:—

READ THESE UNPRECEDENTED AND SENSATIONAL REVIEWS

1 "One of the finest pictures ever turned out by an American director. You will thoroughly enjoy 'White Gold', a picture that merits its stellar place on Roxy's beautiful program."

Dorothy Herzog, N. Y. Mirror

2 "William K. Howard joins this column's list of outstanding megaphone manipulators. Had 'White Gold' come from Berlin it would probably be exploited as an elementally powerful character study."

Rose Pelswick, N. Y. Evening Journal

3 "In simplicity there is strength, at least so far as photo-dramas are concerned. This assertion gains weight in 'White Gold'."

Mordaunt Hall, N. Y. Times

4 "An audience will find moments of dramatic intensity rare to the screen in this film, a remarkable restraint in general treatment and some fine acting."

N. Y. World

5 "Masterly in originality and thought, treatment and interpretation. Go down to the Roxy and see the best photoplay that has come to Broadway in a year of blue moons. It is scarcely possible to praise Will Howard too highly. Goudal is marvelous. 'White Gold' is superfine."

"Herb" Cruikshank, The Morning Telegraph

6 "Each member of the cast gives an excellent performance. Jetta Goudal has never before done anything to surpass her emoting in this one."

Irene Thirer, N. Y. Daily News

7 "It packs a wallop in the form of a last-minute surprise. Miss Goudal has gone far since her first screen effort. She is fascinating and beautiful."

Betty Colfax, N. Y. Evening Graphic

8 "'White Gold' is a moving, honest and completely absorbing photoplay. Jetta Goudal has never been so finely moving."

Richard Watts, Jr., N. Y. Herald-Tribune

9 "'White Gold' undoubtedly will find itself on the list of the ten best pictures for 1927, so don't miss seeing it."

Regina Cannon, N. Y. American

10 "In 'White Gold' Mr. Howard has turned out a picture far more real, more intelligent, more interesting than most of those staggering out-of-door epics filmed at great expense amid authentic scenery. The ending is eminently satisfactory."

Wilella Waldorf, The N. Y. Evening Post

11 "It is the best picture Roxy has given us since the opening of his Cathedral and one of the best that has come to New York at popular prices for many months. Jetta Goudal does as fine a bit of acting as we have seen in some time."

Langdon W. Post, Evening World

12 "Moments of dramatic power are attained in 'White Gold'. Excellently directed by William K. Howard. The characterization is excellent. Miss Goudal played splendidly. 'White Gold' is a commendable effort."

THE MERRIEST BIRTHDAY OF ALL!

—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer celebrates its anniversary with "Rookies"

Karl Dane and George K. Arthur will be your audiences' best friends!

THIS is our Anniversary.
WE celebrate it with
"ROOKIES"—the marvel comedy!

BEFORE a single theatre
HAS shown it, "Rookies" is
THE talk of every film row.

FOR INSTANCE, M. B. SHANBERG CIRCUIT OF KANSAS CITY WIRES:

"Screened Rookies tonight. Absolutely greatest comedy ever produced bar none. Unquestionably will prove a natural at box office. I would be ungrateful if I failed to express appreciation for this one."

THIS is certainly a happy
M-G-M birthday, but remember,
WE give the present—"Rookies."

"MAC" of Daily Review says:

"If the average successful comedy has 300 laughs, you can figure 'Rookies' on a basis of a laugh every five feet. It is a surprise picture. It's got enough entertainment value to pack a big road show production. It will make people talk. It will give them plenty of funny things to tell their friends about later."

This Spring everybody says "Rookies"

SHORT TALKS

ON

SHORT FEATURES

---Spring Fever

The spring fever period is upon us. Stop thinking about what you're going to buy for next season and consider for a moment that you have three or four months of warm weather ahead before you start on a new season.

If you are going to keep your crowds coming while the tennis courts and the golf links and the bathing beaches call, you'll have to avoid monotony; you'll have to give them variety on the program as well as make your house cool and comfortable and inviting.

Cheap vaudeville under the guise of "presentations" won't do it. Certainly "double features" won't do it. Nothing will do it but a liberal use of good short subjects, including plenty of comedy and novelty.

For seven summers Educational Pictures have been adding that spice of the program which builds warm weather business. They are your surest reliance for the dog days that are coming.

To the Public There's Only One News Reel—Pathe News

An exhibitor friend writes one of our branches as follows:

"I have gladly renewed my contract for the Pathe News. Common sense, plus five years' experience with it, tell me that the rooster will continue to be able to crow over the world's best news reel."

We are glad to promptly and publicly express to our friend our appreciation for his confidence and patronage. We assure him that his confidence is not misplaced. We promise him that the Pathe News will continue to be all that he expects,—and more. For his information, and that of the many other friends of Pathe News, we submit the following:

Cameramen of Pathe News

Today a larger staff than ever. Eighty per cent of the old force, in spite of other offers, remained loyal. The stars, Fasold, Harde, Donohue, Baltzell, Hollahan, Delevan, Flanagan and others remain. To them have been added the best news cameramen anywhere,—Sears, O'Brien, Traynham, Blache, Nichol, Zimmerman, La Voy and many others.

The Pathe News staff today is the finest in its history, hand-picked, experienced, enthusiastic. It would be impossible to assemble another like it.

Editorial Staff of the Pathe News

Seventy per cent of the old force intact, to which have been added new men with ideas, vigor, experience. We are satisfied that the new editor, Ray Hall, and his assistants, de Rochemont and Cour, cannot be equalled anywhere. Their calibre is shown by the News today. You know that it is better than ever.

Competition is nothing new for the Pathe News. It has met it in the past, and still remains the best. It will continue to be best. And to the Public there's only one news reel—the Pathe News.

HOLLYWOOD, April 12.

THE motion picture of today, seeking about so eagerly to portray the great moments of history, is outdoing history itself.

In Paris I heard that the filming of the battle of Waterloo in Abel Gance's "Napoleon," cost more than the actual and world-famous crisis itself.

At the Metro-Goldwyn studios I saw the sequences of Chilkoot Pass in Clarence Brown's "Trail of '98"—its conquest by the long, trailing line of goldseekers. Here is "snow stuff" with a vengeance.

Not only is the famous gold rush portrayed with what is assuredly all its magnitude and detailed realism, but the picture folks worked under climatic rigors and danger not by any means endured in the great marathon to the Klondike.

The altitude of the Chilkoot Pass, I believe, is some 4,000 feet. Brown took his army of men to the huge slopes of the Rockies near Denver—the sleds, supplies, tents, Malamutes, etc. The elevation was between 8,000 and 12,000 feet; the temperature twenty-five degrees below zero. Howling blizzards often obliterate the shots. You observe the sequence numbers held up by men attired like Eskimaux. There were many frost-bitten faces, and one man lost his life in a snowslide.

But a great snow picture has been made, and, judging from the interiors I saw, such as Dolores Del Rio on the gold ship, a thrilling epic also of the famous gold rush.

This is rated one of the big ones at the M. G. M. studios. Another is "Old Heidelberg," which Ernst Lubitsch calls his first big American picture.

Finding Lubitsch on a lot is like the search I always have for James Cruze. He moves from one set to another faster than the chart in the production room follows him. I was directed to stage five and found him on number fourteen, directing, with his usual concentration, a close-up of Norma Shearer and Ramon Navarro.

I am to see some reels of "Old Heidelberg" in a few days and will give my impressions later. But that it will be amazingly beautiful I already know. It is being done on an elaborate scale.

William A. Johnston's Survey

A still street seemingly a quarter of a mile long has been built; and one interior set is the most remarkable I have ever seen. Literally a field of daisies, with vales and hillsides has been spread over the entire end of a stage; real sod and the freshly green, growing grass of spring.

"Could not this have been found on location?" I asked.

"No," the reply was. "We could not wait for the flowers to come; and then Lubitsch wanted certain waving effects from the wind machines."

So, also, Nature is being outdone.

* * * *

Another beautiful street graces the lot—the reproduction of Quality Street for Marion Davies' new picture. It was built some time ago so that the houses are now sufficiently weatherbeaten and grass has grown between the flag stones.

Lillian Gish I found in a scene with Edward Earle, under the quiet and studied direction of Victor Seastrom; Greta Garbo, whose recent differences with the studio have been settled, taking test shots with Ricardo Cortez and others, colorfully costumed, for "Anna Karenina"; George Hill, bubbling with laughter as he directed a scene for "The Callahans and the Murphys" with Marie Dressler; Lew Cody and Aileen Pringle in their production "His Brother from Brazil"; Chester Franklin's new mystery production "The Thirteenth Hour"; Reginald Barker's "Body and Soul."

* * * *

This is a busy and colorful lot—this Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. A big one but with, seemingly, not enough space unoccupied to accommodate a bungalow. While the new steel stage is going up—the largest in the world, excepting only the new De Mille construction with its sliding roof—the walls have canvas hung over them and snow scenes are being shot inside.

It has always been Louis Mayer's idea to have plenty of room and all necessary sets all ready in advance for the progress of the picture. Space costs less than salaries.

"We are criticised" he said, "for working here in a garden of retakes." It is a fact, I believe, that some M. G. M. pictures have been all but remade after their completion. Some also, are largely remade from the script, as they go along. This was true of "Rookies," which, from the previews here, is called a rattling box-office picture.

"Well, all I can say is," he went on, "that this scheme of production is superior in results to the factory schedule policy.

"On the factory schedule basis you hand a director his work and make him hew to the line—for the sake of the schedule. Maybe he receives only a day's work at a time. The picture is forced along in this fashion, and in the end the editor gets so many thousand feet of negative—say a Tuesday morning, with instructions to have the picture finished by Thursday night. The editors do their best; the sub-title writers do stunts. And the director sees it all together, and for the first time, at the preview."

"You believe, of course," I said, "in having the picture all worked out in advance."

"Just as much as you possibly can," he said. "But that doesn't prevent you from improving it as you go along, as the opportunity offers."

* * * *

We were having lunch, along with Irving Thalberg, Harry Rapf, Hunt Stromberg and Eric Pommer. Out in the large and crowded lunch room I saw the usual number of foreign faces and so voiced my pet idea of the foreign invasion of Hollywood production.

"It will do good," I ventured. "You are having here a sort of melting pot of ideas. The American director will observe the European's mastery of effects and the latter will profit by the American's ability to please the broad public."

"Possibly," said Mayer, "but I'm afraid of too much technic—lighting and other photographic effects, etc. They are cold. We want the portrayal of human emotions. Griffith's close-up is still the greatest of all camera tricks. We want human realism.

"If the American director is too much influenced by this trick business—which he may

of the Production Situation

think is art—it will hurt at the box-office. And it is expensive—to no avail."

* * * *

Irving Thalberg puts story value highest in the production scheme.

"You cannot build a picture—a successful picture—out of impressive sequences. You may see such sequences in the projection room and believe you have a great picture. It may even open with success, according to the critics. But if the story isn't there, it will fail, quickly enough, with the public.

" 'The Big Parade' was a big picture without its war sequences—by virtue of its story."

* * * *

I am inclined to bet pretty strongly on Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's forthcoming pictures.

The production heads work in harmony and with keenness and picture sense. And they work, too. Yet they don't take it all too seriously, which I like. You cannot create pictures, or magazines or newspapers, with the strong, ruthless arm of the blacksmith nor the deadly seriousness of an accountant.

Along down the studio line at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and in any creative organization there are bright minds at work, which are not greatly heralded—there's also a lot of hard work; on all sides you see and feel the throb of a large and involved job well in hand.

* * * *

One of the best studio stories I ever heard was relayed to me by Howard Strickland, to whose competence I am largely indebted for a most enlightening day on the M. G. M. lot.

King Vidor is producing here "The Crowd," the story of which ought to make it one of his best pictures. The theme is that of a young couple striving to get their heads above the great human mass of the big city. A fine opportunity, here, for descriptive scenes of a big and vital kind.

He had been anxiously searching for the young man lead, and, standing at the studio gate one day, he spied a face among the ever hopeful, often desperate crowd of extras storming the front office.

"Hey, there!" called Vidor. "Want a job?"

"I'll say I do!"

"Who are you? Any experience?"

"Just a ham."

"Will you come for a test?"

"Oh, sure," indifferently. "But I can make good, anyway."

"All right, come tomorrow—at three. Ask for King Vidor."

The next morning a man's voice called the studio.

"Are you people casting today?"

"No," said the operator.

"The reason I ask," the voice went on, "is because a young fellow wants to borrow my suit for a test. All right! I thought it was a bluff."

So the young aspirant never appeared, and King Vidor spent several days of determined detective work before he located him.

This is James Murray, who will star in "The Crowd."

* * * *

Undoubtedly there is quite as much unknown talent in the horde of extras in Hollywood as that which exhibitors want to see in the names on their theatre posters.

And some of it inevitably comes to light.

But for the most part its opportunity seems to hang between the devil and the deep blue sea.

The deep blue sea is the Central Casting Bureau. It was a necessary development and, basically, a good one. Everyone speaks highly of its good work.

But if it standardizes too much, if it serves to make extras a mass crowd, it puts a level roof over the heads of those who should rise.

And the devil of it is that there are not showmen enough among the producing heads to recognize talent even when it is shoved at them; nor directors big enough to take the new names; nor salesmen nor exhibitors big enough to take the same chances.

An exhibitor, it would seem, could easily attract the public's interest in a new screen personality simply by broadcasting just such a story as the one I have given above. Such stories can be uncovered by any good reporter—plenty of them. There are more Mertons of the Movies here than Wilson wrote about.

Hollywood in Review—By William A. Johnston

I am writing these Hollywood articles as sort of long shots on production—an effort to give interested exhibitors an idea of forthcoming programs and pictures. And it occurs to me that a preview of the stars may also be of some practical value in this same connection.

Lillian Gish. The same ever-young, distinctive, highly intelligent actress. She will score, as always before, with direction and story to match her own ability.

John Gilbert and Norma Shearer. They stand high in present popularity, with no signs of slipping. Gilbert will go right along for one reason, I believe; he not only permits but demands the very best talent around him.

Ramon Navarro. He has suffered, as does any star whatever, from a protracted period off the screen—and lack of advertising. "Old Heidelberg" should bring him forth.

Harold Lloyd. All the money he wants but it hasn't fattened him. More keenly concentrated in production than ever. Needs better trade advertising. The most popular star abroad today. Always big drawing power.

Clara Bow. A striking screen personality. Her picture "It" now leads on the Paramount black-board, having gone ahead of "We're in the Navy Now," and "Behind the Front."

Richard Arlen and Charles Rogers. Two clean cut, ambitious youngsters who will flash forth in "Wings."

Richard Barthelmess. Does the best work of his career in "The Patent Leather Kid," a clear cut, appealing delineation of a title part bound to score.

Gilbert Roland. Another youngster of great promise. Watch his work in "Camille."

Lars Hansen. Still another brilliant newcomer. And William Haines, another valuable rescue from the "extra" ranks.

Charles Farrell. In my opinion one of the best young actors on the screen today.

Janet Gaynor. She will be talked about this year.

George O'Brien and Olive Borden. Coming right along.

Greta Garbo. A flashing success. Great career open to her unique charm and ability. Her next is "Anna Karenina."

Dolores Del Rio. "Resurrection," "Carmen," "Trail of '98,"—all following "What Price Glory," indicate clearly enough how this captivating player is to rank in the big ones.

Rod La Rocque. I have a lot of faith in him. Has magnetism, ability. Should come into his own.

Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky. In the flower of their careers.

Colleen Moore. Wonderful drawing power. Cleverly managed by John McCormack.

Lon Chaney. More sight-seers at the studios ask to see him than any other star. Widespread public interest.

Edmund Lowe. Brought cleverly into the limelight by Fox management.

Wallace Beery. As strong as ever but hope he won't be hurt by an overload of hokum.

Harry Langdon. Picked him two years ago as a big bet. Has bright future.

Reginald Denny. His excellent work seems to carry even his story and cast.

* * * *

More later about more stars—as I have something to say. May I also suggest that the above happy words are not slush writing for the morons of the public, but bread-and-butter observations for exhibitors. And a further suggestion: in most every instance these remarkable successes are due quite as much to stories, clever management and studio organization in general, as to the players' own charm or genius—often more so. I certainly have no desire to add to present professional salaries and self-esteem. Both are excessively high.

Pathe Announces Terms of Proposed P. D. C.-K-A-Orpheum Deal

Plans for Stockholders' O.K., Described As Expansion of Pathe, with Murdock President and De Mille Production Head

OFFICIAL announcement was made this week by Pathe that the Pathe-P. D. C.—Keith-Albee-Orpheum deal is now ready for ratification by Pathe stockholders at a special meeting, to be held on May 12. The announcement described the deal as in the nature of an expansion of Pathe, with complete readjustment of the capital structure of that company, through the issue of $10,000,000 in bonds, and other financial plans.

J. J. Murdock, general manager of the Keith interests, will become the president of Pathe, if the plan is adopted, and the board of directors will be enlarged to include Marcus Heiman, president of Orpheum, and representatives of the bankers, the announcement said.

One million dollars in cash and shares of stock are to be paid to consummate the deal.

In his letter to stockholders, Elmer Pearson, vice president and general manager of Pathe, said, in part:

Plan in Detail

"The proposed expansion of the activities of the Pathe Company includes the acquisition of:

"1. A contract with Cecil B. De Mille for the production under his direction and supervision of feature length pictures and the acquisition of various assets for use in connection therewith from the companies with which he is at present associated.

"2. A favorable contract, which does not call for the usual advances of negative cost, for the distribution by Pathe of the pictures previously directed and supervised by De Mille, including 'The King of Kings' and other pictures previously distributed by Producers Distributing Corporation. This contract, besides the highly advantageous elimination of the usual advances grants to Pathe an option to purchase under certain circumstances the pictures in question for $1.00, and

"3. A contract with the well-known Keith-Albee and Orpheum interests for the exhibition of pictures distributed by Pathe, in theatres owned by or associated with them, covering the principal cities and key centers in both the United States and Canada.

"As consideration for the above proposed acquisitions, which in the main provide Pathe with the means of rounding out its product and furnish it with the essential theatre connection, it is proposed to issue 50,000 shares of the Class A Preference Stock and 600,000 shares of the Common Stock and to pay $1,000,000 in cash. It is proposed that the present Class A and Class B Common Stocks of Pathe Exchange, Inc. (upon which dividends of $3 per share per annum are now being paid), now outstanding or reserved against option warrants now outstanding will be exchanged for Class A Preference Stock and Common Stock in the ratio of one share of Class A $4 Preference Stock plus ½ share of Common Stock for each share of the present stocks.

"The managements of Pathe Exchange, Inc., of the company controlling the De Mille group and the Keith-Albee and Orpheum interests in approving this plan, believe that the expansion and affiliations so inaugurated and established will be of immeasurable advantage to the Pathe Company, and will result in its being the best balanced unit in the industry, thoroughly well established in the production, distribution and exhibition of practically every type of popular film.

"The management of your company expects, irrespective of benefit from the distribution of 'The King of Kings,' or from the option to purchase it and the other Cinema pictures, that the net earnings after depreciation, interest and Federal taxes for the first 12 months of operation following the consummation of the plan, will be in excess of $2,000,000.

"A pro-forma consolidated balance sheet of Pathe Exchange, Inc., and subsidiaries as of December 25, 1926, in which effect has been given to the proposed acquisitions, recapitalization and sale of debentures, shows current assets of over $10,000,000 as against current liabilities of less than $500,000, and net tangible assets after deducting all liabilities except the proposed Ten-Year 7% Debentures of $13,000,000, of which practically $10,000,000 are net current assets.

"The annual report for the fiscal year 1926, which is to be submitted with the call for the special meeting, shows that the net earnings after depreciation, interest and Federal taxes were $899,676."

The proposed amendments to the Certificate of Incorporation of Pathe Exchange, Inc., contemplate, among other things, that the company will be re-capitalized so that its capital structure will be as follows:

	500,000	256,739
	1,500,000	704,870

The Class A Preference Stock, also, is entitled, subject to the rights of the Preferred, to cumulative preferential dividends of $4 per share per annum, and after the Common stock has received dividends at the rate of $2 per share per annum (subject to certain limitations), to participate, share for share, with the Common in any further dividends paid, up to an additional $3 per share on the Class A Stock in any one year.

The Class A Preference Stock, also, is to have preference as to assets in the event of involuntary liquidation, to the extent of $50 per share, and in the event of voluntary liquidation $75 per share, and is to be redeemable as a whole or in part at any time, at $75 per share. It is anticipated that the Debentures, which will carry non-detachable option warrants, will be purchased by a syndicate headed by Blair & Co., Inc., and associates.

Fox Roxy Theatre, Seating 5,000, Latest Development in Indianapolis Field

NOT much time has sped since the announcement that Publix had obtained a 25 per cent. interest in the new 3,500-seat theatre being erected in Indianapolis by the Circle Amusement Company and the advent of the latest news of theatrical projects that comes from that city. The latest development in the theatre situation there is the proposal of Fox to construct a 5,000-seat Roxy Theatre as a part of the $3,500,000 Riley Hotel project at the intersection of Illinois Street and Kentucky Avenue. Construction will start on September 1 and it is thought that the house will be ready by January 1, 1929.

With the opening on Easter of the 1,000-seat Colonial Theatre, Frank J. Rembusch has also become a factor in the first-run situation of Indianapolis. Rembusch plans a strong chain throughout Indiana. Universal will build a house at Marion and may enter Indianapolis with a first-run theatre as a large number of houses are planned by the Laemmle Company in other aprts of the State.

"King of Kings" Analyzed in Detail

Tremendous Drama Marks Milestone in Career of Cecil B. De Mille and History of the Screen

APPROACHING the Bible reverently, with the lofty purpose of recording the last year of Jesus and His ministry, Cecil B. De Mille has in "The King of Kings" a work which is a milestone in his career—and in the film industry.

One cannot accept the picture as other pictures are accepted. Its very spiritual significance lifts it above the customary plane of those measured by box-office rules. Rather must one accept it in the light of something distinct and removed. Its very character demands it.

It is a magnificent sermon which needs no translating into the mother tongues of all nations. Words, no matter how grandiose they may be when uttered from the pulpit, cannot cope with the message of the Gospel when it is exposed to the magic of the camera. This magic can turn falsities into realities under the touchstone of Truth; it can give mute, but moving expression to ideas, which, expanding under the searching celluloid, make them perfectly intelligible to all.

On the other hand, the camera can be ruthless in destroying illusions when it is inexpertly handled.

A Moving Sermon

Mr. De Mille has caught in fourteen reels a moving sermon—a sermon which has made over the world and improved it. The most dramatic chapters ever written are recorded in the Four Gospels of the New Testament. These chapters touch the loftiest heights of humanity and sentiment and the lowest depths of intrigue and despair. De Mille, in capturing the message of the Christ so dramatically, had, perforce, to make the Man a flesh and blood figure.

With bold, but sympathetic strokes he does away with all symbolic representation and depicts Jesus as a Man who walked amongst us. It took courage to do that. It took courage to record other departures from the accepted conventions, too. Heretofore, it has been held as approaching sacrilege to depict the Man of Sorrows carrying his Cross to Golgotha.

Yet so reverently—so touchingly has De Mille accomplished the graphic scene that any thought of trespassing upon sacred ground cannot be encouraged for an instant.

Worked Conscientiously

De Mille and his co-workers, Jeanie MacPherson, the scenarist, Peverell Marley, the supervising cameraman, the technical staff, and assistants from the clergy have all labored conscientiously for eighteen months to humanize the Christ and His brief but eventful life.

Nothing has been overlooked in depicting the humble Nazarene during the last year of His ministry. The Bible, naturally, has furnished the background, but the great painters have also been consulted. This is noticeable in the scene of the Last Supper—the figures being grouped and simulating the postures and expressions as captured by Da Vinci.

Speaking about these postures, it strikes us that De Mille has created his best effects through his ability to make the players feel their roles. He has paid particular attention to their manner of expressing emotions with their hands and arms. The qualities of awe and fright and smug self-satisfaction—these so representative of the people who came in contact with Jesus—are eloquently manifested.

Catches Spiritual Values

Yet De Mille has not neglected the scope of this tremendous drama in painting the passing emotions of the characters. The introduction of the Christ is excellently timed so that the audience is receptive to His entrance. Through misty Technicolor scenes the import of His humanity is felt long before His actual presence is discerned. A little blind girl, eager for the light, searches for Him, and from the moment that the Man asserts His healing power one feels that here is a dynamic personality on His mission of uplifting mankind.

And so we follow His eventful last year. Naturally in any exposition of it the story must be episodic. But De Mille has carefully and wisely chosen those scenes which emphasize the most dramatic sweep. Thus we see Christ ever in conflict with the pharisees and high priests—all of whom, fearful of His hold over the people, are determined to exterminate Him to save themselves. We see the Master frustrating them at every turn. If Mary of Magdala approaches Him haughtily to test His power, He convinces her that her way is not the Truth. She gladly becomes a ready follower.

Meanwhile the disciples are not genuine believers. Their expressions show that they have not Christ's understanding of the Truth. One among them, Judas, is ambitious for power. When his high hopes are shattered he plots His downfall.

We look upon Christ in anger ejecting the money-changers from the temple and rescuing the woman taken in adultery. He spreads His humanity according to the Bible—and De Mille has not made departures from it. Even a majority of the subtitles are biblical quotations from the four Gospels—which, naturally, lend an authenticity to the scenes.

Christ has a convincing answer for every intriguing question asked by Caiaphas, the high priest, and his henchmen. They would trap Him over the taxes, but He takes Matthew, the tax-collector, as one of His disciples.

Fine Portrayals

And while the Master speaks the Truth He is also healing the sick. His champions grow apace until almost the entire multitude is with Him. The suggestion of tremendous drama is anticipated. Even the most devoted religionist cannot help but feel it. De Mille builds slowly in order to bring emphasis to the characters and to the impending tragedy on Calvary.

Not a single detail is missing to make it authentic. The costumes worn in Judea during Christ's time, the atmospheric touches necessary to lend a verisimilitude to the settings—all of these are in place.

It cannot be questioned that the most dramatic events are those visualizing the Crucifixion and the visitation of God's wrath upon the death of Jesus. The De Mille of "The Ten Commandments" comes forward here to express in terms of vivid cinema the agony of the Dying Figure. It is an awe-inspiring scene—this tragedy on Calvary. The heavens look ominous as if biding time to offer up their angry protestations. It is all magnificent—as well as the play of lightning and the trembler which rends the earth asunder following the tragedy. The panoramic display, the intimate shots of the multitude, and the crosses silhouetted against the sky—all lend a graphic touch significant in its high spiritual quality.

The director did not work hurriedly here. He picked—and picked carefully when selecting the players. Those most adaptable for the various figures were given preference. Let it be said that the disciples are wonderfully humanized. You feel for the slow-thinking Peter who is trying to understand, and Ernest Torrence humanizes him in true character.

Yet of all those charged with the task of deception are played with the most shading and strength. Rudolph Schildkraut as Caiaphas, and Joseph Schildkraut as Judas Iscariot, make you sense to the fullest the tremendous plotting that enveloped Christ. As for the Central Figure, we will say that H. B. Warner has made Him the patient, kindly, humble Man as He is represented by the great painters and also the Bible. Warner catches the emotional spark during the last half of the picture—and is at his best before Pilate and when he is carrying the cross to Calvary.

Stimulating and Impressive

It is stimulating throughout. And every spectator will immediately feel a deep reverence for this story of the Christ. The response will merit appreciation for the splendid interpretation as each player, from the humblest extra to Mr. Warner, has caught the import of his or her character. Jacqueline Logan seems to be truly inspired as the Magdalene, and William Boyd, appearing for a brief moment as Simon of Cyrene, the cross-bearer, makes his personality felt. It is a tribute to his histrionic growth.

The picture will be talked about by the clergy and the laymen. It spreads not only the Gospel according to the Bible, but also spreads the gospel of art in motion pictures—art which places the camera as a genuine translator of emotions, a genuine recorder of drama, mute but eloquent.

It is indeed a new high point in the career of Cecil De Mille.—L. R.

New $100,000 Theatre Project for Louisville

Louisville, Ky., is practically certain to have another $100,000 theatre within a year. Plans have been drawn for a theatre and store building to be located at Forty-first and Market streets, and have been filed with the building inspector. Ideal Theatre Company is back of the enterprise.

"The King of Kings"

Estimates by Three Members of the Staff of Motion Picture News

BECAUSE of the very great importance of "The King of Kings," which was given its initial showing in New York this week, MOTION PICTURE NEWS departs from its usual custom of assigning one staff man for review purposes, and prints herewith estimates of the picture by three members of the staff.

IN attempting to appraise "The King of Kings" all usual methods of comparison are of necessity discarded. It stands by itself as the greatest sermon of all time. The theatre and things theatrical are forgotten, as before the eyes the 1900-year-old story is told again as no power of tongue or pen could ever present it.

The appeal of this picture is not of the dramatic. Rather is it of the church and the cathedral. Yet with all, it is never tiresome as a preachment nor does it smack of creeds that might offend those overzealous in a particular religion.

Viewed from the angle of the average picture theatre with its high percentage of fans, the production is especially difficult of adequate appraisal. In the road show house it can not fail. In a non-theatrical way it has greater possibilities than any other picture ever made, even "The Passion Play" with its record of 20 years of continual demand. It reflects the greatest credit on a cast of stars and prominent players and is positively De Mille's most notable achievement from a production standpoint. It lacks nothing that money or organization could do to make it tremendously great, but whether or not that greatness extends clear down the line from road show to the smallest picture house only time will tell. No really big picture ever made has aroused so much conflict of opinion among those who usually believe they know nor has there ever been so much indecision among these same persons when an expression of opinion is requested.

The public will appraise in the key city runs. Then and only then will the sponsors or any one else gain a substantial set of facts from which box-office predictions, in the ordinary sense, can be safely estimated—J. S. DICKERSON.

FAMILIAR sign-posts on the road to a strict trade estimate of pictures vanish when one approaches "The King of Kings." It is, by the very nature of its subject, a film apart; and the trade paper writer, in order to stay within his province, must cut loose from nearly all the standards that otherwise would guide him.

Yet the writer, no less than the millions who will see it in the spirit of reverence and awe, comes out of the theatre with the overwhelming impression that he has been a humble participant in a great religious service.

Thus it is that "The King of Kings" is not, in the ordinary sense, "theatre" or "picture" at all.

Perhaps that is why the finest single tribute thus far paid to "The King of Kings" was the profound, dramatic silence in which the first-night audience received it. There was moderate applause at the end, but it passed quickly. On this night in the theatre, the silence of the audience was more eloquent by far than any demonstration could have been.

For the millions, it will be likewise a tremendous emotional experience, moving in its beauty and simplicity and pathos; and crushing in its tragedy.

Differences may arise, from religious viewpoints, with regard to this film. There will be many varied reactions to it. But there can be no doubt whatever of this:

"The King of Kings" is in no sense "entertainment." It is so devout in its treatment, so daring and extraordinary in its conception as to challenge all serious efforts to classify it.

And this further: it is a great personal achievement for Cecil De Mille, a monument of his courage and his handiwork. Whatever the judgment of the future may be, he may rest assured that he has done this industry a magnificent service.—OSCAR COOPER.

WHEN the intermission came at the end of the first part of "The King of Kings," we viewed the picture with a distinct sense of disappointed expectations. We were "sold" on it before the evening of the premiere—not oversold, either, but confident that it would be a great picture—and we felt that it had not delivered. It was a great sermon rather than a great picture, workmanlike rather than inspired, reverent rather than effective.

Then the second half began, and for the first time "The King of Kings" held us as human drama. From that point on it was gripping—intense—moving. The scenes along the Via Dolorosa were heart-rending and magnificent. The Crucifixion was superbly done, as was the catastrophe which followed it. The Resurrection and the appearance before the disciples were all that could be desired.

Two days after seeing it, we feel much the same. Perhaps it is unfair to apply any existing theatrical standards to a picturization of the ministry of Christ—but, after all, "The King of Kings" was produced by a commercial organization and is being released on a commercial basis. Mr. De Mille is not taking his chances, as does a minister, on what may fall on the collection plate in the way of voluntary offerings. Therefore, it seems only fair to the theatre owners who will ultimately pay for it on a straight commercial basis, to view it as an attraction.

No actor, of course, could possibly satisfy as The Christ. H. B. Warner has made a noble and commendable effort. From Gethsemane on, his performance is well nigh perfect—but up to that point, it seems to us, both he and the director have failed to humanize Christ, as they hoped to do. Mr. Warner goes about performing miracles with the faintly humorous air of a prestidigitator—not that he lacks sincere effort, but that his personality did not fit the role in the early effort. He is most effective before he is actually seen on the screen.

As entertainment—if we may be permitted to use that word, without sacrilegious intent—"The King of Kings" fails. It is not even a great motion picture, except in the sense that its subject matter is great, and that its producer has worked in good taste and industry. To call it the greatest picture ever made is to confuse the worth of its theme with the manner in which that theme has been handled. As a piece of direction and staging, its virtues are largely negative—Mr. De Mille has avoided many mistakes, but has not shown greatness in any positive sense.

Religious folk will find "The King of Kings" an inspiration. The irreligious will be the better for having seen it. But we would not class it among the greatest pictures ever made.—L. C. MOEN.

McGuirk Head of First National

Pool with Stanley and West Coast Completed—Lieber Becomes Chairman of Board—No Changes in Personnel

JOHN J. McGUIRK, President of the Stanley Company, was elected head of First National Pictures, Inc., at the annual meeting of the board of directors April 19, at Atlantic City. Robert Lieber becomes Chairman of the Board.

At the same time, the First National-Stanley-West Coast pool was officially completed. Other officers chosen follow:

Richard A. Rowland, first vice-president and general manager; Abe Soblosky, second vice-president; John H. Kunsky, third vice-president; Samuel Spring, secretary and treasurer, and Robert W. Perkins, assistant secretary.

Board of Directors: Barney Balaban, Harry M. Crandall, Jacob Fabian, M. L. Finkelstein, Clifford B. Hawley, Richard F. Hoyt, Robert Lieber, John J. McGuirk, E. V. Richards, Jr., Irving Rossheim, Abe Soblosky, Spyros Skouras, Morris Wolf.

Board of Voting Trustees: James B. Clark, Harold B. Franklin, Richard F. Hoyt, Robert Lieber and Moe Mark.

An Advisory Board, which will meet with the Board of Directors at call of president, taking place of the present franchise holders' committee, is as follows: A. H. Blank, chairman; George Trendle, Tom Same, Tom Boland, Harry Nolan, Abe Gore, John H. Kunsky, I. H. Ruben, and above mentioned directors and officers of the company.

John J. McGuirk, newly elected president of First National Pictures

In addressing the convention, after assuming the presidency, Mr. McGuirk paid a high tribute to First National executives. He said it gave him great pleasure to be associated in the executive management with Mr. Lieber, chairman of board; Mr. Rowland, as first vice-president and general manager, and Mr. Spring as secretary-treasurer, and that he fully appreciated the splendid work that these officers have done in the past. Mr. McGuirk added that the present Board of Directors and officers of First National have the fullest confidence in the executives of the company, and that no changes or additions whatsoever are contemplated.

The Stanley interests are represented on the Board of Directors by seven members, while the voting trustees include representatives of both Stanley and West Coast. Clifford B. Hawley, new director, is a member of the firm of E. B. Smith & Co., bankers for Stanley.

Jacob Fabian, formerly second vice-president, was succeeded by Abe Soblosky.

An optimistic note was sounded by Robert Lieber, retiring president, who declared that "we are all set to go and the future looks rosy indeed."

A banquet in honor of Mr. Lieber terminated the sessions.

Michigan Unit Bans Broadcasting

Richey, Theatre Association General Manager, Asks Exhibitors to Avoid Radio During Performance Hours

A RESOLUTION passed by the directors of the Michigan Exhibitor Association forbids radio broadcasting by members of the association during the hours between seven and eleven P.M., as it has been found that broadcasting during show hours keeps people at home, declares H. M. Richey, general manager of the State unit. He pointed out that theatres have utilized the ether waves to publicize theatres and programs in the heat of competition.

"There may be some merit to this type of advertising," he states, "but the theatre owner who broadcasts his program during show hours is certainly pursuing a policy that eventually will hurt him for many reasons. At first he may be the only one doing it and may get some advertising benefit, but if other theaters see or feel that he is, many more are going to start it with the result that it will not do any one any good.

"Just like country stores. At first it was a few and now almost a majority of neighborhood theaters are in the grocery business and most of them would be tickled pink to get out of it.

"In passing the resolution it was felt that some theatres might want to announce their programs before seven and in rare occasions use the air after the theatre closes. There may be some merit to seeh a plan.

"However, the rule as recommended is no broadcasting after seven or before eleven o'clock. It is a good rule. Let us see if Detroit and Michigan theatre owners can see the wisdom of it or whether they will have to learn through experience. Please report to this office any violation.

"While we are on the subject, is it not about time to get the motion picture business back into the amusement field and out of the grocery and chicken business?

"The organization has taken this matter up with the Film Board of Trade asking for cancellation of all contracts (not just one but all) of theatre owners who persist in giving five-cent matinees (children two for a dime) and other price-cutting methods which are, as you know, contrary to the contract. The contract specifies that no pictures are to be shown for less than ten cents and means what it says. The organization has been assured by the Film Board of Trade that the exchanges intend living up to the strict letter of the contract, and if such contracts are cancelled they will not be renewed. This means that the exchange can fine an exhibitor for violation of the contract as well as terminate the contract. Some may feel that this is a good way to get some old contracts cancelled, but remember the arbitration clause of the contract specifies 'this or any other distributor,' and that makes it different. It should not, however, take such drastic measures to convince theatre owners that five-cent admissions are unfair competition and mighty poor showmanship. It is just another matter that theatre owners must either handle for themselves or havit it handled for them."

The organization also intends to force cancellation of contracts of exhibitors who persist in offering five-cent matinees. Under terms of the contract, ten cents is the minimum price to be charged.

I. H. Ruben and Wife Are Victims of Burglars

I. H. Ruben, a member of the firm of Finkelstein & Ruben, was the victim of a daring robbery last week. Returning from the theatre to his home in Minneapolis with his wife, he found two burglars engaged in ransacking the rooms. The burglars drew guns, and held Mr. and Mrs. Ruben prisoners for 15 minutes while they leisurely tied up jewelry, silverware and other articles of value. They then left in an automobile, taking with them valuables worth between $8,000 and $10,000. Mrs. Ruben, by feigning a heart attack, prevented the burglars from taking her rings and a diamond pendant worth several thousand dollars.

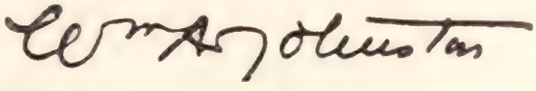
Applying Showmanship to Theatre Decoration.

How "The Beaten Track" was Brought to a Theatre Entrance.

A Dictaphone System for "Listening In" on the Public.

The Main Points Governing the Use of Type in Theatre Advertising.

IN the advance announcement of Motion Picture News' extension of its service to the theatre and the industry at large in the monthly publication of The Showman, the following declaration of the importance of showmanship appeared:



"The Theatre of to-day is a showmanship unit. It works for one single pleasing effect on its patrons. The picture, and its exploitation, vital as they are, can no longer be considered the only problem of showmanship."

That such an estimate of modern theatre operation was well within the limits of a true valuation, has not been questioned. But the accuracy thereof is forcibly pointed again in this issue of The Showman.

The fact that in the modern theatre what we know as "showmanship" is not alone concerned with the selection of pictures, the arrangement of programs and the advertising and exploitation of the show, is illustrated in the unique and remarkable method developed by an interior decorator who has classified and interpreted the public's preferences for colors and decoration, and which is described in detail in this issue.

Again there is striking testimony of the ever-broadening field in which showmanship now functions in the interesting and highly informative account of the ideas and the working program under which a theatre man improved his "poor location" by building up the street, with the co-operation of fellow merchants, as a shopping center.

More evidence there is—the manner in which the "public pulse" is taken by theatre executives through a system of having brought to them the remarks of patrons regarding the theatre or the entertainment, the application of the "atmospheric" style of architecture to the "baby" theatre, for example—and all pointing to the same conclusion. The theatre of to-day is a showmanship unit, and showmanship extends its influence to every element that is part or parcel of the theatre.

A DE LUXE NEIGHBORHOOD THEATRE

C. W. & Geo. L. Rapp, Architects, are the designers of the Piccadilly Theatre, Chicago. It is one of the most palatial of the neighborhood motion picture theatres, located at the corner of Hyde Park Boulevard and Blackstone Avenue, and was built by H. Schoenstadt and Sons. The Piccadilly is designed on the "mezzanine arrangement" there being no balcony. The view shown above, revealing a portion of the stairway to the mezzanine foyer indicates the spacious proportions and rich decorative scheme of the Piccadilly.

View of the auditorium of the Piccadilly Theatre, Chicago, looking from the mezzanine. In proportions and decoration an impressive playhouse.

AN interesting and advanced theatre employing the mezzanine arrangement—a plan which calls for a main floor and large mezzanine but no balcony—recently was introduced to the public of Chicago with the opening of the Piccadilly Theatre, at Hyde Park Boulevard and Blackstone Avenue, in that city.

The theatre, built by Henry Schoenstadt & Sons, and designed by C. W. and George L. Rapp, architects, has a seating capacity of 3,500 and is located in a 12-story apartment hotel operated by the same owners.

The entrance to the Piccadilly is from Hyde Park Boulevard into a lobby, highly decorative in its general scheme. The lobby rises to a height of forty feet and is surmounted by a huge dome of perforated plaster ornament and decorations. Marble columns support the dome. The floor of the lobby is done in an imported marble.

Great length has been achieved in this lobby by extending it to the rear of the auditorium, embellished with a wall treatment of colorful detail featuring allegorical figures which depict theatrical art. A lighting arrangement of unusual scale and brilliancy adds to the attractiveness of this "hall of jewels."

The entrance from the lobby is to the grand foyers, tastefully furnished with tapestries, paintings and works of art. The auditorium is rich in its decorative effects. The walls are lined with marble columns, which support domes in which lighting effects heighten the color of the scene presented to the patron upon entering the playhouse proper. The proscenium arch, surmounted by an overhanging canopy has been designed to give the effect of a mammoth gateway. Large panels moulded in Oriental damask and draperies in silk and velvet are enclosed between the marble columns and the plaster detail of the auditorium walls. The main dome over the auditorium is floodlighted with soft tones of Oriental glow.

Paintings and art objects collected by the owners are a feature of the furnishings and decorations of the parlors, lounging rooms and foyers of the Piccadilly. The accommodations provided patrons of the house about exhaust the list of conveniences and comforts thus far developed as features of the modern de luxe theatres. They extend to a finely equipped playroom, supervised by a trained matron, for children who accompany their parents to the theatre. The playroom is decorated in a spirit that appeals to the child. It abounds in color and has wall decorations featuring animals and figures celebrated in the fairy tales. A nursery merry-go-round and other amusement devices for children are included in the furnishings of the room.

In general design and decoration the Piccadilly is a modern interpretation of the Oriental style of architecture, with richly ornamented ceilings done in plaster, finished in gilt and vivid colors, marble supporting columns, elaborate lighting fixtures in polychrome and ornamented with crystal beads and wrought-iron railings. Warmth is added to the scene of luxury and splendor thus achieved by the colorful drapes and rich carpets.

In the equipment of the Piccadilly the owners followed the policy of putting efficiency and patron-comfort above everything else, and as a result the theatre is provided with the finest apparatus and equipment devices. Attractive and well appointed dressing rooms have been arranged for the actors who appear in stage numbers presented in conjunction with the motion picture programs at the Piccadilly.

Compact Arrangement Features Design of Carolina Theatre

A VERY interesting and compact theatre called the "Carolina" has just been opened to the public. The theatre is located at North Tryon Street and East Sixth Street, Charlotte, N. C., on a plot measuring 9'0" wide by 121'0" in length, with entrance from North Tryon Street through lobby 18'0" wide, and with small stores on East Sixth Street.

The Auditorium proper is 76'6" wide by 95'8" in length, and has a seating capacity of 1440 seats, of which 900 seats are on the orchestra floor level and 550 on the balcony.

Stores at each side of promenade space lead to lounge on mezzanine level and through wide vomitories to lower cross-over aisle of balcony. Directly off this mezzanine lounge are located the rest room, cosmetic room and toilet facilities for women and smoking-room and toilets for men.

Stairs from mezzanine lounge continue up to cross-over aisle of upper part of balcony.

A generous lounging space with rest room, cosmetic room and smoking room, with toilet facilities for women and men, are also provided in basement, and are reached by wide stairs from Orchestra Promenade.

A full-size stage with ample dressing-rooms has been provided, and stage fully equipped with the most modern stage rigging and electrical switchboard equipment.

The building is constructed throughout of fireproof materials, and every thought for the safety of the public has been considered in planning ample width of stairs an daisles and the maximum width and number of exits.

The architects, R. E. Hall & Company of New York, were faced with the problem of creating a design which would tend to give an effect of spaciousness, and overcome the apparent small size of auditorium in comparison with the seating capacity obtained, and in adopting the early Spanish Renaissance period, which permits of the use of large areas of plain wall surfaces, the results have been gratifying.

A rather unique treatment of the side walls designed to represent a garden terrace with column groupings and railings, with the exit doors from balcony appearing as gateways in this garden wall leading to terrace, and the painted murals in panels between columns, with sky and cloud effects and trees painted in soft tones, further enhance this very novel and interesting feature.

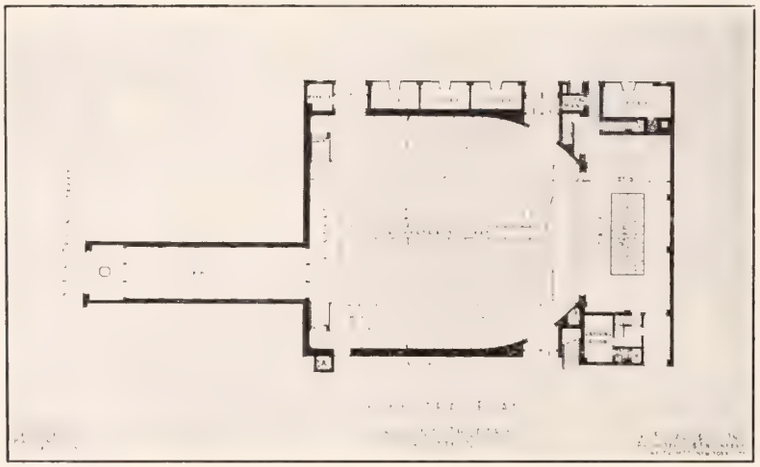
The two organ openings have been ornately treated, as has also the arched proscenium opening, but otherwise the walls have been left without ornament and have been finished in textured plaster.

The mezzanine lounge also shows a treatment truly Spanish in character with textured plastered walls with ceiling beams stenciled in colors. The side wall treatment with center arched niche and raised tiled platform and colored tile wall inserts, and the mirrored panels with simple rope mouldings and groughtiron lanterns with candle lighting.

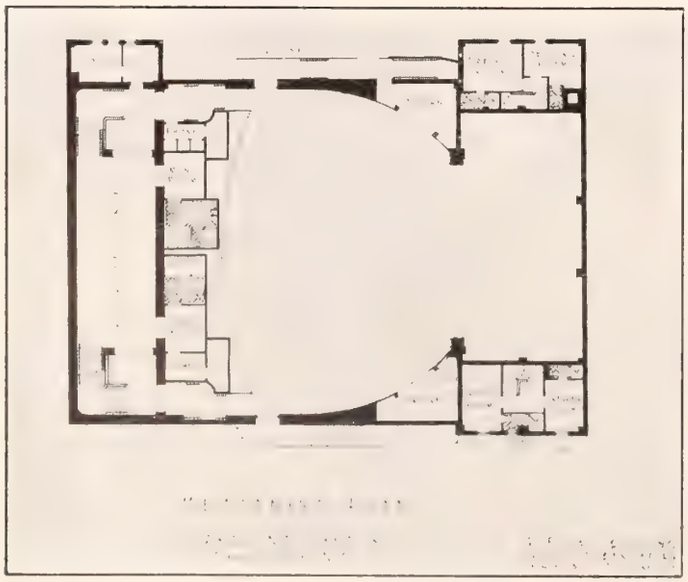
The lounge in basement has been designed in a more simple manner with travertine stone wainscot and textured pastoral walls and ceilings.

The lobby is more in the Italian Renaissance period with vaulted ceiling, rough texture plastered walls and ceilings, [illegible] floor paved in colored marble terrazzo with borders and interlaced pattern.

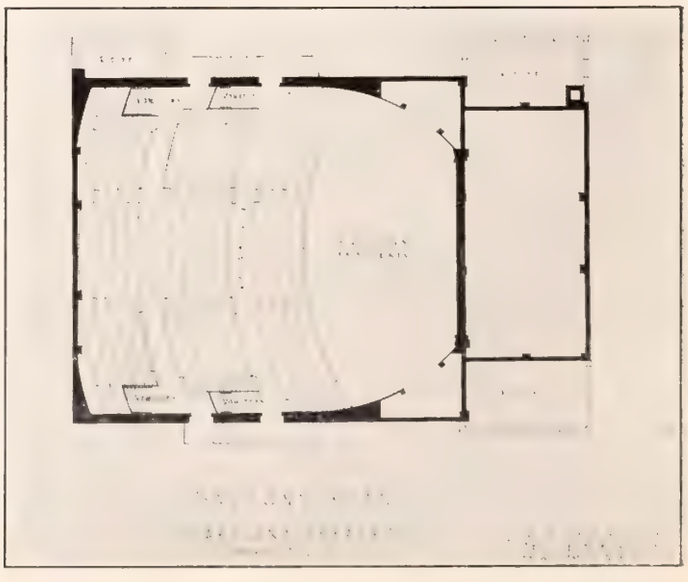
All lighting fixtures have been designed in keeping with the Spanish and Italian influences, and a particularly novel feature for lighting the mural paintings on side walls has been obtained by spotlights concealed in the plaster beams of ceiling. In front of the spotlights have been inserted sheet metal plates cut out in such a manner and masked so that the light is thrown on the pained murals only, thereby creating an added effect of atmosphere to the garden wall treatment.



Concealed spotlights are provided in front of balcony with colored slides providing for several color combinations for stage scenic effects.



The theatre is ventilated and air-cooled by a special refrigerating system installed by Carrier Engineering Corporation. The apparatus is located in basement under orchestra floor, with a cooling tower located on roof of stage which provides for the cooling of condenser water. The cooled washed air is driven by fans through stack, which in turn supplies the ducts which have been installed under balcony over standing rail and over top level of balcony, and are continuous across the entire width of the auditorium. In these ducts are placed air nozzles spaced at regular intervals and through which the tempered cooled air is sprayed into the auditorium after passing through automatically controlled dampers, which regulate the mixture of air which is admitted into the auditorium at the right temperature.



Particular study also has been given to the selection of carpets, draperies, decorations and furnishings which, combined with the architectural features have resulted in a harmonizing, cozy and intimate theatre.

ATMOSPHERIC DESIGN FOR THE "BABY" THEATRE

The Capitol, Grand Island, Eberson's Newest Completed Work

CALLED by its designer "the baby atmospheric theatre," the Capitol, a 1,200-seat house in Grand Island, Nebraska, is one of the latest completed works of John Eberson, theatre architect who originated this style of treatment in the design of playhouses.

The Capitol was built by the Hostettler Amusement Company, and the Universal Film Corporation, and is located on a lot facing 66 feet on Second Street, with a depth of 132 feet, in this Central Nebraska city. The structure is fireproof with brick masonry walls, a steel balcony and steel roof construction. The entire building, with the exception of two small shops flanking the entrance, is devoted to the theatre.

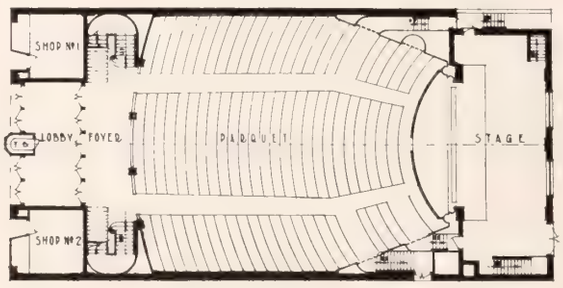
Eberson again employs, in this theatre, the Spanish style of architecture, as developed by Churriguera, which has proved so successful in the treatment of atmospheric theatres he has designed.

The front facade is designed in one mass, with terra cotta trim for windows on a plain diaper-fashion-laid brick, topped with a cornice showing ornament in frieze and terra cotta cresting and finials at skyline. A large verticle sign with channel letters is bracketed out on the front elevation, rising from over the entrance to a point above the skyline.

The lobby is 30 feet wide and provides for four sets of large double exit doors with an island box office in the center. The floor here is executed in ceramic tile with Spanish faience tile inserts. A solid partition with Spanish grillework separates the foyer from the seating space of the ground floor.

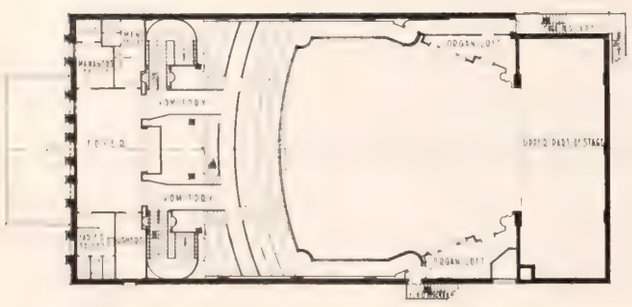
The main auditorium floor is of double bowl design. Two carpet covered stairs lead from the main floor foyer to the mezzanine floor, where there is a large promenade, handsomely decorated and furnished with floor lamps, marble statuary, mirrors and art objects. The ladies' retiring room and men's smoking room are located on this floor. A double ramp leads from this promenade to the main cross aisle of the balcony.

Emergency exits for the balcony are provided on both sides of the proscenium, leading directly to outside fire escapes.



The interior of the Capitol represents a formal Spanish patio in "Churriguer-esque" style, executed in palmed plaster and enhanced with statuary, tree tops, vines and blooming trees. Interesting garden gateways are silhouetted against the mediterranean blue sky. The installation of a lighting system which produces the sky effects in the lobby as well as the auditorium is an important feature in creating the desired atmosphere.

The two sides of the auditorium are not treated symmetrically. The left wall reproduces an Italian palace facade, with niches and statutes and enriched by bas-relief and urns. The grilles at the windows of the palace on the left show Spanish Moorish influences.



Both the main floor and the balcony aisles are carpeted and the lighting fixtures, floor lamps and torcheres are replicas of Spanish wrought iron work. The illusion created by the open air treatment is elaborated by the lighting.

RED—	Probably "humanity's favorite color"—is best suited for decoration in the large downtown de luxe theatres in large cities, catering to great variety of types, and for the community theatres in sections where the so-called primitive classes predominate.
BRIGHT GOLD—	In the same category as red, for use in the large de luxe theatres.
ORCHID—	To be used only in connection with warmer color on walls in Northern cities, and with green if house is of smaller type located in the South. It suits the de luxe theatre better than any other type and in this regard classes with red and bright gold.
OLD GOLD—	Known as a "safe" color for theatre decoration, as it strikes a balance. However, it is lacking in wearing qualities, its life being about a year, after which it fades into a dull brown devoid of theatrical qualities. It is at its best in picture theatres in the high class neighborhoods.
BLUE—	In the deep, bright phases a color suitable for use in the larger houses and where elemental appeal is desired.
LIGHT BLUE—	In the "sky" and turquoise phases desirable for theatres catering to refined type of patronage. It is a cold color and requires something to add feeling to the scheme, gold trimming being especially successful in combination with these shades—which, owing to their action under artificial lighting must be handled with great care.
JADE GREEN—	Closely related to the light blues with regard to the type of theatres in which it may be employed successfully. It "belongs" in theatres having a refined clientele, and in houses in southern cities.
ORANGE HENNA—YELLOW	Warm colors but not generally successful for theatre use, save in the treatment of the stadium type of house and theatres of Spanish design, where these are highly effective.
ROSE—	A good color for the smaller houses built on the one-floor plan, but never desirable for the larger theatres with impressive proportions.
DARK GREEN—	A color having no theatrical qualities and one to be avoided in the decoration of theatres, for it has no real place there, except of course to be seen in the occasional shrubs used for decorative purposes.

Showmanship and Interior Decoration

SOON after it was discovered that a theatre, by reason of its impressive architecture and sumptuous furishings, could be capitalized as a co-attraction of the entertainment, enhancing the drawing power of the motion picture and stage shows which it housed, there began a systematic study of the public's reactions to various types of theatre decorations. Specialists in the art of decoration started to experiment in an ambitious endeavor to evolve a method whereby a guiding principle might be applied in this department of "show business" just as it always has been in the arrangement of entertainment programs. In a word, the interior decorators were applying "showmanship" to their art.

After all, there was nothing visionary about the belief that just as certain types of people had a preference for a certain type of show, so might these individual tastes extend to notions as to what was "beautiful" and "artistic" in color schemes and decorations. Accordingly the theatre decorators set out to classify and interpret the public, the theatre and interior decorations each in relation to the other.

Showmanship in conjunction with theatre decoration has carried on where advertisers left off in their investigations regarding attraction value and an answer to the question "what is humanity's favorite color?" For with the former it was a matter of finding out as well what types of people like a certain color, and what colors have the greatest "attraction value" under varying and various conditions—the size of the theatre, its location, the type of show presented in it, the operating policy, the class of people catered to, etc. All these, of course, in addition to the artistic principles which must be observed in successful decorative schemes.

The study of color in theatre decoration has produced an answer to these questions, with the result that there is now in use by Miss Ann Dornin, in charge of theatre decorations for the Loew circuit, what amounts to a "color chart" indicating the schemes to be used under these specific circumstances.

Miss Dornin entered the theatre field as an architect, and during her association with the firm of Thomas Lamb, leading theatre architect, she won distinction in the practice of the profession before turning her talents exclusively to interior decoration. Miss Dornin is still associated with the Lamb firm, but she has been "loaned" to the Loew theatre department to direct interior decoration work in all theatres of the circuit.

The colors listed here as desirable for use under the conditions specified are not the result of guess work or personal preferences. Personal preference, despite the fact that it may well indicate good taste, is not necessarily an index to public preference—and public preference is the foundation upon which the whole structure of "showmanship" rests. Nor will "art" serve as a guide, for in theatre decoration, just as in motion pictures and plays, what is "artistic" and what is "popular" are not necessarily one and the same thing.

The reduction of the subject to a formula seems not a little astonishing. But it has been done, and a fair question for the theatre "doctor," diagnosing the case of a theatre which is failing to develop the business expected of it, might well be: "is your color scheme right?" For just as the manager sizes up a neighborhood and a theatre he is to operate and decides "shoot 'em up Westerns are what is wanted here," the theatre decorator may say "strong elemental appeal is needed in the decoration, warm reds and plenty of color must predominate."

There have been many instances where the change of a color scheme to something better suited to the type of theatre and audience catered to have been reflected in box office receipts. The first case was in connection with a medium-sized theatre located in one of the smaller cities. The house, acquired from an independent operator through purchase by the Loew Company, did not flourish under its former management. Yet the policy seemed to be right, the house was modern and in good condition, the method of advertising the shows followed sound principles. Under the new regime there was contemplated no decided change as to the type of shows offered, but simply refinements in the operating methods. It was decided to refurnish the theatre before opening it under the Loew banner, and then and there the showmanship of interior decoration proved its worth.

The theatre drew upon a patronage of a rather refined class. People in good financial circumstances, and enjoying educational and social advantages inhabited the neighborhood. The interior of the house originally had been done in a rather garish tone, featuring vivid reds and elaborate furnishings. It was redecorated on an entirely different plan, with a more refined treatment using blues, with a warming note contributed by gold, and furnished with objects in harmony with the scheme. With practically the same program policy, but with this new decoration the theatre reopened to improved business, and the management received, and still receives many compliments upon the attractiveness of the draperies and such furnishings as lamps, chairs, etc.

It is a well-known fact that color, which plays an important part upon the emotions—its appeal is emotional and not intellectual—and has the power to attract attention, to cheer and animate, or quiet and subdue, can be made to build up a suitable atmosphere for any situation. The theatre must be beautiful as well as entertaining. But ideas of beauty vary, and that there is a relation between the tastes regarding picture entertainment and color values is the point at which these experiments by Miss Dornin had their beginning.

The warm, or irritating colors—red, orange, yellow—proved the most successful in cases where the community drawn upon was made up mainly of the more primitive classes, while the cool or restful colors, such as blue, green, violet, made the greatest appeal in the more refined neighborhoods. However, there are other considerations. The size of the house, for one thing, the climate, for another, and there is always, of course, the design of the theatre itself to be consulted.

Since at a distance colors become modified and outlines become softened, the vivid colors lose some of their brilliance in the large houses. Moreover, since the large downtown theatre in a large city caters to all classes, the most desirable colors for use in these houses are the reds, bright gold, deep blue and related colors. Red, of course, is the most generally liked color, though psychologists appear to have established the fact that most women like red, while the male preference is for blue.

Below—a corner in the ladies' room of the State, New Orleans. Wall and ceiling drapery is of natural pongee with fringing of red

Blue, owing to its bad action under artificial light, especially in the lighter phases of the color, must be used very carefully in theatre decoration. The dark, bright blues take artificial light better than the other shades, and are the choice where this color is demanded.

Pale blue, sky, and turquoise blue, are suitable for treatment in theatres catering to the more refined patronage. It is a cold color and requires something to give it more feeling, gold trimming being especially successful for combination with it.

Rose has been found to be a good color for the smaller houses—theatres built on the one floor plan, but it is never desirable in the larger theatres with impressive proportions.

So the "color card"—which is printed here and which was evolved by Miss Dornin—goes on to give the key to "showmanship" in theatre decoration.

Naturally, the scheme must observe the principles of interior decoration as an art. There must be style, which, of course, is something individual to the decorator. Like everything else, decoration may be studied, but style is a person's own expression, not usually of what has been learned, but of what is in the person because of that learning. The scheme must not violate the rules prescribed by the design of the theatre itself, but "showmanship" may be consulted in the effort to harmonize this with public preference on the basis of compromise.

Above all things, Miss Dornin says, there must be some thought behind the decorative scheme. There is the case of the Loew's State Theatre in Norfolk, by illustration of this "thought." The people of Norfolk pride themselves on their Colonial traditions, and the popular taste naturally runs toward furniture of that period. Accordingly when Miss Dornin planned the decoration of the theatre she aimed directly at this popular fancy. The ladies' room was furnished with Colonial objects, pieces purchased in the town. Wallpaper with a ship design, harmonious with an environment of a seaport, was used in the treatment of the walls. The State has proved an eminent success from the standpoint of decoration because of the thought which was the guiding principle of the scheme.

Another case of redecoration on a plan to meet the fancy of the people catered to is that of the Grand Theatre in Atlanta. The house was taken over by the Loew circuit and minor changes were made. The lobby, somewhat crude in design, was entirely unsuited to the purpose of appealing to the type of people drawn upon. The patronage is of a high class and the lobby lacked the note of warmth and quality necessary to make it appeal. Some of the coldness was taken out when a large rug was laid over the tile flooring of the lobby. Blue was used in draperies over the doors leading to the auditorium and the ladies' room. A floor lamp and a few chairs, gold trimming for the blue drapes, and amber lights in the crystal chandeliers added tone and warmth. Another bad feature was the brass railing used to divide the lobby at the door entering near the stairway to the balcony. The railing was removed, and in its place a very heavy divan table was used with a chain, velvet covered, from the corner of the table to the doorway.

Decorations in the auditorium are handled with great care to avoid competition as it were with the stage or screen. The stage is the focal point of the auditorium, and there the color scheme reaches its climax.

Warmth is a factor which must be achieved in all these decorations. Even in theatres in Southern cities the cool effects desired in order to achieve a successful atmosphere for entertainment must be enlivened by warmer notes in the stage drapes and the lighting fixtures. It is the rule always to use the warm colors in lighting fixtures, chandeliers and wall brackets as well as lamps.

One of the most successful decorative schemes for a Loew theatre in a Southern city is that which was designed for the State in New Orleans. Here the cool effect was gained by the use of a jade green treatment of the walls—the lower portion that is, since the ceiling and upper walls require a lighter treatment under all conditions. But the jade green color dominated the auditorium with orchid drapes used in the proscenium arch and over the stage boxes. The chandeliers were fitted with flame colored lamps. The ladies' room was draped in pongee silk—natural color—with a rose fringing to brighten and add feeling, while another portion of this lounge was done in light blue, the lights in all instances being flame color.

With certain modifications, necessitated by such factors as the design of the theatre and artistic principles governing the use of color in decoration, the "color card" which has been evolved may be employed as a reliable guide for the theatre decorator. It has proved out in many practical applications in theatres and marks another advance in the development of "showmanship" in theatre design.

Earnings Increased—Expenses Decreased

IT is not often that you can increase your earnings by decreasing your expenditures. But that is exactly what you accomplish when you instal Incandescent Lamp Projection.

You improve your projection because the Incandescent Lamp gives light of a tonal quality that is easy on the eyes of the audience, and that gives pictures greater depth and cleaner outlines; light that never flickers or varies in intensity because the light source is permanently fixed. And improved projection means better business.

At the same time you decrease your expenditures because Incandescent Lamp Projection requires much less current than ordinary arc light projection.

If your theatre has a seating capacity of 1000 or less and your "throw" is not more than 120 feet you can take advantage of this sure way of increasing your profits.

Earn more and save more by installing Incandescent Lamp Projection. And be sure the lamps you use are of the highest standard of quality. Insist on Edison Mazda Lamps. There are none better.

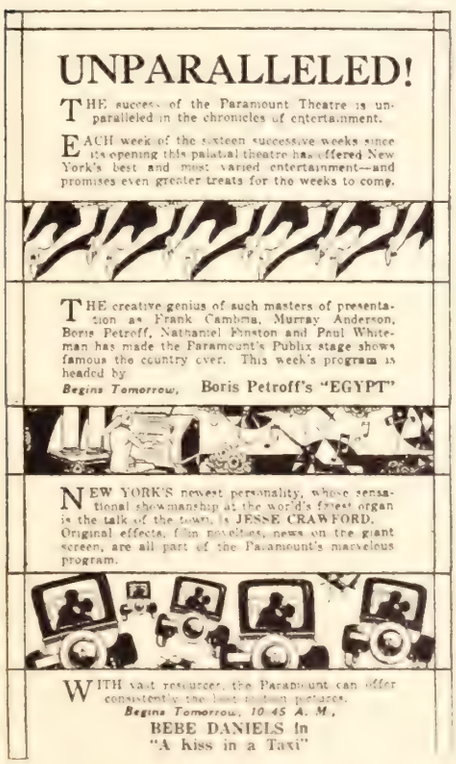
Organ Showmanship on the Crawford Plan

By E. G. Johnston



ANY passer-by on Broadway in the vicinity of Times Square cannot help but notice the handsome marquee that adorns the main entrance of the Paramount Theatre. It performs its usual function: that of telling a theatregoing public of the feature attractions offered for the week at that big playhouse.

Ever since this theatre's premiere, one of the most colorful affairs that ever took place along the Rialto, another billing in addition to that of the feature picture has appeared in brightly illuminated white letters. And it is that name which we propose to tell you of—and why Publix saw fit to put it there.

Back several years ago in the city of Spokane, Wash., a young fellow in his early 'teens, by name Jesse Crawford, queried to himself: "What is the shortest route to Broadway and fame?"

This young man was a musician, and a pretty good one, even at the age of 14, for he had what is called "an ear for music"—that "IT" of color and tone, and akin to that indescribable something which Elinor Glynn uses for a theme in her latest photoplay, denoting a very particular flair for music, sex appeal, a judge of good liquor, or what have you.

A piano at this time claimed this young fellow's undivided attention. Next, he turned to the task of conquering the intricacies of an organ. He had no musical education beyond that "It" which we have already mentioned and perhaps the fact that he had not at that period of his career studied compositions of the old masters.

accounts in a large way for his present position as organist of the Paramount Theatre. For there he came after being associated with some of the leading showmen of the Northwest, the Pacific Coast and the Middle West. The Chicago Theatre, Chicago, was his last stop en route to Broadway.

Now let us see just why Publix officials saw fit to engage the services of this musician at a salary which probably exceeds that of any organist in this country, or anywhere in the world; why they gave him permission to co-operate with a leading organ manufacturer in the building of a new instrument with carte blanche as far as expense was concerned; why, after the instrument was installed, they put his name up on the marquee and also played it up in newspaper advertisements, and why from eight to fifteen minutes of each day's program is devoted to a rendition from the organ.

Although we propose to go into considerable detail, the foregoing "whys" could be explained in a few words. The answer is this: Jesse Crawford is not only an organist with a world of past experience to draw upon, but he is in addition a showman in every sense of the word. Showman or salesman, call it whatever you will, but it is this quality combined with his musical technique that enables him to put his part of the program over. That knowledge of knowing just what to feed his audience, how to start, when to stop and how to stop.

As in all numbers, be they musical ones such as Mr. Crawford's or of the vaudeville stage, the art of knowing how to finish is the fine effort—the coup de grace of the artist. Not that we refer to Mr. Crawford's work in this remark, but many a mediocre act has undeservedly flourished among the vaudeville circuits for the simple reason that one good effort was made at the very end of the number. Now, Jesse Crawford's number is good all the way through—but he also sees that a strong finish is made.

On the left is part of an institutional ad. for the Paramount Theatre, New York. Note method used to feature Jesse Crawford's organ presentations equally with stage show and picture

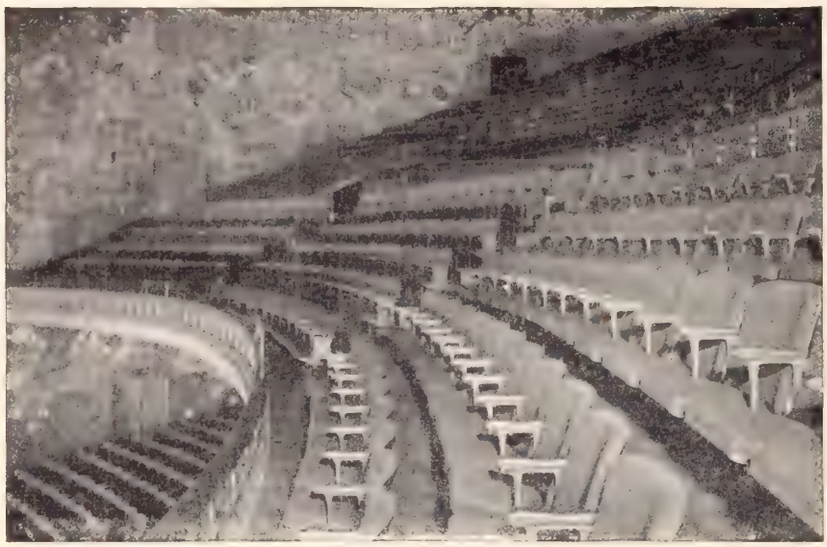
The main reason for the above is explained by Mr. Crawford in this way:

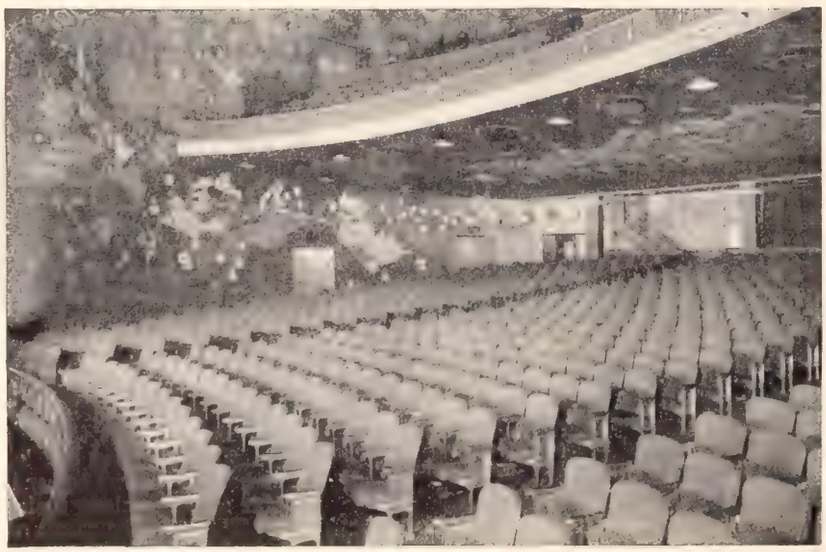
"In the audience there may be, and probably is a percentage who may not be particularly inclined toward an organ number, or who really cannot appreciate the amount of time necessary to prepare an orchestration of this nature. Certain fine points caught by music lovers, go completely over the former's heads. Well, I'll at least send them out of the house thinking: "Gosh! that's some powerful organ."

The big factor in the successful arrangement of an organ number calculated to impress the average audience is the careful "blending of effects and tonal color," according to Maestro Crawford.



As previously mentioned, there was a marked absence of any musical education applied during this organist's early years. Lately, however, he has assiduously undertaken to find out most of what there is to know about music.

But, as he will tell you, the very fact that there were no set rules to lead him along certain defined lines of composition, it gave free rein to that "IT" which we have already told you of. There was nothing to hold him down to rendering the more popular melodies along their usually simple lines. This had the result of producing an entirely different arrangement of the different numbers, and at the same time, the original melody had been kept intact. The art of doing this is a gift. It does not come from the pages of musical textbooks.



As analogical to the efforts of Mr. Crawford we might mention the arrangements of Teddy Grofe's, head orchestration man for Paul Whiteman and his present group of thirty-one players. If Mr. Grofe did not spend practically all his time striving for something new and different, the popular or jazz numbers would soon become monotonous with their repetition. Other music,

"Listening In" on Patron Remarks With the Report System

EAVESDROPPING may not be commendable, but it becomes a business virtue—bringing its benefits to patrons and showmen alike—when applied to the public by a theatre management. In a business which has as its creed, "let your patrons be your guide," doesn't it seem expedient and justifiable to "listen in" on what the public has to say about the show, the theatre, the decorations, prices, orchestra, etc.? And Eavesdropping on the public is a form of occupation now in practice among the Publix theatre managers in San Francisco.

They have installed a regular and efficient system, a machine which uses the ushers, cashiers, doormen and others on the house staff, as human dictaphones. And they have gained many a valuable tip on how to improve not only their shows, but their lobby decorations, newspaper advertising and even a tip came over the wire in this way to boost the price of admission, which was done and which worked beautifully for everybody.

The system is worked in this way:

Printed report slips, providing space for remarks about the feature, comedy, music, specialties and "remarks in general" are distributed to ushers, cashiers and doormen. The slip also includes, on its reverse side, a space for "best ideas," to be suggested by the employees and the best of which are accepted and paid for at the rate of one dollar each.

The "reports" however, are merely verbatim remarks made by patrons and overheard by the employes.

"The ushers and usherettes," General Manager Edward B. Baron, of the Publix theatres in San Francisco, explained, "are given pencils and a good supply of these slips when they go on duty.

Instructions to Employes

"We expect to receive reports from all of them, but there is no pressure brought to bear, for there is strict avoidance of anything that would induce an employe to obviously eavesdrop on conversations between patrons. Those remarks which can be overheard without any aggressive 'listening in' are the ones which the staff members are supposed to pass on to the management.

"We demand of the ushers and usherettes that the reports be accurate and true, as we do not care for merely reports that are made up and not truthful. Our house managers and other executives watch the attitude of the ushers to see whether or not they are sincere. Any indication that an employe is not sincere in this part of his or her work, brings a reprimand and instructions to exercise more diligence and watch for genuine reports.

"Occasionally ushers will develop the idea that they can advance themselves by turning in a large number of reports and in the effort to do this make up many 'remarks' to turn in. But they soon find that this doesn't work, for we watch not only for that but also to see whether any of them are prejudiced to or against the feature or other unit on the bill. Entire absence of bias is demanded, and it is remarkable how sincere our employes are in this work.

"The ushers are not permitted to make out their slips where the patrons may observe them writing down the audible comments. In most cases these remarks are committed to memory and jotted down on the slips when the employe returns to the dressing-rooms."

How Reports Are Written

The men and girls employed at the Publix theatres in San Francisco make the several reports each day and turn them in to the men in control, who are guided by the opinions of the patrons of the theatres in the selection of other pictures and often the musical leaders judge their pieces for the future from these report slips.

The ushers and usherettes and all who sign these report slips can tell the other one what they wrote on their slips and presented to the management, but they are not supposed to exchange ideas beforehand, for if this were done, it is said, truthful ideas would not be given and the management could not really tell how many favored or disliked a picture, specialty, presentation act or musical piece. Nor could it be discovered, as an example, what is thought of a certain uniform, lobby display or the looks of the theatre in general.

It was pointed out to the writer that even costumes were decided upon by these report slips and lobby displays, in many cases, were copied after what the patrons said to their friends after seeing a lobby.

One of the advertising men of one of the local Publix theatres said: "Many of my ideas for advertising are taken from these reports. My reason for stating this is that some patrons of the theatres often say, 'I thought from what the advertisement stated it would be a bigger and better picture than we saw,' or the report may be that they didn't expect such a good picture, only coming to hear the music or see the comedy as the advertisement did not give it justice. This all helps me in writing my advertisements and telling me just what appeals to the public, what they expect and what they look at our advertisements for."

Value to Theatre Executives

Besides helping the advertising man, the house manager, the executives in the selection of pictures, the musician and the producer of the presentation acts, in one case a report on a slip gave an architect an idea for the fixing up of the lobby.

It happened in this way. A report was made in one of the dailies that a certain theatre's lobby was to be cleaned and fixed up that season. A progressive young usher heard the patron, who was leaving the theatre that night after witnessing a picture remark: "I see by the paper this lobby is to be fixed up again. Well they certainly should fix it, even though they seem to keep it nice and clean, it would be much more comfortable if they would have velvet covered brass or steel bars which the patrons could take a hold of, not lean on, but just take a hold of, while they were waiting to enter the theatre. The plain brass ones often are cold, I think, and makes one feel uncomfortable." This report was given the architect, who followed the suggestion.

The girl at the box office often hears the ticket purchaser say something of interest. In one case the price of the tickets were lowered when one of the girls reported that some of the purchasers were surprised the price was made so high. Box office reports also fell off and after a month or so the management thought to revert to the old price at which time, slowly but surely, the crowd returned. At another time a girl reported some saying: "My but this is a wonderful show for this price." This was said several times and the management, although receiving crowds, was making no money. Consequently the manager, who appealed to a selected crowd thought he

How a Theatre Was Put on "The Beaten Track"

A Street Boom Made a Poor Location Good

By J. Roland Durvall

THIS is written in hope it will inspire to action those who bemoan the fact their theatre stands just off the beaten track.

The Palace Theatre, Indianapolis, is a splendid example. The theatre was built seven years ago on Pennsylvania Street, adjacent to a very busy and successful thoroughfare that was flanked by the city's biggest business institutions. But Pennsylvania had never inherited the commercial activity of its neighbor. All the booms that had ever been started for the street had sputtered for a time like so many fire crackers and died away.

Then the white stone structure to house the Palace Theatre got under way. This created an atmosphere of expectancy. A 3,000-seat theatre would bring crowds; business along the street would profit.

The theatre had an auspicious opening. For three days the populace stormed its doors. Then business dwindled. When Herb Jennings took over the reins two years later, perhaps a hundred people constituted the average daily matinee. Merchants along Pennsylvania Street had long forgotten the early enthusiasm that hinged on the theatre's erection.

During those first two years in Indianapolis Mr. Jennings had checked all the successful business thoroughfares. Less than five per cent of the shopping crowds passed the Palace doors. But the hard thing was to find definite and well-grounded reasons why.

Jennings spent several weeks among Pennsylvania Street merchants talking over their past failures in booming the street. All admitted small sales were due to the lack of "shoppers." They admitted defeat by calling attention to darkened show windows at night. Why pay expensive window trimmers and light bills when so few pass by to look? To all he put the direct question: "What is the matter with Pennsylvania Street?" Nearly everyone answered, "Lack of interest."

Feeling he had now reached rock bottom, he arranged a well-defined program, and went from door to door explaining his idea that showmanship and salesmanship were identical. He met much opposition from deep-seated pessimism, padlocked pocketbooks which had suffered much in past booms, and a chorus of, "It can't be done."

But it was done. And here is how.

After the merchants had been given sales and pep talks individually, Mr. Jennings rallied about himself three merchants who had "seen the vision" of a Pennsylvania Street Merchant's Association and were themselves enthusiastic. For a week, impromptu meetings were held in his office daily.

He built interest among the "doubting Thomases" by giving them action. He sent daily telegrams to heads of the sixty-six different business firms established in the two blocks neighboring his theatre, urging their attendance at a mass meeting. To all appearances these telegrams were legitimate.. In reality the service was donated by the telegraph company, which was glad to use this means to advertise its service.

Then as a master stroke of advance preparation, Jennings sent out the three Enthusiasts which he had allied to his cause. They carried on a two-day telephone, letter and personal visit campaign, penciling in names of prospective members.

A mass meeting was called. Temporary officers were elected, a campaign of constructive publicity decided upon and a working fund of $1,350 created by assessing each firm $25. And so the Pennsylvania Business Association came into being.

Dark Pennsylvania Street, shunned at night by window shoppers because it had nothing to offer, suddenly blazed with lights. By mutual agreement every store window remained lighted till 9:30 at night. Electrical display signs that had long hung useless were located anew. One of the other business establishments caught the spirit and by the end of the year twenty-nine electrical displays blazed forth on a street where formerly only two theatre signs had burned against a murky sky.

However, there were seven empty storerooms within the two blocks whose unlighted windows now stood out like great sores. Three stores and two-thirds of a building had been vacant for nearly a year. The Association asked permission of the owners to use the windows for merchandise displays, the Palace Theatre using one to advertise its shows. The local light company was asked to furnish free lighting service for the windows. They assisted, anxious to aid in renting the stores so that they might derive revenue therefrom.

The city was sold on an idea for new street lights, Pennsylvania Street profiting by changing their single standard 6,000 lumens lights for double standard 15,000 lumens, making the street bright as day.

While this was going on, the Association was busy interesting the merchants in painting or otherwise brightening up.

Don't think all these signs of life did not attract attention. So many advertising solicitors, novelty salesmen, stunt men and the like made themselves known during the first month that a committee on "Advertising" was created to pass judgment on all propositions offered.

At Mr. Jennings suggestion, every merchant advertising through the press devoted two square inches of space—usually at the bottom of his ad—to the Association's slogan and seal, "Shop on Pennsylvania Street."

IN the first article of this series information will be given concerning the various types of incandescent lamps available for theatre lighting service. These lamps are the sources of light—they are the raw materials which go to make the finished product, illumination. In other words, the light from these lamps must be so controlled or so modified as to give the effect desired from the lighting. But what is, in general, expected from a lighting installation?

The two prime essentials of any lighting installation are quantity and quality of resulting illumination. There is a great difference between thes two factors; each must be dealt with sparately and both are equally important. The quantity element, of course, indicates that first of all there must be a sufficient amount of light in any interior to produce the desired result, and the quality element that this amount of light which is made available must be redirected, diffused, and possibly toned as the occasion demands to produce the particular effect desired.

In order to control the light in such a way as to obtain the proper quantity and quality, accessory equipment must be used. Reflectors or glassware should be provided in order to accomplish a number of purposes which must be accomplished if the lighting is to be satisfactory.

Reflectors Used in Light Control

By A. B. ODAY
Engineering Dept. Edison Lamp Works of General Electric Co.

SOME of the most important functions of lighting equipment may be briefly enumerated and analyzed as follows:

1. Reflection—In order that light may be placed in the positions where it will produce the most effective result, it is necessary that the lighting equipment reflect or redirect the light.

2. Diffusion—By breaking up or scattering the rays of light the apparent brightness of the light source may be reduced, thereby making the light softer and easier on the eye, and also by employing the properties of diffusion, shadows may be eliminated or softened as the occasion demands. This purpose is accomplished through the lighting equipment.

3. Appearance—The ordinary incandescent lamp is not a thing of beauty, and therefore, unless it is accompanied by some decorative accessory, it may not fit into the particular artistic scheme of the interior. Although the inside frosted lamp is attractive in appearance, the chances are that it would harmonize better with its surroundings if equipped with accessories of appropriate design. This function of the lighting equipment—that of improving the appearance of the light—is very important in theatre lighting; and most impressive and beautiful effects can be secured through the judicious choice of lighting fixtures.

4. Protection—In some installations, more particularly those of industrial plants, one function of the lighting accessories is to protect the glass bulb of the lamp. This function, however, is of minor importance and does not apply to a large percentage of lighting installations.

5. Shading—It is a well-known fact that the filament of an incandescent lamp is of a rather high brilliancy and therefore cannot be viewed directly without discomfort to the eye. Proper lighting equipment serves as a shield betwen the eye and the light source, thereby making the lighting installation much more useful and comfortable.

Briefly, reflectors may be divided into two general classes, namely, metal and glass. In the first mentioned type, that is metal, there are three general classifications:

1. Polished metal, of which aluminum and silver are two typical examples. With polished metal reflectors, it is possible to control accurately the resulting distribution of light. It is for this reason that this material is used for headlights, spotlights, projection devices, etc., where the control of light into definite beams is important.

2. Painted metal reflectors, of which aluminum paint or ordinary white paint are typical examples. In general such types of reflectors are relatively inexpensive. The [illegible] is such that it will deteriorate with age or when cleaned, and consequently it is useful for a shorter period than some of the other types.

3. Enamel steel metal reflectors. In this type of reflector a coating of porcelain enamel is applied to a steel form or blank and in most of the commercial types of such equipment an efficient and durable reflecting surface results. Such a reflecting surface does not deteriorate rapidly through the collection of dirt and dust. Neither does it deteriorate due to cleaning.

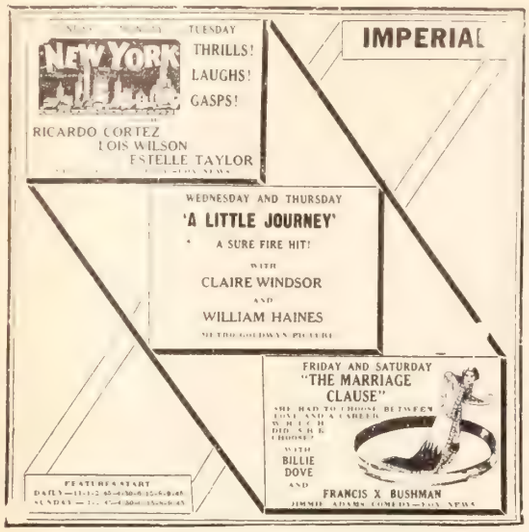
The second big classification, that of glass reflectors, might be divided into three classes as follows:

1. What are commonly known as opalescent glass reflectors. These are either glass having an infinite number of small white particles which give the glass a milky appearance, or what is known as case glass, which consists of one or more layers of clear glass and white opalescent glass. This type of glass is used generally where diffusion or softening of the light is desired.

2. Mirrored glass reflectors, which consist of a clear glass blank on which a silvered reflecting surface is placed. Types of mirrored reflectors are also available made of silver deposit on copper, the illumination from which is quite comparable to that obtained by mirrored glass. This type of reflector is quite efficient and can be so designed as to control fairly accurately the resultant light distribution. These reflectors are used largely in totally indirect lighting equipment, cove lighting, theatre foot lighting, window lighting, etc.

3. Prismatic glass reflectors, in which the control of light is obtained by the principle of refraction through prisms molded into the glass. Such reflectors are efficient and may be so designed as to provide a fairly accurate control of the light distribution within certain limits.

Another type of reflection, or kind of reflector, which is sometimes employed is that utilizing the composition reflecting surface such as plaster paris. This type, however, is not in general use and there are few commercial types available.



Before passing judgment upon any particular type of reflector of lighting equipment, it is quite desirable that a light distribution curve be studied. These curves show in what direction the light rays are distributed.

The various types of reflectors that are at present on the market and in general use for commercial and industrial interiors may be classified as to their use or class of

Things to Remember When You Build Type Advertisements

By Charles Winchell

St. Paul Advertising Department, Finkelstein & Ruben

TYPE and its uses is a subject that should be uppermost in the mind of every modern showman.

The showman today cannot put a one-sheet in front of his theatre and wait for the crowds to stream in—there are too many competing attractions being sold on a more aggressive and efficient basis for that. He must enter the race and sell his product to the public, and in so doing newspaper ads offer one of the most reliable mediums.

To capture reader interest sufficiently to let the sales message get across, the ad must, first of all, be attractive. And to be attractive it must be neat. To achieve neatness, a study of type is required.

In the St. Paul Finkelstein & Ruben advertising department we carry on a continued course of study in type and its various uses. The foremen on the ad alleys of our papers are our friends. Once each week they drop into our offices and talk type with us.

Naturally we gain many useful ideas from these men, which, coupled with our own result in type ads that have caused comment by advertising men, particularly, of course, men in the theatre advertising field.

A glance at the reproductions printed on this page will show you that the F. & R. advertising department combines type with art work rather effectively.

It will be noted that the majority of the ads contain press book mats or cuts, the results being almost equal to hand-drawn ads. This method, when practical, has as its main virtue the saving of artist's time and the cost of engraving.

There are a few simple rules—which perhaps because of their very simplicity are often overlooked—the observance of which goes a long way toward making for the success of type ads.

First among these is the rule to draw your layout the way you expect to see it in the paper. That is, instead of drawing up a three-column ten-inch ad and ordering the printer to reduce it to a two-column five, draw the original in a two-column five-inch space.

This way will give you a better conception of how your ad is going to look in the paper, and it will be much easier for the printer to follow instructions. The printer, if so instructed, will follow your copy as nearly as possible, using type about the same size as your lettering.

Your layout, or the copy from which the printer works, is the foundation of a type ad. This must be neat and clean and lettered as clearly as possible.

Do not attempt to use fancy types such as Old English. You are endeavoring to make the public read your ads and the plainer the type, the easier it is to read.

The type matter within the ad, whether the main body is hand-drawn or type, is very important. Too much type will kill the best of hand-drawn ads.

Leave plenty of white space in the ad. Set your type light and above all, do not use several lines of caps close together. Your catch or selling line of the copy should be in caps bold. The descriptive matter under it should be set in caps and lower case.

It pays to indent a border. The white space thus left around an ad tends to lift it out of the page to meet the eye.

Boxes inside the ad, or breaking through the border are very effective for selling added attractions, when they are properly used. In most instances a light box is the most appealing to the eye. Heavy boxes tend to detract from the eye-catching qualities of the ad.

You will note in the single column groups that the borders and box shapes on all of the ads are the same. That is what attracts the eye. The very sameness of each box is the factor responsible for giving the group "flash."

Which leads to this point. Don't overdo your type work or borders. Simplicity is what makes the type ad stand out. And don't forget the white space.

Illustrated is a large group ad. Note that the entire background is composed of ad alley borders. The same is true of the other one-column ads shown. These formed striking layouts in the paper.

In the small groups of this nature we find that it pays to use a very light background composed of hairline rules. In the larger groups the backgrounds must be slightly heavier in order to bear up under the bigger ads.

groups, illustrating value of uniformity in use of rules for separate boxes. Above, an ad. for play effects gained by indenting the border. Right, a large group, the background is formed of ad. alley borders.

C-H Simplicity Lighting Dimmers

C-H "Simplicity" Dimmers are used in Finkelstein and Ruben's Capitol Theater of St. Paul, Minn.

"Stars" can't substitute for lights~

"NAMES" alone won't crowd your theater—consistently. Competing houses have the same choice of films as you. The crowds go where good films are presented better and C-H "Simplicity" Dimmers can help make that theater yours.

C-H Simplicity Dimmers provide what movie goers desire—lighting effects which produce that restful, care-erasing atmosphere which no film alone can give.

Exclusive, superior features of C-H "Simplicity" Dimmers guarantee flickerless fading and crescendo of lights. Every desired color blend is easily produced. Technical perfection assures convenient operation and instant responsiveness. Durable, too. C-H Dimmer installations have given over 20 years of continuous and expenseless service.

Consult your architect and electrical engineer or write us for complete information.

Superior features of C-H Simplicity Dimmers

There is no overlapping of contacts—110 steps providing velvet-smooth fading from full brilliancy to black out. Low ratio rack and pinion drive further guarantees smooth operation by eliminating back lash.

C-H Dimmers won't burn out or overheat on continuous service. Soapstone bases have high heat absorption and insulating qualities. Cophite self-lubricating, long-life contact brushes are used.

Universally adaptable to all theaters regardless of size or scheme of interior decoration.

Write for the booklet "Illumination Control for the Modern Theater". It explains how C-H Simplicity Dimmers will boost your box-office receipts—lists by names and addresses over 800 theaters using C-H Dimmers, including most of the largest, newest and best in the country.

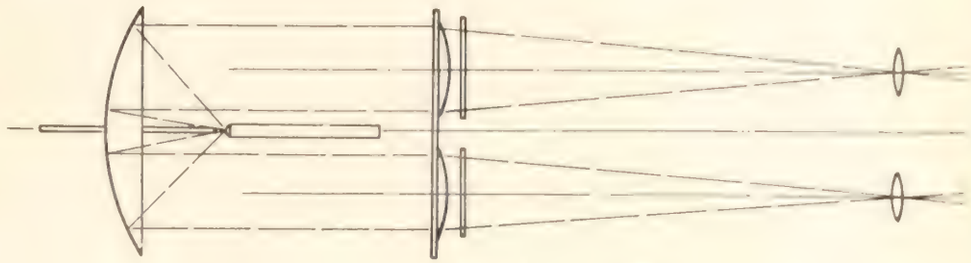
Perfect Illumination Control for the Modern Theater

New And Improved Equipment

A Review of the Latest Developments in Theatre Engineering



THE successful application of the reflector arc principle to motion picture projection has naturally acted as a powerful incentive for manufacturers to extend the same optic system, modified to suit the conditions, to other types of projection apparatus.

Reports have been current for some time concerning the imminent availability of a mirror arc dissolving stereopticon lantern by means of which the double optic system required for such work would be supplied with light from a single 25 or 30 ampere arc operating in conjunction with a concave mirror in a manner similar to those now employed in stereopticon attachments on existing reflector arc equipments for motion picture projection.

It was generally known that a number of equipment manufacturers, notably those producing reflector arc units, were busily engaged in experimenting with such a stereopticon device, but it was only recently that a lantern of this type was made available for general theatre use.

The equipment as it now stands is really an extension of the single stereopticon attachment ordinarily provided as a part of the mirror arc unit used for projecting moving pictures, in that two condenser lenses and slide carriers, placed side by side, and two projection lenses are used instead of the customary single lenses (condenser and projection).

A diagrammatic representation of this unit is shown in Fig. 1, where it will be seen that a departure from the ordinary method of mounting the two systems, one above the other, is used and the two systems are placed side by side.

Converting to the Light Ray

A parabolic reflector is used for the primary interception of light from the low amperage arc and this light is then transferred horizontally to suitable long focal length single condenser lenses placed on opposite sides of the horizontal carbons.

While passing through, and illuminating the slide, the light striking each condenser lens is then converged to a focus inside of the respective projection lenses which are attached to a supporting rod mounted on the left side of the motion picture projection head—on which the device is used.

In effect, the entire system represents an extension, in modified form, of the reflector arc principally used for "movie" projection wherein a parabolic reflector provides an approximately parallel beam of light to a long focal length condenser which, in turn, focuses the beam in the form of a small "spot" of a size sufficient to cover the aperture of the picture projector.

By dividing the light so intercepted by the 8 in. dia. single condenser among two smaller 5 in. dia. condensers of the same type, two separate light beams are made available for the independent projection of lantern slides.

There seems to be some question of the convenience in operation resulting from mounting the two optic systems in a horizontal manner rather than the commonly used vertical mounting as it is necessary to reach across one system when loading the slide carrier farthest from the projectionist.

In view of the newness of the device, however, operating details such as that pointed out will undoubtedly be smoothed out later after the equipment has been applied to practical service.

The optical and physical aspects of the high intensity arc now seem to be passing through the same transformation stages that occurred in the case of the ordinary arc lamp before the reflector arc system was applied to the last named source.

Higher Currents Used

In an effort to obtain still higher intensities of screen illumination, theatres are resorting to still higher currents and correspondingly larger sizes of positive electrodes for pressing the high intensity lamp to the limit.

When originally applied to motion picture projection, the high intensity arc was available in three distinct sizes, or capacities, as follows: a 50 ampere lamp for relatively small theatres; a 75 ampere lamp for houses of moderate size; and a 120 ampere lamp for the large, de luxe theatre, which requires, due to its long projection distance, a source capable of providing a suitable intensity of screen illumination.

For some time past, a 16 mm. positive electrode using 150 amperes, has been available for those houses which required still higher intensities, or where it was necessary to offset still greater projections and increased breadth of house.

In the reach for higher screen intensities, the larger sizes of high intensity lamps have been used to the practical exclusion of the smaller 50 and 75 ampere sizes, so that high currents, with their correspondingly heavier current carrying equipments are the rule.

Optic System Employed

The use of such high currents, naturally, is looked upon as an inconvenience which had to be accepted for want of a better substitute and the same considerations which prompted the successful efforts to apply the high efficient reflector arc principle to the ordinary arc in order to bring the current value down to a convenient value are now acting to spur equipment manufacturers to apply the same optic system to the high intensity source.

A virtual substitution of one source for another in this type of lamp, however, is [illegible] theatres have proved, so that major changes in mechanical design are considered necessary in order to effect a proper solution to the problem.

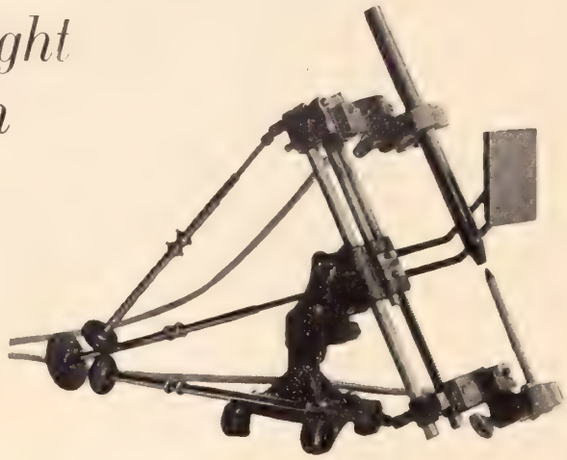
The horizontal set of carbons, so favorable to the mirror arc system, is retained in this new lamp as produced and demonstrated in theatres by one manufacturer.

Rotation of the positive electrode, which is necessary in the present lamp due to the unsymmetrical crater burning as a result of placing the carbons at a sharp angle with each other, is not considered necessary when the electrodes are mounted in accurate horizontal fashion since there is then no pronounced tendency for the crater to burn in any other than a circular form.

A troublesome point, however, has been the extreme "penciling," or spindling of the positive member when efforts are made to eliminate the sliding shoe contact used in the old lamp for leading current into the positive electrode at a point just behind the crater for the purpose of avoiding the "penciling" above referred to. Such a sliding shoe contact, used in reflector arc lamps, would result in shading the light projected from the mirror surface to the aperture and would result in a greater "ghost" than obtained in present forms of reflector arcs using the low intensity carbons.

Elimination of "Ghost"

Successful efforts to evolve a thoroughly satisfactory high intensity reflector arc lamp will result in lowering the currents now used with lamps employing these carbons to a value variously estimated to lie between 40 and 60 amperes, the screen results being comparable to those now obtained with the old lamps operating at 150 amperes.



Theoretically, it should be possible, with such an outfit, to triple the total light output now obtained from the reflector arc using old style carbons at 25 amperes, since the ratio of brightness of the two sources is of the order of 3 to 1.

There may be practical considerations which will lower this 3 to 1 ratio of screen illumination with the two sources.

Another item, which, in the perplexity of the manufacturers to evolve a satisfactory lamp, has received but little serious consideration, is the effect on the film should the reflector arc high intensity lamp materially increase the screen illumination above what is now obtained from the old lamp using the same carbons.

No Question About it!

The efficiency of any spot light depends largely on the design and construction of the arc burner . . . .

That is why the arc burner used in the BRENKERT C-14 Spot-Flood Lamp was expressly designed for spotlighting service. Many special processes are employed in its manufacture to insure absolute accuracy. The unequalled results which have distinguished this lamp are convincing evidence of the value of Brenkert specialization.

Precision work assures precise results. With this burner no further attention need be given the carbons after the initial trim. The special rack and pinion insure smooth, easy and precise feeding. The crater burns steady and true, thus maintaining a perfect, clear cut, sharply defined spot for the entire length of the carbon trim.

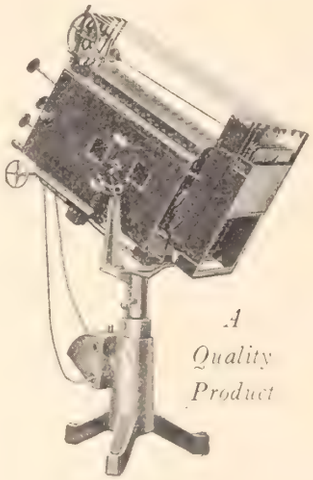
Perfect Control of Light Source

Control on lower jaw especially fitted to give full side swing of lower carbon for controlling side position of crater.

Triple bearing control on upper jaw to give ample back and forth adjustment of top carbon to permit obtaining true circular spot.

Extra heavy carbon jaws of special heat resisting metal, gripping carbons from side to avoid flame of arc.

Tolerance on sliding parts from five ten-thousandths to fifteen ten-thousandths of an inch.



5/8" round steel double bearing guide rods. (Top and bottom bearing especially machined for perfect alignment.)

Smooth Operation Assured

The counterbalanced arc lamp in the new Brenkert C-14 Spot-Flood Lamp remains at any location in the Lamp house without being fastened.

The arc lamp and counterbalance weight are completely equipped with ball bearings to insure their smooth and easy movement back and forth on the guide rods.

Such attention to details characterizes the construction throughout on this lamp and explains why its operation is INSTANTANEOUS.

It Pays To Look Ahead a Bit When Planning Booths

Harry Rubin Sets an Example for Others to Follow

NEARSIGHTEDNESS unquestionably is the arch enemy of designers of projection rooms in motion picture theatres. And some striking illustrations, which attest to the accuracy of that old gag, "The bigger they come, the harder they fall," are to be found on every hand. For example, one of the latest monstrosities in projection room design is to be seen in no less spectacular setting than that of one of the largest, newest and most expensive theatres in one of our metropolitan cities.

This illustrates that something besides a lavish expenditure of money is required to obtain excellent projection in a motion picture theatre. Indeed, many a theatre owner could save himself a tidy sum if only he would refrain from playing the cards so "close to his chest" and keep a weather eye open for the trend toward future practices. Projecting motion pictures has advanced somewhat beyond the stage where the sole pieces of apparatus in a projection room consist of two lone motion picture machines.

The custom in the so-called de luxe theatres, and in many which are by no means de luxe, is to devote about fifty per cent of the program to the showing of motion pictures and the remaining fifty per cent to prologues and acts.

Where formerly the entire show was given over to the presentation of motion pictures, this now forms only part of the program.

It is not to be doubted that an entirely new form of theatrical entertainment has been thus brought into existence.

It behooves the theatre owner, therefore, to keep his gaze directed to the future and to make proper allowances in the construction of his theatre so as to avail himself of improvements as they appear from time to time.

It is safe to say that the influences of newly appearing devices, affecting in a major way the character of the program, first make themselves felt in the projection room, since this space, with the equipment it houses, constitutes the heart of the entire theatre.

The most recent case in point is Vitaphone.

True enough, the installation of this equipment in theatres called for no extensive changes in the construction of the projection room, but this is more to be considered as good fortune, which may not find repetition in the case of future discoveries.

It may be argued that the particular case of Vitaphone was so abrupt as to application as to give the exhibitors at large but little warning of the impending change, but there has been going on now for the past four or five years a number of changes so gradual as to be imperceptible to all but the most alert.

Their presence seems to be felt only when the sharp knife of competition on the part of the alert ones starts cutting deeply into the box-office receipts.

The Paramount Astoria projection room. At the left of the long view window in the picture is an additional port with space for two extra machines

We have seen any number of such cases and the result is invariably the same—the owner of the house with the dwindling receipts starts scurrying around to pick up spotlamps, stereopticons and effect projectors in an effort to restore the normal state of his bankroll.

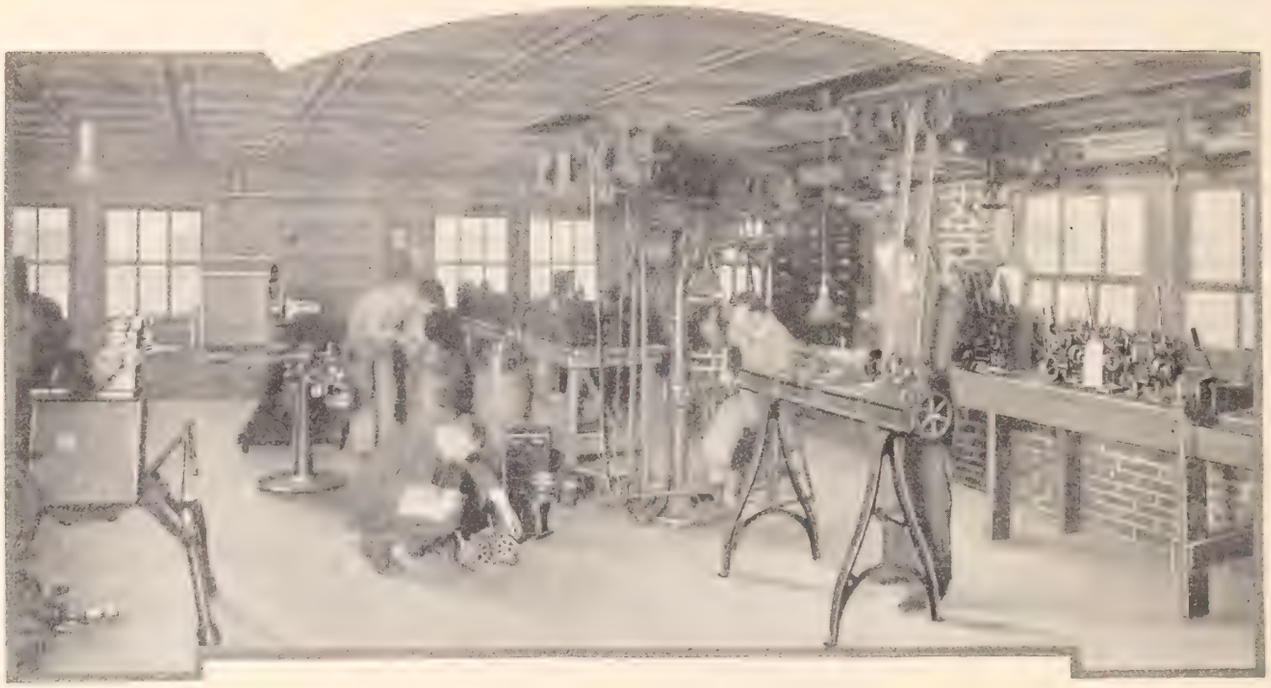
It is then that nearsightedness at the time of constructing the theatre gets in its work. The projection room is found to be too small—far too small to contain anything like the desired number of projectors.

And if, by some turn of good fortune, the room should be large enough, a number of other obstacles arise to worry the head of the exhibitor, whose head, by this time, is already one loud buzz.

Where the room is too small, the best and most drastic method is to start knocking down walls, as was done in a large combination vaudeville house in Newark, N.J., where space was found for an effect projector and two large spotlamps by the direct expedient of replacing the old booth with an entirely new projection room.

The sorry case of a projection room in a large Chicago theatre where ample floor space was available for additional equipment should point out to architects the utter futility of "dolling" up the back of the house at the expense of future extensions, since in this case a false wall with decorative archways was placed about five feet in front of the projection room wall proper. The projectors initially installed were placed to shoot their light beams through the regular port openings and then through the arched openings in the false wall, so that this arrangement resulted in grouping the projectors by pairs, one pair to an opening.

Plenty of floor space remained, but was wholly unavailable, since the addition of new projectors meant that a porthole would have to be cut in each of the two walls because the columns between arches naturally coincided with the blank portions of the main wall of the projection room.



Just why the false wall with arched openings should have been placed where it is, is one of the mysteries which only an architect can solve, as certainly few persons in that particular theatre would ever take the trouble to search out the projection room.

In this matter of providing for future extensions to the projection room, the most sensible thing to do is to follow the practice of Harry Rubin, who was responsible for the design of the Paramount Theatre projection room.

Rubin's foresightedness made certain that he would be in a position, at an instant's notice, to demonstrate new devices in the Paramount and at the same time provide reserve space for new permanent equipment.

The thing he did was simply this: at one end of the projection room ample space was left and a generous port opening provided to accommodate two large projection units should the occasion ever arise.

Organ Showmanship on the Jesse Crawford Plan

such as classical, though also benefiting from such treatment, apparently years well throughout the ages.

Now a steady diet of classical music will not do for the average picture theatre audience. It must necessarily be a mixed fare with a goodly proportion of popular numbers. Again, do not forget that they must also be kept away from the point of monotony.

That is the reason, if you can gain admittance to the Paramount some night after the last patron has filed out, you will find him sitting at the console trying this and that combination of effect and color; find him there usually until the hours of two or three o'clock in the morning working out some new and novel twist to a melody his audience knows. And again let us remind you that with all this new arrangement, the original swing of the tune must be kept intact.

From our own deductions resulting from a conversation with Mr. Crawford, we are led to believe that there are several requisites necessary toward the achievement of an organ number.

First: The organist must throw to the winds strict musical definitions.

Second: The organ is by far the most mechanical instrument made. Therefore, a player must possess the ability to overcome the mechanical side.

Third: The organist must have a wealth of past experience to draw upon.

Fourth: He must be able to sell his product to his audience. This means a thorough knowledge of showmanship.

Fifth: His instrument must be a good one. This is important.

To sum it all up in a few words, and you've probably already guessed it, our feature organist must be in a class by himself.

An interesting phase of Crawford's work is his recording for the Victor Talking Machine Company. This he has been doing for the past three years.

In this, as in no other instance, is the value of originality brought out. When one buys a Victrola record it is bought with the idea of playing it over and over, time after time. Here again, the monotony of a popular melody played along its simple lines of composition would prove fatal from a sales point of view.

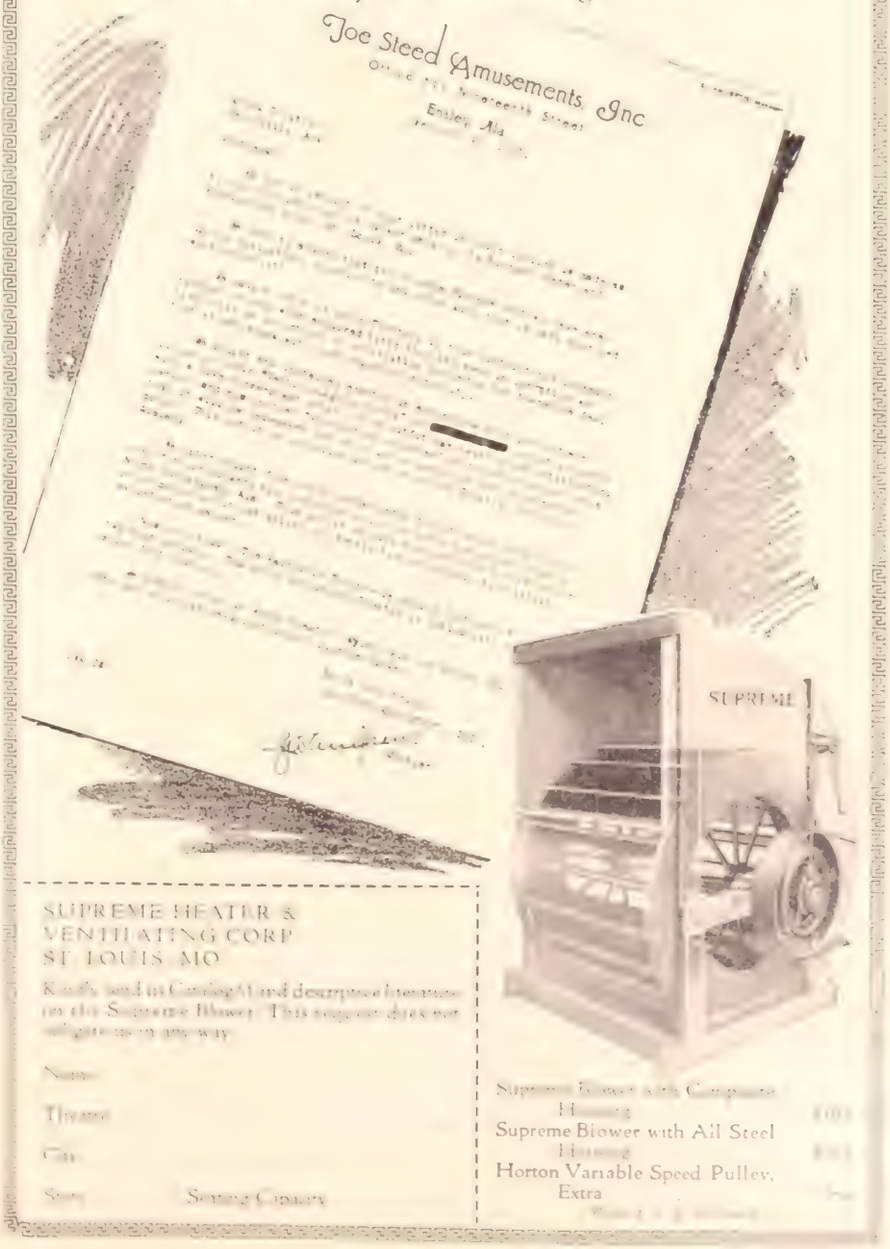
Another departure from the accepted method of putting over an organ number has been inaugurated at the Paramount. In the past, organists have resorted to the "community singing" idea in order to get their act over and to sell themselves to the audience. This method will not be encouraged at the Paramount. Thus, it will be seen that the responsibility for the success of the number falls directly on the shoulders of the organist and depends entirely on his ability as an artist.

Since Paramount started in to stress the organ feature investigation has proven that the public is slowly but surely responding to this type of music. That is, they are in a manner drifting away from the out and out popular music and are being educated to like and appreciate these so-called arrangements. This does not mean that popular songs are being left out. On the contrary, a generous helping is served. But it is significent, nevertheless, that their taste is changing.

Another recent Publix policy resulting from Paramount's organ feature is that Nathaniel Finston, general musical director, has sent letters to the managers of every theatre under Publix control, requesting that they instruct their organists to listen in on the Victor records made by Jesse Crawford in order to gain some knowledge of his style. Certainly, this illustrates the degree of importance Paramount places upon the organ part of the program.

An organist's school will also get under way within a short time, with Mr. Crawford in charge. This, as we understand it, will be a sort of post graduate affair and pupils who show promise of measuring up to a certain standard will be further [illegible]

[illegible] stressed in every act and placed at [illegible] Publix theatres. Accordingly it is an effort to [illegible] standardize a method that has [illegible] "sought out."



We've told you a [illegible] time ago that there may be in say a few years another member of the Crawford family. Miss Jesse Crawford, who is at the present time [illegible] in the exhibition of a "double [illegible]." Mrs. Crawford's background to a considerable extent resembles that of her husband's. She, too, has a good deal of valuable past experience in the entertainment field and their number now playing at the Paramount has a pleasing and novel twist. Mrs. Crawford, at the console, plays in a syncopated way the chosen melody, while Mr. Crawford renders his part in the original. It is good stuff and goes over well.

Institutional Copy Featured in New Press Book Ads

First National Offering Prepared Material That Localizes Pictures and Sells Pictures

THE increasing use of institutional copy in theatre newspaper displays has created a new situation in the field of prepared advertising issued by distributors in connection with their film productions, with the result that the First National advertising department has introduced a new form of press book ad which in effect "localizes" the appeal of copy featuring their attractions.

This new form of ad, which the company's executives report has elicited the praise of many exhibitors, ties-up the selling features of the theatre and the picture. The form of the copy allows for a local interest which many theatres have failed to incorporate in their ads adapted from the usual form of press book material. The new First National ads overcome this difficulty for the exhibitor by introductory copy featuring some element of the theatre itself and leading from that into selling lines about the picture itself. For example, one of the ads for "The Tender Hour," a recent First National offering, features a cartoon of the theatre manager with copy reading "Let our Specialist do your Movie Shopping! He knows the kind of entertainment you like—and stops at nothing to get it for you. That's why the Bijou always shows the greatest stars in their biggest hits. This week he recommends 'The Tender Hour.'"

First National engaged a well-known artist to prepare a series of attractive cartoons—of usher, doorman, manager, cashier, orchestra leader, etc.—to be run at the head of each institutional ad. The copy plays up a feature of the theatre's service. and

The first of these new institutional ads are furnished in this press book for "The Tender Hour." The series prepared for this picture include one two-column and three one-column ads, all devoting prominent display to the institutional angles. They cover the manager, as illustrated in the quotation above, the service—the copy and cartoon here being devoted to the courteous and efficient ushers—and the policy of the theatre, regarding the rule to present "only the best in motion picture entertainment."

Featuring Local Angle

The "local angle" is being incorporated in other ads prepared for the company's pictures. A four-column display for "Broadway Nights" illustrates how this appeal will be included in the press book ads. The top line reads "This Week (name of theatre) Brings you 'Broadway Nights' and we'll show it in Big Broadway Style! We'll carry you to the heart of the Great White Way—show you the bright lights and broken hearts. Night clubs! Cabarets! Speak-easies! We'll take them all in and return to (name of city) on the beautiful strains of 'Home Sweet Home.'"

This new form of press book ad is based on the idea that nearly every theatre, whether the big first-run in the heart of the city, or the neighborhod house, has features which will please the public the more if it is told about them in the newspaper ads, and which will enable the theatre to develop a definite clientele through aggressive selling methods.

To express it in the form of a slogan, the new policy of the First National advertising department is: "sell your picture to the public first, but sell your theatre along with it."

One of the biggest results to be obtained by the exhibitor who advertises his theatre and his service, along with the featured picture, is a matter of certainty as to the weekly income from his theatre. By planting it firmly in the public consciousness that the Jupiter Theatre always has a good picture, playing only the best brands, and making its patrons comfortable, the public will say, "Let's go to the Jupiter Theatre tonight. We're sure of seeing a good show there," and not go shopping through the entire list of motion pictures advertised in the daily newspaper. When the public is trained to that extent, the exhibitor can count on a fixed income from the theatre every week. When exceptionally big and attractive films are shown the returns may double or treble, but the manager will know what the minimum will be. It takes much of the hazard out of being an exhibitor.

Wall Solves Acoustic Problem And Better Business Results

A COMPARATIVELY small and unnoticeable detail in connection with the building of the Main Street Theatre, of Kansas City, several years ago, has resulted in an expense of more than $25,000. The problem was that of acoustics. In the rear of the house, which seats 3,500 persons, there was a 15-foot opening, running the width of the house, between the top of a 5-foot railing and the ceiling.

For several years various managers of the theatre wondered what caused audiences to be so cold and indifferent towards various acts, which, beyond question, were of merit. The theatre presents first run pictures along with vaudeville. Finally it was discovered that a voice on the stage scarcely was audible in the rear of the house when people were entering and leaving the several doors which lead to the lobby. The voices from the stage simply floated right out into the lobby and into the street, so to speak. The slightest noise in the lobby caused a collision of sounds, coming from the stage and through the lobby doors, which resulted in a painful confusion. It was decided to build in the rear wall of the house, tile being used. The walling in of the rear, however, was only a small part of the expense involved. On the tile walling tapestry was used, while the old railing simply had been painted. The change necessitated an entire change in carpeting, the constructing of the wall costing $3,000 and the carpeting about $5,000, in order to obtain a proper blend in colors and make the wall and carpets harmonize.

But the alteration did not end there. New fixtures also were necessary to obtain the proper blending of colors. The candlelabra fixtures were replaced by crystal fixtures throughout the house. Next came a change in furniture. The fixtures amounted to more than $7,000, while the furniture and other smaller incidentals completed the total of about $25,000.

"To many persons it might look as though the replacing of the furniture and fixtures was necessary," said S. H. Hess, manager. "Yet those were technicalities which could not have been overlooked, not if the Mainstreet was to retain the same high standard of interior and exterior appearance it has enjoyed since its construction. To a critical eye a blending of colors is vitally necessary. There was nothing else to do.

"However, our acoustic problem has been solved at last. One can hear now in the rear of the house just as well as in the second or third row. The noise from the lobby no longer is disturbing and the entire atmosphere of the theatre has been greatly improved. It was a good investment, even though it was expensive."

Carrier Conditioned Theatres

Fulfill the Public's Demand for Comfort

PEOPLE have learned to feel for themselves and to recognize immediately the delightfully comfortable atmosphere in a Carrier Conditioned Theatre. Proper air conditioning in the theatre now rests on a par with the beauty of the theatre and the quality of the entertainment as an attraction to the public. This explains the remarkable rate at which the fine theatres of the country are adopting Carrier conditioning equipment. The Carrier system, designed especially for each theatre, is guaranteed to maintain uniform conditions of Temperature, Humidity and Air Purity every day in the year. It is the development of more than twenty years of specialized air conditioning experience. A recent development provides the same complete system for the fine, small theatres.

When Is A Theatre Ad Really Good?

By Vic Gauntlett

Advertising Manager
John Hamrick Theatres

IF in this article and the two preceding ones that have appeared in "The Showman," I have offended anyone, I am sorry. If anyone has enjoyed them, I am happy and if by any chance anyone has gotten food for thought from them, I am glad, for then my purpose in writing them will have been accomplished. I have not intended these articles for the purpose of instructing the exhibitors just what to do in regard to selling their attractions to the public. I figure that if they are still in the business, they will have brains enough to figure that out for themselves. I have merely tried in a simple manner to relate the good or bad—in exploitation, publicity and advertising—that has come under my observation in my ten-odd years of showmanship.

I am going to devote this entire article to theatre newspaper advertising. Here is a most vital necessity in the operation of theatres and at the same time one of the most wasteful—wasteful only when it is improperly handled and so vital that when properly handled it means the very existence of the theatre itself.

As one judges a person by his dress, so is the theatre and the attraction judged by the appearance of its advertising. Theatre advertising is what I choose to call "Confidence Advertising." By this I mean that unlike selling merchandise where a customer can try on, inspect and then if not satisfied with the goods leave the store without it costing him a cent; theatrical advertising has to so thoroughly sell him on the attraction in advance that he will lay down his money without seeing the offering and merely have taken the words of the advertising as to its merits.

It is up to the ad writer to instill the confidence of the readers of the newspapers in the promises that he makes to them. The public today are beyond the "bunking" stage. They are no dumbbells and know a great deal more about the show business than some managers that try to run it.

There is nothing in the world however, that will put over an attraction if the public are set against it. Large advertising, great exploitation and all the ballyhoo will not offset the mouth to mouth roasting that the first nighters will give the attraction. Advertising properly handled should guarantee the attraction good opening crowds, but then the rest to a great measure is up to the merits of the show itself. If the public is in favor of it then the mouth-to-mouth boosting plus snappy advertising copy and publicity will put it over as a winner.

An advance ad for "Don Juan" (Warner Bros.) of the type that sell the public better than teaser advertising

The careful analysis of the pulling features of an attraction plays a more important part in your advertising copy than in any other exploitation of the picture. Be careful on this for it is of vital importance. Another thing, don't get wild and spend money right and left in the newspapers. It doesn't take full page advertisements to sell an attraction to the public. The hardest ads to write are the small ones—but properly written with attractiveness in design they will get the desired results. In preparing your ads don't be afraid to spend a little money on cuts. If the mats from the exchange are not real good, don't use them. A poor ad is just throwing money away.

Individuality is the one big factor to strive for in the appearance of your newspaper advertising. Try and maintain a certain style border and always the same style signature cut. This eventually will become a trade mark for your theatre and will quickly catch the eye of the reader. Then after you have attracted his attention to your advertisement sell him quickly, fairly and convincingly with snappy, catchy phrases that tell him a little something of what he is going to see. Above all means sell the picture at all times. Let that be the big predominating thing and the added attractions will take care of themselves.

I firmly believe that in the majority of cases "teaser" advertising is now passe. It has been overdone. If you have something to tell the public start right in off the reel as far in advance as you care to go—but tell them. Don't give them a cross word puzzle to work out by trying to figure what's what. They won't take the time

"What Is Worth Doing At All..."

PAGE Organs have a reputation for remarkable performance. Especially built for theatre requirements by craftsmen who have devoted their lives to this work, their trueness of mechanical action has won unstinted praise from those who are in position to judge.

[illegible] that may be attached to [illegible] $2,000.

Over and over again Page Organs have been chosen purely on the basis of merit. Organists and public alike marvel at their clarion-like clearness and wide range of tone.

Page Organs are complete unit organs with full orchestral effects. If you want the best in theatre music, you cannot afford to overlook them.

PAGE Organ Players embody the same high qualities of action, tone, responsiveness and workmanship that distinguish Page Organs. From ordinary 88-note piano rolls, purchasable anywhere, they provide [illegible] orchestral effects—and anyone can operate them.

An exclusive feature of Page Players is the [illegible] device, whereby the operator may select the solo or obligato at will, playing it without accompaniment, if desired. Two rolls are used. This permits instant change in the music to follow cues accurately.

The Page Organ Player can be installed anywhere. It can be attached to any modern unit organ. It can be had with or without manuals. Many theatres have installed a Page Player to relieve the regular organist or for use when the feature picture is not on the screen.

PAGE ORGANS

What One Organist Says About Page Organs:

"The tones are superb. . . . They are heard either instantaneously or sustained. There is no echo. . . . The Page Organ Player, which we also have, is a masterpiece of workmanship. We use it much more than the manually played console and its action is so wonderful our patrons say they cannot tell whether the music is played on the roll console or the hand console."

How a Theatre Was Put on "The Beaten Track"

Only three car lines were routed over the Pennsylvania Street tracks. A "transportation" committee called upon the local car company. Now seven car lines are routed over these tracks. Shoppers, following the road of least resistance, get off at the merchants' doors to do their buying.

Two bus companies have recently included the street in their routes. Pedestrian and motor traffic has become so heavy in the last two years that a quintette of police officers are used to direct traffic at the evening rush hours.

All the above was accomplished without one cent having been spent from the treasury of the association.

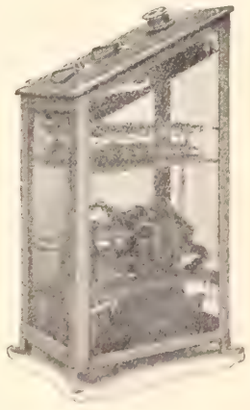
The theatre was beginning to profit by increased "drop-in" patronage. The merchants were satisfied that people could be brought to their stores. But Mr. Jennings wanted to so thoroughly sell the merchants on showmanship as a necessity to their advertising, so he suggested the advisability of conducting publicity campaigns to create newspaper copy and good-will. Indianapolis had lost several big industrial plants. He phoned the City Attorney and suggested a "Greater Indianapolis Week," sponsored by Pennsylvania Street. The City Attorney thought the idea a good one and in turn suggested it to the Mayor. Before the week had passed the Mayor had established a "Greater Indianapolis" headquarters next door to the Palace Theatre on Pennsylvania Street. With the Palace Theatre and the Merchants' Association fostering and aiding, plenty of newspaper mention rewarded them for their effort.

But the greatest showmanship was evidenced in the "Mardi Gras Night." Nine stories reached the papers a week in advance. And the Palace Theatre was mentioned as the center of all activities. When the grand night came, the police department cleared the street of all traffic. Then came the fire department to wash the pavements with hose lines in preparation for dancing. The light company festooned the street with colored lights. A great searchlight seared the heaven, a signal that festivities were in order. At the signal thousands of colored streamers and confetti showered from roof tops into the street. The fun was on.

Three band stands had been erected within the two squares. The Police and Firemen's bands furnished the music. These bands had previously been assisted in their organization by Mr. Jennings.

The Mayor of the city went from store to store. The Palace Theatre was perhaps the most popular spot on the street, inasmuch as advertising novelties, in the form of hats and noise makers, were thrown from the marquee. The newspapers estimated 10,000 people had been brought to the street.

In the spring the merchants co-operated with a "Spring Style Show," setting a given night to unmask their windows, which had been kept mysteriously darkened for several days. These windows were used for the parade of manikins. The theatre profited by drawing the crowd who came to shop, then sought amusement.



The facts herein written accomplished the thing Jennings set out to do, increase the daily attendance at his theatre by drawing a big part of his clientele from the street. A recent check disclosed twenty-three people were passing the doors of his theatre where one passed two years ago. Eight restaurants are now flourishing and drawing people where but one restaurant struggled before. Two new drug stores have located there, bringing the total to five. There is not one empty store room on the street.

A 25 Per Cent Saving For You

In these days of mounting overhead and operating expense every theatre owner or prospect is seeking ways and means to reduce costs.

Hence the growing interest in the Syncrovertor which is daily demonstrating its ability to save fully 25% in costs of converting A. C. to D. C. for picture projection work over other types of installation. Famous Players and Fox Film have no less than 21 Syncrovertors in use with their road shows "Beau Geste" and "What Price Glory".

The Syncrovertor is constant in speed and produces an absolutely steady non-flickering light on the screen.

Being a multiple type machine, the Syncrovertor automatically supplies the extra current required when the second arc is struck and the first arc is in no way affected, thus giving a perfect changeover.

Made in four types, complete with ballasts, controls, meters, etc. Write for complete specifications and prices.

The Crawford Plan of Showmanship

Last of all, let us tell you something about the instrument that these two Crawfords manipulate so handily. It is a Wurlitzer and, according to Mr. Crawford's statement, is probably the most complete organ ever manufactured. It is also, in his estimation, the finest he has ever played.

One thing stands out above all.

Here is a marvelous piece of mechanism; from the electric motor-operated blowers to the control room, where uncannily human little mechanical fingers reach out to touch this and that, and to the huge lofts on either side of the main auditorium where the 32-foot pipes and countless instruments are housed.

When is a Theatre Ad Really Good?

to do it. In this day and age they want the facts and briefly at that.

I would like to see some energetic film company get out a special layout of advertising matter for the small towns devoting the entire copy to art work. Not just a little here and there but surround their advertisements with catchy borders and leave very little for set up. This would be a great help to the small town exhibitors who have to contend with newspapers who neither have the type or proper skilled printers to set up their advertisements right. I am sure that it will be heartily welcomed by the small town exhibitor who is forced to write his own advertising copy and many times while pressed for time.

Every theatrical advertising writer has an individual style all of his own. There are none of them masters in the game—just students—who are always studying and trying to devise new ideas to attract the public's eye. However if when one in writing their advertising copy will bear in mind the main essentials to good copy, namely, simplicity, attractiveness, neatness and forcefulness in selling argument with a snappy catch line to attract the eye of the reader, then one will have an ad that should bring results.

Whatever you do don't be like a manager that I once knew who let his advertising be a plaything for every Tom, Dick or Sadie around the theatre. I had an occasion once to ask his advertising man, whose duty and profession was operating the motion picture machines, what space he was using a certain Sunday in the newspapers. He informed me that he never knew exactly until the bills came in as he just wrote the ad and left it up to the newspaper as to what space it would require. Of course the ads were never small ones—but believe me the business was and the said manager is now out of the show business. Theatre ad writing is a profession—not a plaything and next to the cost of the attraction is one of the biggest items of expense in the operation of the theatre. So consider it in the important place that it occupies in your operating overhead and handle it with the consideration and attention that is due it.

Things to Remember When Writing Ads

A teaser ad for "Memory Lane," is shown, and this illustrates the display values gained by indenting borders. The border is indented with the stars' names breaking through the outside rule. It is hard for a newspaper to bury this type of ad. This method furnishes an effective way of employing press book cuts in conjunction with type.

Thus, once more we are reminded, that the things to remember are: simplicity of design, white space, and neatness. These are the biggest factors to observe when laying out a type ad.

ARCHITECTS realize that expensive organs must be well taken care of else they depreciate very rapidly. Sudden weather changes and dampness make the organ deteriorate in a short while. That's why such architects as Walter Ahlschlager, Eberson & Eberson and Rapp & Rapp all endorse EVENHEETERS.

EVENHEETERS maintain an absolutely even temperature at all times, making the air warm and dry in the organ chamber and keeping this air circulating throughout the entire chamber, protecting every delicate mechanism against cold and dampness.

Organ life is increased and maintenance costs dwindle to practically nothing when the architect specifies EVENHEETERS, and every one, the theatre owner, the organ manufacturer and even the architect himself, are all pleased with the job.

The Use of Reflectors In The Control of Illumination

lighting under the three following headings:

Direct Lighting
Semi-indirect Lighting.
Totally Indirect Lighting

Briefly, these types of lighting systems may be described as follows:

Direct lighting is the type of lighting where the majority of the light is thrown directly downward from the light source and accessory, leaving none, or a lesser proportion, to escape upward.

Semi-indirect lighting employs a type of equipment where the greater portion of the light is thrown upward toward the ceiling, or secondary reflecting surface, from which it is re-distributed to the floor area of the room. In the semi-indirect a small percentage of the light is directed or diffused downward from a fixture.

Totally indirect lighting is a system in which all, or practically all, of the light is directed upward to the ceiling, from which it is re-directed downward.

Of these three methods of lighting, the direct is considered the highest in efficiency, inasmuch as the majority of the light is sent directly downward thus lessening the absorption of light by walls and ceiling. As the light from this type of system, however, is strongly directional in character, there are usually shadows present which in some cases would be most undesirable.

Semi-indirect lighting is somewhat less efficient than is direct lighting, but the resulting illumination is somewhat softer, there are fewer sharp shadows, and ordinarily there is less danger of excessive brightness in the lighting unit.

Totally indirect lighting is the least efficient method, but it provides illumination of the highest quality. There are few, if any, shadows and no bright light sources in the field of view. Totally indirect or semi-indirect lighting is most successful where the surroundings are light in color for then less light is absorbed and the efficiency is raised. Although the efficiency of any form of indirect lighting system is less than that of direct lighting, it can ordinarily be made more decorative in appearance and is usually to be preferred in cases where appearance and quality of light are more important than actual efficiency.

All of the above mentioned systems of illumination, however, find application in the design of lighting installations. The particular one to be selected must, of course, depend largely on the character of the interior and the desired results. It should always, however, be borne in mind that the lighting equipment, namely lamps and accessories, are of prime importance in any building and their selection, installation, and maintenance must be given very careful consideration if satisfactory artificial illumination is to be obtained.

"Listening In" on Patron Remarks

them are prejudiced to or against the fea- would raise the rate but ten cents. This was done and no objection was heard by the ticket seller or others and no falling down was recorded in the number who entered.

Among the reports praising the objecting to pictures were the following:

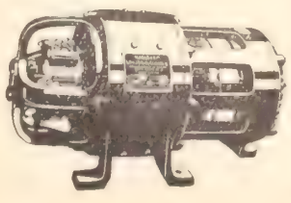
"Isn't it wonderful what presentation acts they have at the Granada? I come mostly for that reason although I like the pictures too." "Wonder why they don't show such good pictures at this theatre as they used to?" "Too much of that presentation act business is what makes this price so high." "This theatre, I think, which is the best in town, should have sweller uniforms for their ushers and usherettes." "My, aren't those new rugs beautiful?" "Say, don't the girls look cute in those dresses?" "Some day a house in our district will show this same picture, but I always like to see them first and besides it seems sweller here."

Other remarks are, of course, made by the patrons, in fact, everything one can think of is discussed and reported to the management on those report slips.

The "best idea" phase of the system is one which has proved highly valuable in the operation of the theatres, Mr. Baron says. In this way there are a surprising number of constructive ideas suggested to the management.

All of those which are voted "best ideas" by the executives are promptly paid for at the rate of a dollar per suggestion.

"At first, when we merely requested employes to submit ideas," Mr. Baron said, "there was so much duplication and repetition, that there were few suggestions of any value resulting. But the 'best idea,' with its reward of a dollar, stimulated greater effort and more thinking on the part of the ushers."



Among the suggestions recently to win a "best idea" reward, was one submitted by one of the telephone operators, and read:

"I don't think that piece should be played on the violin any more this week, for a few asked me on the phone if that 'dead piece' was to be played again the coming week."

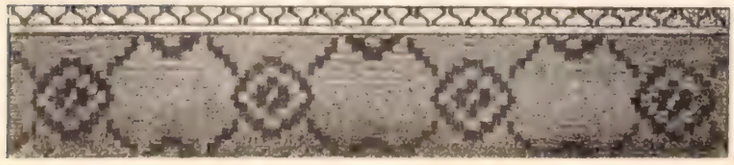
In the Multitudes of Patrons There Is Much Hard Usage

America, the land of the masses—masses that may not know art, but that certainly are keen to feel it—makes an awful wear and tear on the things it enjoys. In the modern motion picture theatre, fabrics combining color, texture and design and shown amid an endless play of lights and shadows, must not only give effects that reflect charm and good taste, but also be long on endurance.

The practical utility of Hexter fabrics for theatre use is shown in an amazing durability under years of the hardest kind of handling. The range of colors, weaves and designs is a genuine inspiration to the decorator and in perfect harmony with the spirit of modern theatre interiors.



Hexter fabrics include the famous imported "Sol" Fabrics, loomed and dyed by England's ablest weavers, in 40 guaranteed fast colors, with a lustrous sheen of marvelous beauty. Also a wide selection of

ARCTIC NU-AIR COMPLETELY CONTROLLED VENTILATION

U. S. Government Repeats!

Army Motion Picture Service Purchases Ten More

ARCTIC NU-AIR
VENTILATING COOLING SYSTEMS

NO more convincing evidence of Arctic Nu-Air supremacy in the field of theater cooling and ventilating can be submitted than its list of "circuit repeaters." Here is business that can only be transacted on a PAST PERFORMANCE basis.

The history of the U. S. Army Motion Picture Service purchases of Arctic Nu-Air Systems is typical of the repeat orders we are receiving from the biggest circuit owners of the country. The first War Department Theater was equipped last May. By September eleven more systems had been installed. Ten more have already been ordered this year.

There is more of this indisputable evidence that we will gladly submit if you will send the coupon.

Films Blanket Broadway; Grosses Up

Only One Legitimate Show on Street From 42nd to 53rd in N. Y.

STRIKING evidence of the part that pictures play in the amusement world today is contained in the fact that at the present moment on Broadway, in New York City, only one legitimate attraction is playing in any theatre from 42nd to 53rd street, the very heart of the world's greatest theatrical district.

With the opening of "The King of Kings" at the Gaiety and "Camille" at the Globe this week, 19 first runs were playing along Broadway, setting a new record.

Another startling development of the week has been the sharp upward trend of business at the picture houses, starting on Monday. On that one day the Broadway houses took in receipts totalling from 29 to 30 per cent. of their entire Holy Week grosses. The early part of Monday afternoon, Broadway was so crowded that traffic conditions, both for pedestrians and motorists, were almost impossible. The sidewalks were jammed with crowds, brought about by the fact that Easter Week this year coincided with a Jewish holiday.

In front of the Paramount, the Roxy, the Capitol, and such houses the congestion on the sidewalks made them almost impassable. This increased business was not confined to the picture theatres. Legitimate attractions which had been literally "dying on their feet' the past few weeks played to standing-room on Monday and Tuesday evenings.

Chicago May Have New Film Exchange Building

It is reported, on good authority, that the Lehman Estate is planning to erect a seventeen-story building, to be known as the Chicago Film Exchange Building, at the Northeast corner of Ninth and Wabash avenues. The building will extend from Ninth Street to the Y. M. C. A. Hotel and back to the alley, midway between Wabash and State Street, giving twelve thousand feet of floor space for each story. Several film exchange managers and executives of other business houses located along Film Row have been in communication with their home offices in reference to taking space in the proposed building and it is understood that some leases are on the point of being signed.

Bennethum, Pa. Exhibitor, Is Dead

NEWS has been received of the death of George W. Bennethum, part owner of one of the largest chains of motion picture and vaudeville theatres in Pennsylvania and adjoining states, which occurred in Hot Springs, Ark., on April 16. Mr. Bennethum, whose home was in Reading, Pa., where he began his career in the amusement business, was for twenty years active in the ownership and operation of theatres. At his death he was associated with John H. Snyder and Hen Johnston of Reading in the ownership of theatres.

Griffith's Return to United Artists Announced by Schenck

SPECULATION as to the future picture affiliation of D. W. Griffith was put at rest Thursday morning when Joseph M. Schenck, President of United Artists Corporation, in an interview with the press, announced that Mr. Griffith has returned to United Artists as director-general of the productions to be made by Arts Cinema Corporation, a subsidiary.

In addition to supervising Arts Cinema Corporation pictures, Mr. Griffith also will personally direct a super-special which is being planned for the immediate future. This super-special, which will not be ready for release before the first part of 1928, is to be followed by others, approximately one each year.

The return of Mr. Griffith to the United Artists fold as an active director and producer (he has never relinquished his corporation connection as one of the founders) will mean that he will remove to Los Angeles, probably with a certain number of his personal organization and will take with him certain players with whom he has personal contracts. Carol Dempster, starred in Griffith pictures for several years, however, will not be among the number, as she has accepted other contractual obligations which prohibit it. There will be no Griffith stock company.

In reply to questions Mr. Schenck discussed other phases of the United Artists plans. He expressed the opinion that "The Circus," Chaplin's unfinished production, will be completed soon and that it would be ready for release about November of this year.

The announced production of "The Darling of the Gods," which is to be made by Morris Gest, will also be made at the United Artists studio at Los Angeles, and Mr. Gest is now assembling an international cast of players. However, the leading people will be American stars and the only player definitely assigned to a role is George Arliss, who will play the part of the war minister.

Mr. Schenck stated that rumors of the amalgamation of United Artists and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer were without foundation and that such a business arrangement was impractical in the best interests of both concerns.

The 15 or 17 pictures that United Artists will make each year are to be sold as individual productions as in the past and this method of selling does not fit in with the plans of any company producing on a quantity basis, Mr. Schenck added.

Business Hurt by Floods

Rising Waters in Mississippi Basin Injure Theatre Trade in States Bordering on River's Banks

THE entire valley of the Mississippi is endangered through record high waters of the river during the past week. Washouts of roads throughout the South and continuing rains have considerably hurt theatre business. Ten per cent of the theatres in the affected area are estimated closed and the remaining ninety per cent are having trouble through late shipments.

In the St. Louis territory, 35 to 40 theatres are closed on account of floods. Towns affected are: Poplar Bluff, Chaffee, Sikeston, and New Madrid, Mo., Mounds, Mound City, Nebo, Alsey, Ill., and many others.

Six thousand persons, mostly women and children, have left the district and salesmen report they have been stranded in various towns and put to work to help prevent spread of the floods.

The express company, it is said, will accept film shipments only subject to delay. Conditions will continue to get worse for some time, say those in touch with the situation.

Certain parts of Texas have been visited by severe storms and rains, but with the exception of Rock Springs, which was demolished by a tornado, no theatres are reported closed.

In Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Tennessee, Texas and southern Illinois flood waters are receding but 2,500,000 acres of land were under water. The Mississippi's shattered levees made a large part of Arkansas a great lake and rendered thousands of families homeless.

In New Orleans a number of theatres were compelled to close on Friday and Saturday.

Warner Bros. Sole Vitaphone Owners; Installation by Western Electric

WESTERN ELECTRIC COMPANY and Warner Brothers have issued the following statement:

"The rapid development of the Vitaphone has made desirable the expansion of activities relating both to the production of pictures and the installation of equipment in theatres. With this in view a plan has been worked out whereby Warner Brothers acquire 100% ownership of the Vitaphone Corporation through the purchase of the interests of Mr. Walter J. Rich and will immediately increase their studio facilities for the production of films and records by the opening of a new studio in Hollywood completely equipped for Vitaphone productions.

"The Western Electric Company through its subsidiary, Electrical Research Products, Inc., will in future handle the supply, sale, installation and maintenance of equipments for theatres.

"Under this arrangement the Vitaphone Corporation will be free to devote its entire facilities to the production and distribution of Vitaphone numbers and musical accompaniments. The extensive manufacturing and service facilities of the Western Electric Company assure to theatre owners an adequate supply of equipments to meet the increasing demand for installations and the best possible technical assistance and service. Seventy-two theatres are now equipped and new installations are being made at the rate of six a week.

"The arrangements which have been made necessary by the rapid growth and increasing popularity of the Vitaphone have been worked out to the mutual advantage of both parties."
